Provided, That no provision in the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852," shall be so construed as to prevent the payment of salaries of the clerks in accordance with the estimate for said bureau of 5th October, 1850.

This change was made according to that estimate originally for the purpose of increasing the salaries in the office a little. A provision was introduced into the deficiency bill of this session which makes it doubtful whether they can receive them. This is merely to declare that it was not designed by that act not to give them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is in the following clause:

"For additional salaries of the treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia, of $1,000, and of the treasurer of the branch Mint at New Orleans, of $500, $1,500," —to insert after "for" the words:

The compensation of the treasurer of the branch Mint at San Francisco, California, $4,500, —and strike out "$1,500" and insert "6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is in the following clause:

"For salaries of ten additional clerks, authorized by the acts of August 6, 1846, and August 12, 1848, $9,600," —to strike out "$9,600" and add to the clause, the following:

And a clerk for the treasurer of the branch Mint at San Francisco, California, at a salary of $2,500, $12,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to insert the following in the bill:

For contingent expenses in California, under the act, for the safe-keeping, collecting, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue, of 6th August, 1846, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,000" in the following clause:

"For compensation to special agents to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand in the several depositories, under the act of August 6th, 1846, $5,000."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to add to the clause making an appropriation to continue the survey of the western coast of the United States, the following:

And the Superintendent of the Coast Survey is hereby authorized to extend the reconnaissance of the coast of California south to Cape St. Lucas, provided that no special appropriation will be required for such extension.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to insert the following in the bill:

For purchasing a site, and constructing a custom-house at Richmond, Virginia, $100,000: Provided, That the whole cost of the building and site shall not exceed $150,000.

That is in pursuance of an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury, who estimates that the building could be erected for $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to insert the following in the bill:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an addition to the custom-house at Baltimore, and to repair and alter the edifice, $100,000; said sum to cover all expenses of purchase, repair, and improvement.

That is in pursuance of estimate. An opportunity is afforded now to purchase a portion of the building adjoining the present custom-house which might not be offered again. The estimate is thought to be a reasonable one, and the Secretary recommends it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is in the clause "for outfit of ministers of the United States to Great Britain, Prussia, and Mexico, $27,000," to strike out "$27,000," and insert:

Chili, China, and Turkey, $90,000; it being provided that hereafter there shall be an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to conduct diplomatic relations with China and the Ottoman Porte, instead of the commissioners now authorized by law; and the said ministers to China and the Ottoman Porte shall be vested with all the judicial powers now legally exercised by the commissioner to China and the minister resident at the Ottoman Porte respectively, and for the performance of the duties resulting therefrom, shall receive no other compensation than their salaries as ministers plenipotentiary.

Mr. CLARKE. I had supposed that the question as to the appropriation for the mission at the Ottoman Porte, would have been brought up in the form in which it passed the House of Representatives. But the amendment introduces another provision. I have an objection to the provision that is now proposed to be made for a full mission to China.

It will be recollected by the Senate, that when the treaty was negotiated between this country and China, General Cushing went out as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to negotiate a treaty. It was then deemed sufficient to allow the Commissioner $6,000 a year, without any outfit, which was adjudged to be sufficient as a compensation. If my memory serves me right, the first commissioner was Mr. Alexander Everett, of Massachusetts; a man confessedly of a very high mind and character. After some considerable delay, he arrived at China, where he died soon after his arrival. Dr. Parker was appointed secretary to the commissioner, at a salary of $2,500 a year. Mr. Everett himself was wholly unacquainted with the Chinese language, and knew nothing of the customs and manners of the Chinese, and Dr. Parker, who had resided there for a number of years, I believe, first in the capacity of a missionary, and who obtained great celebrity, and made himself acquainted with the Chinese language, was appointed secretary, and the duties of the commission devolved upon him. I believe after the death of Mr. Everett, that an honorable gentleman from Indiana, Mr. John W. Davis, whom I do not know personally, but for whom I have a very high respect, was appointed commissioner, and he deemed it sufficient for him to go to China with the allowance of $6,000 a year. He went there, confessedly on his own part, unacquainted with the interests and relations between this country and China—unacquainted with the manners, language, and customs of the country; and not perfectly acquainted with the trade between the two countries. He remained there some time and returned. The duties of the commission to China have been performed by Dr. Parker, secretary to the commission, at a salary of $2,500 a year. Except the time that Mr. Davis was there, I believe he performed the duties of the whole commission.

It is proposed now to raise that commission to an equality with the highest minister from this country. The bill contains an appropriation of $5,000 a year for certain consuls at Kwang Cho, Amoy, Fucho, Ning-po, and Shang Hai, and an appropriation of $18,000 for the salary and outfit for the commissioner to China. It is well known that recently a commissioner to that country has been nominated by the President, and, as the newspapers inform me, confirmed by the Senate. I believe the Constitution of the United States, if I recollect it aright, prohibits the increasing of the salary and compensation of any officer who shall be appointed to office during the time of his election to the Congress which makes the increased compensation. The clause in the Constitution is as follows:

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

I speak from public report when I say that there has been recently a gentleman nominated to the commission for China who was elected to the present Congress of the United States, whose term of service would not, if he had not resigned, have expired until the 4th of March next. I speak from public report, when I say that that nomination has been confirmed by the Senate. I also speak from public report when I say that that individual has resigned his seat in the House of Representatives. An appropriation is now put into this bill for increasing the compensation of the office to which he has been appointed, from $6,000 a year to $9,000 a year, with an outfit of $9,000. I hold this increase of compensation to be totally, directly, and positively in violation of the provision of the Constitution which I have read. I have, therefore, an objection to this appropriation upon constitutional ground, and I have an objection to it upon the ground that the mission to China is rather, than otherwise, a nominal mission, and that there are no duties to perform.

I, therefore, am opposed to the provision, upon the ground that it is against the provision of the Constitution which I have read. In the second place, I am opposed to it, because the mission to China, although it may be considered a diplomatic mission, is not a mission which embraces any very great diplomatic intercourse with the Chinese Government. The principal function of the commission, if I understand it aright, is to exercise, in cases of emergencies, certain judicial powers, conferred upon it by treaty. These powers never have been exercised; there has never been any requirement for them; and those gentlemen who have been there heretofore, have been perfectly satisfied with the emolument prescribed by law, because the duties of the office have been so light. The intercourse between this country and China is different from that between this country and any other on the globe. The Chinese, we all know, are a people who keep themselves retired within what they consider to be their own special and Celestial jurisdiction. No foreign minister is any further recognized than is necessary, according to the existing treaties, to give him permission to remain there and exercise the duties of his commission, according to the treaties made with China. Never, before the execution of the treaty, had any officer resided there with any other power than that of a consul; and during the whole course of my own experience and knowledge of the Chinese trade, I believe there never has been, to this day, any difficulty experienced with the Chinese Empire in consequence of having no higher officer than a consul at Hong Kong. But there are consuls provided for in this bill for five places, which I have already named. An appropriation of $5,000 is made for them. The consuls are provided for, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and the commissioner is to reside, I suppose, in China. But the duties of the office are very light, indeed. There are no diplomatic relations, no intercourse whatever, except that of commerce, which is taken care of by the chargés in other countries, unless where very considerable and important diplomatic relations exist.

Upon the ground, therefore, that such a minister as is at the Court of St. James—such a minister as is at the Court of St. Cloud—such a minister as is at Brazil—such a minister as is in a full mission to any important Empire or Government with whom we have diplomatic relations, requires totally distinct talents from that of the minister to China—upon this ground, I say, and upon that of the unconstitutionality of the provision increasing the salary, I object to it.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not know that the office of commissioner to China was ever created by act of Congress. I think that in 1842, Congress voted the sum of $40,000, which was placed at the disposal of the President of the United States, to enable him to open diplomatic relations with China. Under the general authority thus given, the President sent out to that country, Mr. Cushing as Minister Plenipotentiary and Commissioner, whose salary was, by the terms of the law, not to exceed $9,000, besides outfit. Subsequently, by our appropriation acts, we appropriated $5,000 for the salary of a commissioner to China, and so far only can the office of commissioner to China be said to have been created by law.

The committee supposed that the provision of the House of Representatives in this bill, for an outfit of $9,000 for the commissioner to China, might conflict with the provision of the Constitution mentioned by the Senator from Rhode Island. That provision is, "that no Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time." And that, therefore, the gentleman nominated and confirmed as Commissioner to China, could not avail himself of the provision for an increase of salary and outfit, as it came from the House of Representatives. The committee were disposed to avoid this difficulty, if possible, and it was suggested that it could be done by authorizing the salary and outfit of a minister and plenipotentiary, because that office is not created by act of Congress. It exists under the law of nations, which defines its duties and privileges, our own statutes only fixing the salary attached to it. Congress does not create the office, but regulates the salaries and provides for the expenditure. It was supposed that this appropriation might be amended in the way the committee propose, and with that view there would be no constitutional difficulty in the way of the acceptance of the office by the gentleman nominated as commissioner, if the President would nominate him as minister plenipotentiary.

Some objection has been raised to this on the ground that China is not in the same situation as the nations of Christendom, among whom these ministers are so well known. The Emperor of China holds no direct intercourse, it is said, with foreign Courts, although we know that ambassadors from Christian countries have been received, as in the case of Lord McCartney, Ambassador from England, who had interviews with the Emperor, as well as Lord Amherst. I will add that President Tyler, in his message of January, 1845, stated that England had a plenipotentiary in China, and Mr. Cushing, in the treaty which he negotiated, described himself as minister plenipotentiary. Whether the minister we might send out would be received in that country with the honors customarily bestowed on such officers in a Christian country, I do not know. The functions he would have to perform would be, whether minister or commissioner, precisely the same. The only difference would be in an outfit and salary, and the ceremonial etiquette. I think that in this case the Constitution would not be violated by the appointment of the present commissioner. The President, in his message at the commencement of the present session, recommends an increased allowance for this functionary, and states that he had not been able to procure the service of a suitable person in this office, because of the inadequacy of the usual compensation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have but a word to say. I see my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] is anxious to proceed to the special order. I will not interpose, provided it is understood that I have the floor when this matter again comes up.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Kentucky give way for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will give way, if it is understood that I am entitled to the floor when this subject again comes up.

Mr. DAVIS. The hour of one o'clock has arrived, and I should like the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the special order. So far as I am concerned, the Senator from Kentucky shall have the floor when this subject again comes up. There is no doubt that it will be discussed, for I wish to offer an amendment to that portion of the bill—an amendment of some importance, as I regard it, not touching the question immediately under consideration, but touching other matters connected with that commission. I move now to postpone the further consideration of this subject till tomorrow, in order that we may proceed to the special order of the day.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for certain rivers and harbors, and its consideration was continued until past six o'clock, when the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The Senate then adjourned.

[For the full report of the proceedings on the bill, see Appendix.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 24, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

[The SPEAKER has appointed the following gentlemen to constitute the committee "to investigate all the facts touching the connection of Thomas Corwin, the present Secretary of the Treasury, with the Gardiner claim." Mr. JOHNSON of Tennessee, Mr. DUNCAN of Massachusetts, Mr. HOWARD of Texas, Mr. CHAPMAN of Connecticut, and Mr. PRESTON KING of New York.]

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the further consideration of Senate bill No. 223, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes." The pending amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN.]

Mr. SIBLEY here obtained the floor.

Mr. HART. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SIBLEY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a moment, as I want to ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and pass Senate bill No. 540, providing for the establishment of an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota. It is a bill of very great importance to that Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HART,] and one or two other members, insist upon the regular order of business.

Mr. BOWIE. Is it in order to move to suspend the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. It is not during the morning hour.

Mr. DUNCAN. I rise to a question of privilege. I find myself placed, by the Chair, upon the Special Committee, under the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] yesterday. I ask to be excused from serving upon that committee, as I am already a member of two other committees, whose labors will be very arduous during the remainder of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is, by the rules, excused from serving upon that committee, if he desires.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMERS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is called for, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The clause under consideration was as follows:

"Provided, however, That when the structure of such steamers is such, or the arrangement of the boilers or machinery is such, that the requirements aforesaid cannot, without serious inconvenience or sacrifice, be complied with, inspectors may vary therefrom, if, in their judgment, it can be done with safety."

The pending amendment, proposed by Mr. HENN, was to strike out the word "such," before the word "steamers," and to insert the word "any" in lieu thereof, and to insert after the word "steamers" the words "heretofore built."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I think that amendment is not pertinent, as I understand it, from the reading of the Clerk. I desire to have the Clerk read it again.

The amendment was again read.

The question being upon the adoption of the amendment—

Mr. HENN called for tellers; which were not ordered.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move a call of the House. There is evidently not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this time. The House is now acting under the operation of the previous question, and after the previous question has been ordered, a call of the House is not in order.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The third section of the bill was read.

The several amendments of the Committee on Commerce, striking out the parts in brackets and inserting the parts in italics, were agreed to:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every vessel so propelled by steam, and carrying passengers, shall have not less than three double acting forcing pumps, [of at least six-inch,] with chamber at least four inches in diameter, two to be worked by hand and one by steam, if steam can be employed, otherwise by hand; one whereof shall be placed near the stern, one near the stem, and one amidship; each having a suitable, well-fitted hose, of at least two thirds the length of the vessel, kept at all times in perfect order, and ready for immediate use; each of which pumps shall also be supplied with water by a pipe connected therewith, and passing through the side of the vessel, so low as to be at all times in the water when she is afloat, [and shall also have suitable provision for turning, at any time, a current of steam into the hold:] Provided, That [in steamers navigating rivers only, one of the pumps aforesaid may be dispensed with, if the other provisions for extinguishing fire are, in the opinion of the inspectors, sufficient to secure safety] in steamers not exceeding two hundred tons measurement, two of said pumps may be dispensed with, and in steamers of over two hundred tons, and not exceeding five hundred tons measurement, one of said pumps may be dispensed with."

The fourth section of the bill was read, as follows, viz:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every such vessel carrying passengers, shall have at least two boats supplied with oars, in good condition at all times for service, one of which boats shall be a [metallic] life-boat fire-proof, [of approved model, not less than twenty-five feet long, six feet six inches wide, and two feet deep,] and in all respects a good, substantial, safe sea-boat, capable of sustaining, inside and outside, fifty persons, with life-lines attached [to the gunwale] at suitable distances. [And every such vessel carrying more than fifty passengers shall also have a similar boat for every additional fifty passengers, or, instead thereof, for every such number a good, substantial, safe, wooden life-boat of suitable model, fitted with life-lines in manner aforesaid, and capable of sustaining, inside and outside, that number of persons:] Provided, however, That ferry and tow-boats shall be exempt from the obligation to carry the life-boats herein provided for; and the inspectors are hereby authorized to grant a like dispensation to small steamers of light draught, navigating small or shallow rivers, and also to allow any other steamers navigating rivers only to carry but one life-boat, the same being of suitable model and dimensions, and made of metal: Provided, They shall be fully satisfied that such steamers have other provisions for the preservation of life in case of fire, which are amply sufficient for that purpose: And provided further, That this section shall not be so construed as to compel the purchase or use of any patented life-boat."

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were agreed to, as follow:

Strike out all of the above section inclosed in brackets, and insert "good and suitable" before the word "boats," where it first occurs; insert after "life-boat," where it first occurs, the words "made of metal."

The next amendment of the committee to this section was to insert, after the words "suitable distances," the following, viz:

"And every such vessel of more than five hundred tons, and not exceeding eight hundred tons measurement, shall have three life-boats; and every such vessel of more than eight hundred tons, and not exceeding fifteen hundred tons measurement, shall have four life-boats; and every such vessel of more than fifteen hundred tons measurement, shall have six life-boats—all of which boats shall be well furnished with oars and other necessary apparatus: Provided, however, The inspectors are hereby authorized to exempt steamers navigating rivers only from the obligation to carrying of the life-boat herein provided for, more than one—the same being of suitable dimensions, made of metal, and furnished with all necessary apparatus for use and safety, such steamers having other suitable provisions for the preservation of life in case of fire or other disaster."

Mr. EDGERTON. This is an important amendment in its character. It exempts some of the boats from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HAVEN. Is it competent to divide this amendment at the word "provided," and take a separate vote upon each part?

The SPEAKER. It is not competent to do so.

Mr. HAVEN. The case of the steamer Henry Clay is an example, showing the proviso had better be left out.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I should like to say a word upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only do so by unanimous consent.

Several Voices. "Agreed!" "Agreed!"

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. The House will observe that the bill, as it came to us from the Senate, provided that the number of life-boats with which a steamer should be provided was regulated by the number of passengers she might chance to carry. The committee looked into that matter, and consulted with gentlemen of great experience both upon the western and the eastern waters, and they came to the conclusion that it would be difficult to regulate the number of boats by the number of passengers the steamer should have on board, because that number was very fluctuating. It was then presented to the consideration of the committee, that as regards river boats there was not the same necessity of having a large number of life-boats as there is upon the Atlantic coast or upon our inland seas, because steamers navigating rivers have narrow channels to pursue, and they can more readily be brought to the shore, and one good metallic life-boat is enough in ordinary cases upon all those rivers, and the decision of the question as to whether they should have more is left to the discretion of the inspectors. Some of these rivers are so very narrow that it would hardly be deemed necessary that there should be any life-boats; but the committee were not willing to dispense with one at least; and they require that where there is but one upon the steamer, that shall be a metallic one, and they left it to the discretion of the inspectors, as is provided in the section, to relieve some of the smaller boats, running upon smaller rivers, from the necessity of carrying more than one, provided that life-boat is made of metal.

The House will perceive further, that for the preservation of life, they are also required to have life-preservers and floats, and that there is to be as many of these on board as there are passengers. Those are smaller articles, which can be provided in greater numbers, and there is no hardship in requiring that every steamer, whether navigating a river or an inland sea, should be provided with them, and with all that kind of apparatus of small size which can easily be bestowed away upon a boat in sufficient numbers to meet any exigency whatever.

As this bill was graduated when it came from the Senate, it required that there should be an immense number of the life-boats, for the larger steamers, capable of carrying eight hundred or one thousand passengers—so many that there would be no way of carrying these boats, and they would be an incumbrance. Hence it was evidently necessary that some discretion should be left with the inspectors, in reference to the business which the boat was doing, to the place to which she is running, and such like matters, as to the means she might have for securing the safety of passengers in cases of emergency. We have therefore provided that the number of life-boats shall be graduated by the tonnage of the vessel, so as to require vessels of the largest tonnage to have six life-boats, and a dispensing power is given to the inspectors to dispense with all these life-boats, but one, provided they shall consider it safe for the vessel to run with that, upon the rivers, and only upon rivers.

Now, one word in regard to the kind of life-boats. It has been found by experience that you cannot rely at all times upon wooden life-boats. A wooden boat, made as a life-boat, may be in many cases as good as an iron one; but when that wooden boat has been long exposed to the sun and to the weather, it is often found to fail when it is most needed, and passengers have been left without any reliance of this kind. Everybody knows, who has looked at this matter for the last few years, that among navigators there has been a great call for metallic life-boats.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I understand the previous question has been called upon this bill, and discussion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The House gave its unanimous consent to the gentleman to make his remarks.

Mr. HAVEN. Of course if the gentleman does not consent to have a separate vote taken upon the different parts of the amendment, then, under the ruling of the Chair, that ends the matter. I should like to have the proviso stricken out. I think in the case of the Henry Clay, if they had been provided with life-boats, it would have saved some number more of lives, but yet if the gentleman does not consent to my proposition, we had better pass it.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I say, in reply to my colleague, that on the Henry Clay there were boats; but what could boats have done with such management as they had on board the Henry Clay, when the pilot ran it stern foremost upon the shore, and the pilots and the hands escaped, leaving the passengers upon the stern? Under such circumstances, boats would have done no good. It was the mismanagement of the officers of the boat that caused the great destruction of life.

But there are some cases upon our rivers to which it will not do to apply that rule, because you will only lumber up the vessels which do not need this large number of boats. One life-boat, in such cases, is amply sufficient, if it be a good one. I was going to the question of a metallic boat, and I will say that the experience of the last few years has convinced all navigators that it is absolutely necessary to rely upon a metallic boat, and that at least one such should be upon every vessel. Now, it has been said that this bill requires a patented life-boat, and that is an objection, as I understand, urged by some gentlemen. I do not know how many patented life-boats there may be. I suppose there is no more than there are patented life-preservers. We all know there are life-preservers. We know there is one life-boat patented which is made of metal. How many more there may be, I do not know; but all we have done here is to prescribe that one of these life-boats shall be of metal. Now, I have examined the patent of a gentleman who claims to have a patented life-boat made of metal. He does not patent the fact of making it of metal, nor could he do it. Any gentleman acquainted with the patent laws, knows that he could not patent the right of making a boat of metal, and exclude every other person from making another boat of metal. He has not done it. He has three patents, of which I have had copies from the Patent Office, for the purpose of examining this question and meeting this objection. All these patents apply exclusively to the air-chest, which gives buoyancy to the boat, and to the particular mode of making the sides by a corrugation of iron, and to nothing else. There is no such thing obtainable as a patent for making a boat of metal. There is no such thing in existence, and, therefore, this bill accomplishes what the House, I think, desires to have done. They do not wish to exclude patentees from making things which should be made most serviceable. If a man has made the best life-preserver, and has a patent for it, he may enjoy it, and if it is a proper one, it will command the approbation and the patronage of the community. So it is with life-boats; and do not let us interfere here for the purpose of legislating for any man's life-boat, or any man's life-preserver, or any man's any other notion that he may deem expedient for the preservation of human life. That is what we have endeavored studiously to avoid, and the bill does not now recognize any such right. Give every man a fair chance to present his invention before the public; because if we had legislated for it after having given the man a patent, we should give him the very worst kind of monopoly. We should provide that every man, by this law, should have the thing, and yet, by the patent laws, exclude any other person from furnishing it, except the patentee. It is a monopoly, such as no man in this House would ever think of granting. I hope the amendment of the committee will be adopted as proposed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I trust I may be allowed, by the House, to say a few words in reply to the chairman of the committee who has just taken his seat.

Mr. HART. I object.

Mr. EDGERTON. I think it is unfair that the gentleman should object. The chairman has made an attack upon the proposition I submitted, and I am not permitted to answer him.

Mr. HENN. I trust that the gentleman from Ohio will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. EDGERTON. Discussion is allowed only on one side.

Mr. HART. If the object of the previous question was to cut off all debate, I do object.

Mr. EDGERTON. I should have objected to the chairman's making his attack upon my amendments, when they were shut out by the previous question and not before the House, had I supposed an opportunity to answer him would have been denied me. There is one word I will say, as to this proviso, which I am sure the gentleman from New York [Mr. HART] will permit. I think the chairman himself is in error. He provides for a certain kind of iron life-boat in the first part of the fourth section of the bill. He stated in his remarks he had provided that steamboats upon the rivers should carry one of the same kind of iron life-boats described in the first part of section fourth. Such is not the fact. Steamers navigating rivers are not required to carry the life-boat which those navigating other waters must carry. The bill in this section, and in fact throughout, makes exceptions in favor of river steamers, which the admitted lesser danger do not justify. The boat is described in the bill as an iron life-boat, capable of sustaining fifty persons outside and inside. There being, as the chairman says, no particular boat described or provided for, and it being intended to exclude positively the only really valuable life-boats now known to the public, simply because they are patents, it will be left to the discretion of the inspector to determine the kind of boat; and whether it will contain fifty persons, outside and inside, in a sea or the surf, so as to save their lives, is left to men one half of whom never saw, and perhaps never will see, a life-boat. The boat described in the proviso is a life-boat of suitable dimensions, made of metal. It may carry fifty, or it may only carry ten. It is not required to carry fifty persons outside and in, and is intended to be a boat of less capacity and inferior usefulness to the other boat. Now, sir, if a man has to swim for his life, and he knows not how, it is a matter of perfect indifference whether he is in the river or in the lake. He wants a boat or some life-saving apparatus, proved and tested to be efficient, to get him ashore or keep him afloat; and these river steamers, if they are exempted from carrying but one life-boat, should carry the best one provided for.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to call the gentleman's attention for a moment to a former provision of this section. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, that by referring to the eighth and ninth lines of this section, to which the proviso is attached, he will find it is required that the life-boat shall be in all respects a good, substantial, safe sea-boat, capable of sustaining inside and outside fifty persons. Then the proviso says that "the inspectors are hereby authorized to exempt steamers navigating rivers only from the obligation to carry more than one of the life-boats 'herein provided for.'" And those provided for are such as will carry fifty inside and out.

Mr. EDGERTON. There is a qualification in that "herein provided for." All that the proviso requires is that the boat shall be of "suitable dimensions, and made of metal." That is all, and so the inspector will consider it.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Not at all.

Mr. EDGERTON. A life-boat that will carry fifty persons, outside and in, is the one all steamers should be required to carry; but this is left, as many other provisions of the act are, to the discretion of the inspector.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and upon a division there were—ayes 69, noes not counted.

Mr. ROBBINS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cobb and Mason were appointed.

The question was again put, and the amendment was disagreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 83, noes not counted.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the fifth section, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every such vessel, carrying passengers, except ferry boats, shall also be provided with a good life preserver, made of cork, double tin, copper, or other equally suitable material, or in the place of such life-preserver, floats, if as well adapted to the purpose, for each and every person on board, which life-preservers shall always be distributed and kept in readiness in the berths and state rooms for the benefit of passengers occupying the same, and also in the most conspicuous and suitable place for all others; and shall also keep after the rate of eight fire buckets and three axes for every hundred tons measurement of the vessel, which shall always be kept distributed in a suitable manner and in good order, ready to be used in case of fire."

And to insert in lieu of the above the following, viz:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every such vessel, carrying passengers, shall also be provided with a good life preserver, made of suitable material, or float, well adapted to the purpose, for each and every passenger, which life preservers and floats shall always be kept in convenient and accessible places in such vessel, and in readiness for the use of the passengers; and every such vessel shall also keep twenty fire buckets and five axes; and there shall be kept on board every such vessel exceeding five hundred tons measurement, five buckets and one axe for each one hundred tons measurement, decreasing this proportion as the tonnage of the vessel increases, so that any such vessel of thirty five hundred tons, and all such vessels exceeding the same shall not be required to keep but three buckets for each one hundred tons of measurement, and but one axe for every five buckets.

Mr. EDGERTON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what he means by "floats"—whether he means sticks, a chair, or a door?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will state that gentlemen who have navigated the western waters, and who are conversant with these matters, have been frequently before the committee, and have informed us that a float is an article prepared on purpose, with a chamber filled with air, which is kept on board—one for each person—for the purpose of being seized by him when he shall be thrown into the water, to buoy him up. A life-preserver is different, being filled with air, and fastened around the person.

Mr. EDGERTON. I must say that I have traveled upon steamboats, and have failed to discover anything like a float, as described by the gentleman, anywhere. In the opinion of steamboat captains the gentleman refers to, this float means a chair, a stick of wood, a door, or anything that will float. It is altogether too indefinite, and, in fact, means nothing at all.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will say, further, that the air chambers, to which I have alluded, are fastened to the bottoms of stools and chairs used for ordinary purposes on boats. They answer the same purpose, because the air chamber fastened to them gives the relative buoyancy, and they may be used in cases of emergency.

Mr. EDGERTON. One word in regard to that matter. These very so-called life-preservers and floats, being air chambers attached to stools and chairs, were condemned by those who were saved from the wreck of the Atlantic, on Lake Erie, as utterly worthless. They are no life-preservers, and the law in this respect is worse than no law at all; for passengers will trust to boat owners, instead of supplying themselves with really valuable life-saving apparatus, which they would do without the law.

Mr. SEYMOUR. In reference to the case the gentleman has cited, I have no information. The facts I have detailed to the House are derived from an intelligent committee of gentlemen, who have been here the most of this winter, who have given their practical experience to the committees of this House and the Senate, in the preparation of the bill. Some of them have been twenty or thirty years connected with steamers upon the western waters.

Mr. CARTTER. I should like to know where this committee are from, and whether they have ever sailed upon a lake?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that one of these gentlemen I know to have been, by reputation, some thirty or forty years connected with one of the best and largest class of steamers upon the western waters.

Mr. CARTTER. What do you mean by western waters?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Western rivers.

Mr. CARTTER. I would inquire whether they come from the Ohio river, where the water half the time is not knee deep? [Laughter.]

Mr. SEYMOUR. I do not know what particular river they navigate; but they navigate these large rivers of which we have heard so much this session.

Mr. ROBBINS. I rise to a question of order. Discussion is not in order whilst we are acting under the operation of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. MILLSON. With the unanimous consent, I would ask the gentleman why the committee struck out the words "each and every person," and inserted "each passenger?"

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that the object of the committee of this House was to apply this bill solely to the safety of passengers. With regard to the crew, we know they are in possession and command of the boat. We did not suppose the object of the bill should be regulated by their preservation so much as that of the passengers. We impose certain obligations also that can be enforced at law; and we preferred to say, that they should be in consistency with the relationship between the captain and the persons under his command, and those they are bound to carry as passengers safely.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that discussion is not in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to further discussion. Let us get through with the bill.

Mr. HENN. Would it be in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the call for the previous question was seconded?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order after reconsidering the work that has been done under it.

The question was then taken, and the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was considered and agreed to, viz:

Strike out from the seventh section, the words inclosed in brackets:

"Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That [no curtains made of cotton, or of any material alike combustible, shall be suspended or used in any such vessel carrying passengers, except in state-rooms or apartments where no fire or burning light is allowed to be used; no loose hemp shall be carried on board any such vessel; nor shall baled hemp be carried on the deck or guards thereof, unless the bales are compactly pressed and well covered with bagging or a similar fabric; nor shall gunpowder, oil of turpentine, oil of vitriol, camphene, or other explosive burning fluids or materials which ignite by friction, be carried on board any such vessel as freight, except in cases of special license for that purpose as hereinafter provided; and all such articles kept on board as stores shall be secured in metallic vessels; and every person who shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this section, shall pay a penalty of $100 for each offense, to be recovered by action of debt in any court of competent jurisdiction."

The following sections and part of sections of the bill were read. The amendments of the Committee on Commerce, striking out the parts inclosed in brackets, and inserting the words in italics, were severally considered and agreed to:

"Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That hereafter all gunpowder, oil of turpentine, oil of vitriol, camphene, or other explosive burning fluids, and materials which ignite by friction, when packed or put up for shipment, [for sale,] on board of any such vessel, shall be securely packed or put up separately from each other and from all other articles, and the package, box, cask, or vessel containing the same, shall be distinctly marked on the outside with the name or description of the articles contained therein; and every person who shall pack or put up, or cause to be packed or put up [for sale or shipment on board of any such vessel, any gunpowder, oil of turpentine, oil of vitriol, camphene, or other explosive burning fluids, or materials which ignite by friction, otherwise than as aforesaid,] or shall deliver to any person any package, box, cask, or vessel containing either of the articles aforesaid, not marked as aforesaid, or shall ship or offer to ship the same,] or shall ship the same, unless packed and marked as aforesaid, on board of any steam-vessel carrying passengers, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding eighteen months, or both.

"Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That instead of the existing provisions of law for the inspection of steamers carrying passengers and their equipment, and instead of the present system of pilotage of such vessels, and the present mode of employing engineers on board the same, the following regulations shall be observed, to wit: The collector or other chief officer of the customs, together with the supervising inspector for the district, [and the president of the Chamber of Commerce, if there be one, otherwise the president of the Board of Trade, if there be one, otherwise the collector or other chief officer of the customs and the supervising inspector,] and the judge of the district court of the United States for the district in each of the following collection districts, namely: New Orleans and St. Louis, on the Mississippi river; Louisville, Cincinnati, Wheeling, and Pittsburg, on the Ohio river; Buffalo and Cleveland, on Lake Erie; Detroit, upon Detroit river; Nashville, upon the Cumberland river; Chicago, on Lake Michigan; Oswego, on Lake Ontario; Burlington, in Vermont; Galveston, in Texas; and Mobile, in Alabama; Savannah, in Georgia; Charleston, in South Carolina; Norfolk, in Virginia; Baltimore, in Maryland; Philadelphia, in Pennsylvania; New York, in New York; New London, in Connecticut; Providence, in Rhode Island; Boston, in Massachusetts; Portland, in Maine; and San Francisco, in California—shall designate two inspectors of good character and suitable qualifications to perform the services required of them by this act within [their] the respective districts for which they shall be appointed; one of whom, from his practical knowledge of ship-building, and the uses of steam in navigation, shall be fully competent to make a reliable estimate of the strength, sea-worthiness, and other qualities of the hulls of steamers and their equipment, deemed essential to safety of life [and property,] when such vessels are employed in [navigation,] the carriage of passengers, to be called the inspector of hulls; the other of whom, from his knowledge and experience of the duties of an engineer employed in navigating vessels by steam, and also in the construction and use of boilers, and the machinery and appurtenances therewith connected, shall be able to form a reliable opinion of the quality of the material, the strength, form, workmanship, and suitability of such boilers and machinery to be employed in [navigation] the carriage of passengers without hazard to life [or property] from imperfections in the material, workmanship, or arrangement of any part of such apparatus for steaming, to be called the inspector of boilers; and these two persons thus designated, if approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be from the time of such designation, inspectors, empowered and required to perform the duties herein specified, to wit:

"First. Upon application in writing by the master or owner, they shall, once in every [six months] year at least, carefully inspect the hull of each steamer belonging to their respective districts, and employed in [navigation] the carriage of passengers, and shall satisfy themselves that [each] every such vessel so submitted to their inspection is of a structure suitable for the service in which she is to be employed, has suitable accommodations for her crew and passengers, and is in a condition to warrant the belief that she may be used in navigation as a steamer, with safety to life [and property,] and that all the requirements of law in regard to fires, boats, pumps, hose, life-preservers, floats, and other things, are faithfully complied with; and if they deem it expedient, they may direct the vessel to be put in motion, and may adopt any other suitable means to test her sufficiency, and that of her equipment."

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was read. It was to strike out the second clause of section nine, as follows:

"Second. They shall also, once in every six months, inspect the boilers of all steamers, subjecting them to a hydrostatic pressure, the limit to which, not exceeding two hundred pounds to the square inch, may be prescribed by the owner or master, and shall satisfy themselves, by examination and experimental trials, that the boilers are well made, in an approved form, of good and suitable material; that the openings for the passage of water and steam respectively, and all pipes and tubes exposed to heat are of proper dimensions, and free from obstruction; that the spaces between the flues are sufficient, and that the fire-line of the furnace is below the prescribed water-line of the boilers; and that such boiler and the machinery, and the appurtenances, may be safely employed in the service proposed in the written application, without peril to life or property; and shall also satisfy themselves that the safety-valves are of suitable dimensions, sufficient in number, well arranged, and in good working order, all but one of which may, if necessary, in the opinion of the inspectors, to secure safety, be taken wholly from the control of all persons engaged in navigating the vessel; that there is a suitable number of gauge cocks inserted in the most approved manner; also, a water-gauge, and a steam-gauge, of approved construction, indicating the height of the water and the pressure of the steam; that upon the upper outside flue of each outside high-pressure boiler there is placed, in a satisfactory manner, alloyed metals, fusible by the heat of the boiler when raised to the highest working pressure allowed, and in or upon the top of the flues of all other boilers in the steamer, such alloyed metals be placed as aforesaid, fusing at ten pounds greater pressure, thereby in each case letting steam escape; and that adequate and certain provision is made for an ample supply of water to feed the boilers at all times, whether the vessel is in motion or not, so that in high-pressure boilers it shall not be less than four inches above the flue: Provided, however, in steamers hereafter built and supplied with new boilers and machinery, or in cases of machinery hereafter made, if the alloy fuses on the outer boilers a pressure of ten pounds exceeding the working pressure allowed, and at twenty pounds above said pressure on the inner boilers, it shall be a sufficient compliance with this act."

And to insert in lieu thereof the following, viz:

Second. They shall also inspect the boilers of such steamers before the same shall be used, and once in every year thereafter, subjecting them to a hydrostatic pressure, the limit to which not exceeding one hundred and sixty-five pounds to the square inch for high pressure boilers, may be prescribed by the owner or the master, and shall satisfy themselves by examination and experimental trials, that the boilers are well made of good and suitable material; that the openings for the passage of water and steam respectively, and all pipes and tubes exposed to heat are of proper dimensions, and free from obstruction; that the spaces between the flues are sufficient, and that the fire line of the furnace is below the prescribed water-line of the boilers; and that such boilers and the machinery and the appurtenances may be safely employed in the service proposed in the written application, without peril to life; and shall also satisfy themselves that the safety valves are of suitable dimensions, sufficient in number, well arranged, and in good working order, (one of which may, if necessary in the opinion of the inspectors to secure safety, be taken wholly from the control of all persons engaged in navigating such vessel;) that there is a suitable number of gauge-cocks properly inserted, and a suitable water-gauge and steam-gauge, indicating the height of the water and the pressure of the steam; that in or upon the outside flue of each outside high-pressure boiler, there is placed, in a suitable manner alloyed metals, fusible by the heat of the boiler, when raised to the highest working pressure allowed, and that in or upon the top of the flues of all other high-pressure boilers in the steamer, such alloyed metals are placed as aforesaid, fusing at ten pounds greater pressure than said metals on the outside boilers, thereby, in each case, letting steam escape; and that adequate and certain provision is made for an ample supply of water to feed the boilers at all times, whether such vessel is in motion or not; so that in high-pressure boilers the water shall not be less than four inches above the flue: Provided, however, in steamers hereafter supplied with new high-pressure boilers, if the alloy fuses on the outer boilers at a pressure of ten pounds exceeding the working pressure allowed, and at twenty pounds above said pressure on the inner boilers, it shall be a sufficient compliance with this act.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was read. It was to strike out the third clause of section nine, as follows:

Third. That in subjecting to the hydrostatic test aforesaid boilers called and usually known under the designation of high-pressure boilers, the inspectors shall assume one hundred and ten pounds to the square inch as the maximum pressure allowable as a working power for a new boiler forty-two inches in diameter, made of inspected iron plates at least one fourth of an inch thick, in the best manner, and of the quality herein required, and shall rate the working power of all high-pressure boilers, whether of greater or less diameter, old or new, according to their strength compared with this standard; and in subjecting to the test aforesaid, that class of boilers usually designated and known as low-pressure boilers, the said inspectors shall assume fifty pounds pressure to the square inch as the maximum working power upon a new boiler of medium size, made of the material and in the manner aforesaid, and shall rate all low pressure boilers, whether greater or less, old or new, according to their strength compared with this standard: Provided, That no such boilers of either description hereafter made shall be rated over the said standard prescribed; and in all cases the working power allowed shall be to the test applied as one hundred and ten to two hundred: And provided further, That the same rule shall be observed in regard to boilers previously made, unless the proportion between any such boilers and the cylinder, or some other cause, renders it manifest that its application would be unjust, in which cases the inspectors may depart from it if it can be done with safety. And no valve, under any circumstances, shall be loaded or so managed, in any way, as to subject the boiler to a greater pressure than the amount allowed by the inspectors; nor shall any boiler or pipe be approved which is made of bad material, or is unsafe from its form, or dangerous from defective workmanship, age, use, or any other cause."

And to insert in lieu thereof the following, viz:

Third. That in subjecting to the hydrostatic test aforesaid boilers called and usually known under the designation of high-pressure boilers, the inspector shall assume one hundred and ten pounds to the square inch, as the maximum pressure allowable as a working power for a new boiler forty-two inches in diameter, made of iron plates as herein required, at least one fourth of an inch thick, in the best manner and of the quality herein required, and shall rate the working power of all high pressure boilers, whether of greater or less diameter, old or new, according to their strength compared with this standard, and in all cases the test applied shall exceed the working power allowed, in the ratio of one hundred and sixty five to one hundred and ten, and no high-pressure boilers hereafter made shall be rated above this standard: and in subjecting to the test aforesaid, that class of boilers usually designated and known as low-pressure boilers, the said inspectors shall allow as a working power of each new boiler a pressure of only two thirds the number of pounds to the square inch to which it shall have been subjected to the hydrostatic test and found to be sufficient therefor, using the water in such tests at a temperature not exceeding sixty degrees Fahrenheit; but should such inspectors be of the opinion, that said boiler, by reason of its construction or material will not safely allow so high a working pressure, they may, for reasons to be stated specifically in their certificate, fix the working pressure of said boiler at less than two thirds of said test pressure, and no low-pressure boiler hereafter made shall be rated in its working pressure above the aforesaid standard: And provided, That the same rules shall be observed in regard to the boilers heretofore made, unless the proportion between such boilers and the cylinders, or some other cause, renders it manifest that its application would be unjust, in which cases the inspectors may depart from these rules, if it can be done with safety; but in no case shall the working pressure allowed exceed the hydrostatic test, and no valve, under any circumstances, shall be loaded or so managed in any way as to subject a boiler to a greater pressure than the amount allowed by the inspectors, nor shall any boiler or pipe be approved which is made in whole or in part of bad material, or is unsafe in its form, or dangerous from defective workmanship, age, use, or any other cause.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. POLK. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WIDOW OF THOMAS J. CAMPBELL.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the business before the House is the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHURCHWELL] yesterday, to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the following resolution, which will be read by the Clerk.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of this House, to the widow of its late Clerk, Thomas J. Campbell, a sum equal to the salary of said Clerk, reckoned from the time of his death to the close of the session of Congress during which he died.

Mr. ORR. Would it not be in order for the House to proceed with, and finally dispose of, the bill which we have been just acting upon, if a majority desires to do so?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHURCHWELL] has a right to call up the business which he introduced on yesterday.

Mr. BISSELL. If it be in order, I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHURCHWELL] on yesterday, to suspend the rules, is the first business in order. It is of a privileged character, and must be put to the House.

The question was then taken, and the rules of the House were not suspended.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICE IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. SIBLEY. I have a bill of considerable importance, which has just passed the Senate, which I desire to have action upon. I do not intend to trespass upon the time of the House more than is necessary. I ask that it may be taken up and passed. It is Senate bill No. 540, to create an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read the first and second time by its title, and ordered to a third reading; and, according to order, was read a third time and passed.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move the usual resolution to close debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon House bill No. 212, in two hours after the consideration of the bill shall be resumed in committee.

Mr. WALSH. Was not the motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table in order? I submit that motion.

The SPEAKER. Some gentleman did propose to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, when it was not in order to submit any motion whatever, there being a privileged question pending. That privileged question having been disposed of, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] was recognized, and his is a legitimate, original proposition.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will modify my resolution, and say one hour.

Mr. HENN. If it is in order to amend the resolution, I move to insert five minutes instead of one hour.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on the bill of the House No. 312, "making appropriations for light houses, light boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," shall cease in one hour after the Committee shall resume its consideration, (if the committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion upon the same,) and the committee shall then proceed to vote on such amendments as may be pending or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to amend the amendment by inserting two hours. The bill is a very important one.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move the previous question.

Mr. POLK. I would ask as a matter of kindness of the gentleman who moved to amend the resolution by making it five minutes, to allow me the privilege of one hour at least. I have endeavored to get the Speaker's ear all the morning, for the purpose of making the motion to go into committee, but I have been unfortunate.

Mr. HENN. I do not wish to deprive the gentleman from Tennessee of his hour. I will therefore withdraw my amendment.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] to strike out "one hour" in the resolution, and insert "two hours."

The question was then taken, and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the adoption of the resolution, it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? The Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business desire to offer a resolution which I hope will meet with the unanimous consent of the House. It is a resolution to keep alive until the next session of Congress the business which cannot be reported upon by the committees of this House the present session. It is the usual resolution, and if any gentleman objects to it, I will move to suspend the rules.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That all the bills, resolutions, and other matter referred to the standing committees of this House, upon which no report shall have been made at this session, shall be returned informally to the Clerk, and shall by virtue of this resolution stand recommitted at the commencement of the next session to said committees, into whose possession the Clerk is hereby directed to restore them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be considered as before the House.

Mr. BOWIE. I offer the following, as a substitute:

And that the standing committees of this House have leave to report on the several matters referred to them respectively, by filing their reports and bills (if any) with the Clerk of this House, and that the said reports and bills be printed and entered on the Calendar as if made in the House upon a call of the Speaker.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] is offered as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] I offer the following, as an addition to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama:

Resolved further, That from and after this day the House will hold an evening session at seven o'clock, to be devoted to receiving reports of committees, provided that all bills and joint resolutions reported with a recommendation that they pass be referred when reported.

Mr. BOWIE. I originally intended what I offered as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama, but my friends induced me to offer it as a substitute. I desire to modify it, and offer it as an addition to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I offer the resolution I send to the Chair as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. BOWIE.] The resolution of the gentleman from Maryland is inconsistent with the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama. I therefore offer my proposition as a substitute for it.

Mr. STUART. As I understand the proposition, it is this: The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] offers his amendment as an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. STUART. So I understand it. I wish to make an observation in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland. As I heard it read, it seems to propose that the committees of this House shall be at liberty to report, and to have these reports printed and placed upon the Calendar, without any action or knowledge of this House. Now, it seems to me, that much mischievous result by the adoption of such a resolution as that. I think, sir, that reports from committees on business in their hands, should not be made except when the House is in session; so that should there be objection, or a motion to refer, or any other motion that the merits of the case might require, it could be made. Now, sir, if I understand the reading of this resolution correctly, it would give to the members of a committee the right to report, and have the reports printed and placed upon the Calendar, so as to take precedence of other business that might come up in the next session, subjects which, perhaps, a majority of the House would not tolerate an instant. Now, it appears to me, that the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] is vastly better, as it authorizes all this business to stand as recommended to these committees. At the next session, the committees will be called regularly in the morning hour for their reports, when they will come in a legitimate manner before the House. Members will be present and understand them, and can make any objections or motions which the subject may require. I hope, sir, that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ORR. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BOWIE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the previous question, to allow me to explain.

Mr. ORR. I will withdraw it, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. BOWIE. I will renew it.

Mr. ORR. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. BOWIE. The object of my amendment is, to enable the committees of the House, and particularly the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, to expedite the business of legislation, by filing their reports with the Clerk of the House, and placing them on the Calendar, ready for the action of the House at its ensuing session. There are many reports and bills in the hands of members, ready to be reported, and only waiting an opportunity, which has not been had by many committees for several months. These would, under the amendment offered by me, be placed in the possession of the House, printed, and entered on the Calendar, as if made in the House, upon the call of the Speaker.

When reports are made in the House, they are, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, referred as recommended by the committee from which they come, or the member by whom they are reported.

No interest can be prejudiced by such reference. The adoption or rejection of the report or bill is still subject to the will of the majority.

There are but two references which can be made of such reports, to "the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union," or "the Committee of the Whole House," in either of which the subject-matter of the reports will be entirely safe.

As I promised, I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. STANLY. If there be no objection, I would suggest that it would be better to insert after the words "standing committees," the words, "select committees." They have some reports to make to the House.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, that modification can be made.

Mr. STUART. Does the gentleman propose to insert it in the original resolution?

Mr. STANLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. In my resolution, all committees are included.

Mr. STANLY. Your resolution is not adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. But it is pending, and it can be adopted.

There being no objection, the resolution was so modified.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HARRIS's amendment to the amendment; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 38, noes 99.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. BOWIE, and being put, the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 58, noes 93.

The original resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. POLK moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. VENABLE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 312, making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and for the providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes; upon which Mr. POLK was entitled to the floor.

Mr. POLK, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the House in regard to the position of the two great parties towards the Compromise measures, maintaining that whilst General Pierce was fully committed in favor of the finality of those measures, General Scott was not. He then went into an examination of the relative fitness of the candidates of the two parties for the Presidency, and of their conduct in Mexico. In doing which, he reflected with much severity upon Mr. CULLOM, for his alleged charge, in a speech made at the City Hall, in Washington, that General Pierce had acted cowardly in Mexico. A personal altercation then took place between these gentlemen, in which Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, was finally involved. [The remarks of Mr. P. will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, said he understood the Whig Executive Committee, appointed by the National Whig Convention for the purpose of superintending and managing the canvass, had taken from the National Era an article originally published in that paper, entitled "A Brief Chapter in the Life of General Franklin Pierce," in which are paraded the votes of General Pierce in Congress on the subject of slavery, showing to the North that he is an ardent, strong, and ultra pro-slavery man. At the same time, in Kentucky and other States a misrepresentation of the remarks of General Pierce at New Boston are heralded to show that he is an Abolitionist. The Whig Executive Committee had caused a large number of these to be printed, and placed them in the hands of members to be franked. He then read a list, which he obtained from the folding-room, showing the names of the various gentlemen who had ordered copies of the documents, amounting, in all, to forty-eight thousand one hundred copies. [See Appendix for speech.]

The CHAIRMAN. Further discussion is out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is necessary that I should make one word of reply.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would like to know what has become of General Pierce and his Abolition Allies?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear no proposition until order is restored.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask permission of the committee to say one word—but a word by way of personal explanation. I am involved in this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. STUART. I submit that the gentleman cannot proceed by unanimous consent. We are acting under an express rule of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Any rule, I presume, may be suspended by the unanimous consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair hear objection?

[Cries all over the Hall of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STUART. I object, and insist upon the execution of the order of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I move a suspension of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done.

Mr. CULLOM. I would appeal to the gentleman to allow me five or ten minutes.

Mr. STUART. In the House I will not object to any explanation the gentleman may choose to make, but we are now acting under an express order of the House, which the committee cannot vary by unanimous consent at all.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I hope not. I trust we will proceed with this bill.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the committee rise, with the view of giving the gentleman from Tennessee an opportunity to make an explanation in the House, which was denied to him by the objection of the gentleman from Michigan in the committee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 312, "making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the permission of the House to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman shall be heard?

Mr. STUART. I do not rise to object, but only to make one word of explanation. I am pleased to hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. CULLOM. Most assuredly I do; but I hope the gentleman will not object to my proceeding.

Mr. STUART. I wish to put myself right. I will listen to the gentleman with as much pleasure as any one in the House. The reason I made objection in the committee was, that the committee was acting under an express rule which they had no power by unanimous consent to waive, and not because I wished to deny the honorable gentleman a hearing.

Mr. CULLOM. I am much obliged to the honorable gentleman from Michigan for his courtesy, as well as to the House for this privilege of meeting, and in terms parliamentary and respectful to the House, hurling back the Billingsgate abuse, calumny, and slander, poured out at me by my colleague, [Mr. Polk.] I am reluctant, Mr. Speaker, to obtrude myself upon the House in the consumption of its precious time, which should be devoted to the legitimate business of dignified, statesman-like legislation, maintaining towards one another, to the country, and the world, that dignity of deportment, urbanity of bearing in harmony with our high character as a people, as a nation, and as a free republican Government. It pains me that it is made my duty, as a gentleman of some humble sense of honor, to occupy a brief moment of your fleeting and precious time, upon the very eve of the adjournment of your arduous and protracted session, in a vindication of my poor self and of my humble reputation. That I have not contributed by word or deed, either to prolong the session of Congress, or provoke this unlooked-for onslaught upon myself, my honorable colleague in the Senate, or the lofty patriot and irreproachable hero, General Scott, I appeal to all good men upon this floor, whether Whigs or Democrats.

I have studiously endeavored to conduct myself upon all occasions, in and out of Congress, in such a manner as to elevate my own honor, in the estimation of good men, to the high standard of my country, and the enlightened constituency which I have the honor to represent. That such has been my whole course here, I appeal to all to bear me witness; with what success it does not become me to say; but I feel one proud consolation, and to me it is peculiarly grateful, that my relations with my brother members are of the kindest character, without distinction of party. Yes, sir, I have but few brothers upon this floor that I would not open my dearest veins for, if their sacred honor or personal safety demanded it. This before my God I say of a truth. I do not say it through fear or alarm of any living man, for I am fully capable of saying and doing, here or elsewhere, with perfect self-possession, whatever I think, or my personal honor demands. Mr. Speaker, my heart sickens within me to think that at the very heels of our arduous session, which has, through my intercourse with members, entwined about my ardent heart, so many kindly recollections—of members from whom in a day or two more, I am to take perhaps a last long leave, to be thus reluctantly thrust before you and the country by the ruthless assaults of my colleague.

I am a Whig, to be sure, upon principle, from the honest convictions of my deliberate judgment. Unflinching in my exertions to maintain those cherished principles; ardent in my support and advocacy of my faith and the men who impersonate it; still I am tolerant in my feelings, conceding to those who honestly differ with me, the same right which I claim for myself. I have insulted no Democrat for opinion's sake—I never will. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you and to the House, and to a refined, enlightened public, to whose arbitrament we must all yield, what necessity there was for my colleague, in the grave discussion in this, a nation's forum, or in the advocacy of his favorite candidate for the Presidency, if he chose to take the latitude, not only to malign, slander, and traduce my humble name and fame, and that of my distinguished colleague in the Senate, but also the fair fame—and dearly-bought fame—of a country's greatest living benefactor?

Mr. POLK. The gentleman states that he cannot be, and has not been, guilty, under any circumstances, of offending any one personally or politically. I alluded, in my remarks, to what my colleague stated in part at the City Hall, in Washington, where he charged General Pierce with cowardice. I said that the gentleman must stamp shame upon his own brow when he charges this.

Mr. CULLOM. Exactly. The gentleman either knows nothing of the facts of which he speaks, or states them falsely. In my ratification speech in the City of Washington, of which the gentleman speaks, I used no such language, nor made any such charge against General Pierce as he alleges. I never, upon that, or any other occasion, charged General Pierce with being a coward; and the gentleman states falsely when he asserts that I did. That speech was reported and published without my knowledge or consent, or without correction by me; and though it contains inaccuracies, it as published and delivered refutes the untruthful charge of my competitor in that speech.

Upon the point to which the gentleman alludes, if he had been willing to quote me truthfully, he would have found this language: "But, gentlemen, it is certain General Pierce was unfortunate. I will not say that he lacked in courage, but he was unfortunate on the day of battle—some say he fainted. [So says the official report—so says his life.] I will not, however, repeat that, for it may be a slander. I understand that statement is entirely a mistake—that General Pierce did not faint, but that his horse fainted"—humorously alluding to the strange combination of untoward circumstances which always kept the brave General out of battle, or by which either he or his horse was disabled, at some unpropitious moment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, not only has shame settled upon my brow, but the deep blush has lit upon my cheek; and here, to-day, before this House and the whole country, in the presence of my colleague, I say that my Tennessee pride, my American feelings, have been deeply wounded, on account of the obliquity and grossly ill-behavior of my colleague, more than once upon this floor. In my heart of hearts I have commiserated his misfortune—for the kindness I have always felt for him—for the reputation of his virtuous constituents, our common State and nation.

The SPEAKER. It will be the duty of the Chair, as the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. CULLOM,] is aware, to arrest any personalities.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not knowingly violate one rule of the House, or of public decorum; for, as I value my own character, and that of my constituents, I would guard this high legislative forum from the use of low vulgarities and Billingsgate scurrilities. They shall not be perpetrated by me; but when thus assailed myself, and my personal and political friend who sits in the other Chamber, but who has no voice in this Hall; and when he is assailed who has defended me, my country, her Constitution and laws, I would be base to myself, and my own nature—to my own darling offspring—to the high obligations of friendship, and to patriotism itself, if I did not, as I distinctly do, hurl back these false aspersions upon the already-devoted head of their author. This I would do, though the heavens and this old earth were to come together. Now, my honorable colleague, and every man on this floor, knows the fact to be—for it has been a painfully notorious fact to all who have witnessed the proceedings of Congress—that he has sought a kind of notoriety that no decent man would envy; a common meddler in other men's business, of ringing himself inside, or edge in almost every debate that has taken place when he chanced to be present, to cause himself to figure in the speeches of both Whigs and Democrats, putting what he may imagine shrewd questions, but which receives the universal reprobation of all lovers of parliamentary decorum, not to say common decency.

Now, my honorable colleague, so capable of being so very amiable at times, has unfortunately for himself become a sort of Ishmaelite—his hand against every man, and but for the commiseration of all good sane men, their hands would all be lifted against him in self-defense. With all my compassion and commiseration for the misfortunes and foibles of my competitor, I am even surprised at the forbearance he has received. It will soon cease to be a virtue. But there is a point at which even my latitudinarian colleague from the Maury district has got to stop. This point he has reached. I will not assail him unwarrantably here, but it is perhaps my duty to myself, and even my colleague, to let him know, in the most distinct and unequivocal manner, that I hold him and all his braggadocio, bullying, and denunciation, in utter, supreme, and sovereign contempt. It brings no terror to me. It does not accelerate a pulse. It passes as the ravings of a maniac, whose misfortunes I would sooner alleviate than augment. It produces more of shame than fear. His charge of desertion against me and my distinguished colleague in the Senate—I suppose, of course, the allusion is to Governor Jones; of cowardice and want of patriotism upon the part of General Scott, in the whole and in the concrete, in mass and in detail, I pronounce, as when the charge first fell from the lips of my colleague, that the charges are a libel, a vile infamous calumny and falsehood. I have betrayed no interest either North or South, East or West. I have endeavored to represent truly and faithfully every interest of my constituents, with what fidelity and zeal I leave for you, with whom I have served, and my constituents, to decide, to whom I hope under God's providence soon to return, before whom, and to whom I am ready and willing to render a full account of my stewardship; to them I am accountable, and not to my colleague. But he strikes an assassin's blow at my humble reputation. It may wither as a sprig of grass, but I feel no alarm. I feel perfectly secure in the consciousness of the entire rectitude of my course.

But the gentleman comes here as the greater Magnus Apollo of the Democracy—I hope not the entire Democracy; for though the gentleman seems to be prompted by some of them, yet from the blush of shame which I see resting upon many Democratic faces, I feel that they do not approve it; for, however desirous gentlemen may be to defeat the election, what honorable man, Whig or Democrat, here to-day, can approve the means, foul, I must say, which my colleague has resorted to? Mr. Speaker, can it be possible that Democracy has put forward my colleague as an instrument thus to assail General Scott, and denounce him here, in language coarse and vulgar, as a coward, as void of patriotism, void of honor and love of country?—the man that fought the battles of the country, a man whom the nation acknowledges as her greatest benefactor now holding a place amongst the living, who has poured out his blood that our liberties should be secure, amongst which is the liberty of speech. But what a sad and lamentable abuse of that high privilege, for which Scott bled, we have witnessed this day! I feel no apprehension that the foul, tainted breath of any man can injure or impair the high appreciation in which the war-worn veteran of so many sanguinary wars, and of so many brilliant victories, is justly held by a grateful and patriotic country; that there is patriotism enough in this free country to shield and vindicate General Scott from these calumnies. It will astound the country when they learn that these charges are gravely put forth in high places by my colleague. Let it go to the country; let every mail bear it; let the lightning bear it to the ends of the earth, that the man whom Christendom acknowledges as unequalled, not only in skill but in valor, for party sake and party advancement was thus denounced. Is there no higher argument? Is there no merit in your principles or in your candidate which you would commend? It would be far more honorable to leave a soldier's laurels, dearly earned in fields of danger and death, through almost a half century of toil and privation, than thus to rob him and a nation whose jewel it is. Oh shame! where is thy blush!

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague must sit down and keep his choler buttoned; I cannot be troubled with him any more; he must learn to behave like a gentleman, if possible; he has such a propensity to be upon the floor, speaking and running around. Let me advise my colleague to get a little glue and place it carefully on his chair, and sit himself down on it, and thereby hold himself to his seat, and try for once to conduct himself with dignity, if he has to resort to these artificial means. [Laughter.]

My colleague said much about the Mexican war, in which Scott and Taylor fought so gallantly. I think it was quite unfortunate and highly indelicate in the gentleman, sustaining, as he does, certain relations to the then Administration. He speaks of Scott and Santa Anna, in league to betray, and did actually cause the massacre of a large number of American soldiers. Now, I propose to discuss that war, the treatment of the Administration to Generals Scott and Taylor, and how Santa Anna got into Mexico, and show who gave him his passports.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. I am extremely reluctant to do so.

Mr. CULLOM. As I am speaking by courtesy, as there is obligation, I will give way; returning you, Mr. Speaker, my thanks, and through you, my colleagues, for thus kindly permitting me, in this hasty manner, to state my defense. I will not trespass longer.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken; and it was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, (Mr. VENABLE in the chair,) and again resumed the consideration of the light-house bill.

The following section was then read by the Clerk:

"Maine: For a light-house on the Nubble Cape, Neddich, York, $5,000."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I move to strike out $5,000. I do it for the purpose of making an explanation, my name having been introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] in connection with the circulation of "A few Chapters in the Life of General Pierce." The gentleman from Kentucky read a list. I wish to state that it is true. I did send a very considerable number of that publication into all parts of the country. I subscribed to the fund, and I learn, upon inquiry—

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I must make a question of order on the gentleman. I understand that we are acting upon an amendment, and it is out of order for a member to speak to anything but the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask to make a statement as a personal explanation. The gentleman is exceedingly fastidious.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. That same privilege was denied the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. CULLOM,] because we were in the Committee of the Whole, and we went into the House to allow it. If the rule would apply to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. CULLOM,] it must apply to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to make my statement.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to rule the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask to make this explanation, my name being dragged unceremoniously into this matter.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say that I must object to all this, for the reason that when impertinent questions and impertinent topics are introduced into this House, it is just as indiscreet and impertinent to answer them. [Laughter.] I therefore object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is susceptible of proper explanation, if the gentleman will hear it. I subscribed for an equal number of documents to be published for the South.

The question was then taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

When the following clauses were read, viz:

"For a buoy-boat on Bibb Rock, near Wellfleet harbor,

"For a buoy boat on Sand Shoal, near north end of Bass Rip, $500. The above buoys to be placed under the direction of the Superintendent of Coast Survey;"

Mr. HOUSTON said, I wish to know of the chairman of the committee who reported this bill, why it is that those two lights are taken from under the ordinary control and put under the control and direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey? I do not understand it.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will state that the appropriations were inserted on the recommendation of the Light-House Board; and in recommending them, they proposed that they should be located under the direction of the Coast Survey. It is a matter of complaint that these buoys are placed by pilots, who are accidentally employed for the purpose, and are often injudiciously placed, and that no proper record is kept of the bearing and distances of the locations. The committee, therefore, thought fit to adopt the recommendation of the Light-house Board.

Mr. HOUSTON. Of course, this is a subject which I have not very thoroughly looked into; but it appears to me to be objectionable for this reason: we have now a Bureau of the Government which has entire control of this whole system; and it occurs to me that it would be injudicious to divide the responsibility.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would suggest to my colleague on the committee, who reported the bill, that perhaps the word "placed" is not the proper word to be used in this clause. I suppose it is the erection of the buoy-boats of which the Superintendent of the Coast Survey is to have charge and direction, and not that they are to be continued in his charge hereafter. If the language of the clause is not proper, I am sure my colleague will agree to an amendment. Perhaps the word "erected" would express the idea better.

Mr. HOUSTON. I receive the explanation of the gentleman from New York; but still my own opinion is—and I think that those who have given this subject any consideration will agree with me—that this is but the beginning of the end. If the Fifth Auditor does not possess the necessary information, give the control of this subject to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, but—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama submit any amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not prepared to do so, but I make the suggestion that I think this provision is objectionable.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move to amend the second of the clauses now more immediately under consideration, by striking out the word "placed" in the last line, and inserting the word "located" in lieu thereof. The word "placed" was inserted by mistake. While I am up, I wish to say in addition to what I before said, that those buoys were recommended by the Light-House Board, under the authority given them by the act of the last session, by which they were directed to examine and report upon these subjects; and their recommendation is that they be located by the Coast Survey. They, being employed upon the coast, can locate these buoys with very little expense, and with more accuracy than it can be done in any other way, in the ordinary course of their duty. They have the means in their hands, the charts, soundings, documents, and all before them; and they are more competent to place these important buoys than any other body of men can be.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish the indulgence of the committee for one moment, to state, in connection with what has fallen from my colleague upon the Committee on Commerce, that we have recently provided by law, that the Coast Survey shall, whilst they are surveying our coast, for the purpose of making proper charts, turn their attention to suitable locations for light-houses, light-ships, and buoys.

It is a saving of time and expense to the Government, to derive this information from that corps, which is primarily employed upon another subject. They can, without increasing their expenses, or extending the time they are thus employed, give us this useful information.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is certainly in one error, if in no more. He says that this does not increase the expenses. Now, it does increase the expenses, and the Coast Survey have charged for the examination of these points for light-houses and so forth. But I object to dividing the responsibility of this Department. The Superintendent of the Coast Survey is now getting, not only pay for the duties of the head of that department of the public service, but he is also getting a large salary for his control over the subject of weights and measures, and now it is proposed to give him the light-houses also.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to say one word upon this subject, in reply to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I will say, in justification of myself, that I assented to the placing of these buoys, which are thus to be erected, under the charge of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, for the very reason that I supposed that, if he was employed in surveying the coast, and was paid a salary for that, he would not charge any more for performing this service.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to strike out the last two clauses of the bill which have been read by the Clerk, and I do it for the purpose of making a few remarks upon this point. I have no opinion to express upon this point of the superintendence of lights. On the contrary, even after listening to the very able argument of my friend from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] on that subject, I am not prepared yet to express any opinion upon it, except to this extent: that I do not think so radical a change ought to be made without a more thorough investigation of the subject than it has been in the power of any of us to make. The report upon this subject came in at a very late period, and I am not prepared to change the whole system of the management of our light-house establishment until we have looked more into the matter than we have now.

But, sir, I do undertake to say—and I do it from personal information—that so far as our inlets and the entrances to our creeks and rivers are concerned, this Coast Survey has thrown very great light on the subject. I have found that their surveys have led to the correction of mistakes, and to valuable suggestions which I really think this House ought not to disregard.

I have not given to this bill that thorough investigation which it was alone the province of the Committee on Commerce to give it; but I am entirely satisfied, not only from the character of the chairman of that committee, but quite as much from that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN], who has especial charge of this branch of the business of that committee, that they have looked into this matter with a great deal of impartiality and justice, and I am not therefore prepared—though I am free to say that this is not a subject which I have investigated probably as minutely as I ought to have done—to go counter to the recommendation of the chairman of the committee, and of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I do not understand this provision as my friend from Alabama does, that it changes the control under which these light-houses are to be placed. They are now under the control of the Fifth Auditor, to a great extent, and I do not understand that it is designed to change that control at all. Am I right about that?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYLY. If it were otherwise, I should not agree to support a proposition to change that control, because at this session of Congress I do not think that we have looked into the matter sufficiently to justify any radical change. I am quite willing to pass this bill with a few amendments.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I avail myself of the privilege of speaking in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, to call the attention of the committee to the law to which I referred when I was last up. It was suggested by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that the Coast Survey had received additional compensation for the surveys which they had made in reference to the location of light-houses. From the character of the gentlemen on that board, I cannot believe that they have done so, and I think the gentleman must be mistaken. I find, by reference to the act approved March 3, 1851, which gives them this authority, that in the eighth section of that act it is expressly provided, "that no additional compensation shall be allowed to any person serving on said corps."

Mr. HOUSTON. Here is the report of the Coast Survey, the last clause of which I will read for the information of the gentleman, who will then see whether I am mistaken or not. It is as follows:

"The information embodied in this report has been obtained by the facilities furnished by the distribution of parties of the Coast Survey on all sections of the coast, at a merely nominal expense, not exceeding $1,000, while the information obtained of a reliable sort," &c.

So that the gentleman must see that there has been a charge of some sort made by the Coast Survey.

Mr. SEYMOUR. That is substantially as I supposed. I did not know that it increased the expenses at all, but I suppose the increase can only arise from the necessary delay while on this service, for the purpose of looking to the light-house establishment. The result, I am satisfied, has been a vast saving in the expenditures of the country. We are now guided, in making up the light-house appropriation bill, by the report of this scientific board, which was laid before the committee at an early period of this session, whereas the committee has heretofore been guided, in a great measure, by conjecture. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, to substitute the word "located" for the word "placed," will be adopted, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not prevail.

Mr. BAYLY. If there be no objection, I will now withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

The question recurred upon Mr. DUNCAN's amendment, and being put the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to add at the end of the clause, the following:

But no charge shall be made by the Coast Survey out of the light-house fund therefor.

My object in offering that amendment is to meet a case of this sort: it has come to my knowledge as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, that there have been charges, and pretty heavy charges, on the light-house fund by the Coast Survey, for services performed. In one case, I am told there was a sum of $4,000 charged for some maps or sketches furnished to the Light-House Board. Now the Coast Survey has a very large fund, and is well equipped, and I desire to guard against this thing. When the light-house establishment is to be absorbed by the Coast Survey, I wish to have it done regularly. The principle of their locating or placing these buoys is not to be objected to, nor do I object to it, but it should be a part of their general duty, and should add no additional expense, or if it does, it should come out of their own fund.

Mr. EVANS. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, but it must strike every member of the committee that the Coast Survey ought to be allowed to expend as much as the Fifth Auditor would himself expend upon this same service. Now, if the Fifth Auditor would have to pay something out of the light-house fund for the location of these buoys, I do not see why, when the same buoys are placed by the Coast Survey, they should not go to the same extent of expense, and it is an expense which clearly belongs to the light-house establishment. Now, if there is one single thing in the world which has been conducted without any sort of system or any sort of knowledge, it is the location of these buoys. It is even worse than the light-houses. They have been in many instances improperly located, and it is often impossible for the ships of this country to tell upon which side of them to go. Such has been the difficulty and abuse of the whole system heretofore. Now, this Coast Survey has ascertained new channels, and has placed the buoys in better positions in the old channels. They are far better acquainted with the coast of the United States, than any gentleman who sits down here in the city of Washington to arrange these matters can be. Those who have been employed in this business know far better, in relation to the coast survey, and can ascertain the proper points at which to place lights, than one who merely ascertains the facts from charts. A former report recommended a distinct plan for marking buoys, but it was never carried out. I think it will be seen that all reform upon the subject, which has been effected, has been forced into Congress, and has been resisted in the extreme by those who were ignorant of what they were doing, and who have listened to misrepresentation.

Sir, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from New York may be so far amended as to allow the precise expense, and no more, that would be expended by the Fifth Auditor. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] says, it only comes out of the contingent expenses for that department. They will not expend more than would be expended by the Fifth Auditor himself; and I can see no reason why it should not be expended by the Coast Survey. There will be expended precisely the same amount of money which the Fifth Auditor himself would expend, as I said, and I see no reason why the plan should not be adopted.

Mr. DUNCAN. If the gentleman's time is not out, I will say a word. I see no reason for the passage of this amendment. There is no reason why the cost of employing a laborer to fix a buoy should not come out of the light-house fund, for the same expense would have to be incurred no matter out of what fund the expense is to be paid. I think, therefore, that amendment is unnecessary.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move an amendment to come in in the ninety-ninth line.

Strike out the words "granite light-house," and insert "light-house of granite, iron, or a combination of both," so that the section would read as follows, viz :

"Towards the erection of a light-house of granite, iron, or a combination of both, on the outer Minot ledge, at the entrance of Boston harbor, upon a plan to be approved by the Topographical Bureau; a contract for the building thereof to be made with the lowest responsible bidder who shall give sufficient security for the faithful performance of the same, and the work to be executed in strict conformity with the plan or plans approved by the Topographical Bureau, under the supervision of such person as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, $80,000."

I will say a word in explanation of this amendment. This is a very important point for the erection of a light-house—exceedingly so, to the navigation of the country. A light-house was carried away from there, some years ago. The committee had before them various plans for its erection. It is a point at which it is very difficult to construct a light-house which shall insure a resistance against the storms upon the Atlantic ocean. They had several plans before them for a structure of granite, and they were inclined to adopt some of them. However, since the bill has been reported to the House, they have had a plan submitted to them for a combination of granite and iron, which impressed them favorably; and they thought it best to leave the Topographical Bureau at liberty to select any of these plans which they might think best adapted for permanency and strength.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN, under instructions of the Committee on Commerce, offered the following amendment:

Insert after line one hundred and seventeen:
For the preservation of the light-house and dike-wall at Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL offered the following amendment:

In line one hundred and twenty strike out "$500," and insert "$1,500," so that the clause will read:
"For a light on the Long Wharf, in the harbor of New Haven, $1,500."

Mr. I. said: Mr. Chairman, the necessity of a light at that point, indicated by this section of the bill, is, I believe, admitted by the committee who had this subject under consideration. It is proposed to place it upon the end of what is called Long Wharf, in the New Haven harbor. The wharf is, of itself, about three fourths of a mile in length, and the point at which it is proposed to place the light is a very exposed situation. The collector of the port of New Haven was here in this city when this subject was before the committee, and I believe he informed the committee that a suitable light at this point could not be erected for less than $1,500. I have seen him within a few days in this city, and he says it is utterly useless to put a light there for the amount signified by the Committee on Commerce in this bill. As I before remarked, it is in a very exposed situation, and it appears to me that $1,500 is barely sufficient to raise a light there, and to build a shelter for the person who will have it in charge. I do not wish to detain the committee upon this subject; but it seems to me that if anything is to be done at this point, $500 is too little to accomplish the object.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will merely state, in the vindication of the course of the committee in relation to this matter, that the petitions for this light were submitted to the Fifth Auditor, upon whose advice and judgment they relied. They propose to put a mere beacon-light upon the end of the pier, to guide vessels into the harbor of New Haven. He recommended, and the committee inserted, $500. If a further sum is necessary, I have no objection to its being increased. I only state the facts which influenced the committee in their action. The Fifth Auditor thought $500 was a sum sufficient to erect such a light as was necessary at this point.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The Fifth Auditor knows nothing about the erection of a light at New Haven. The collector of that port knows much better what is necessary to construct a proper light.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is not in order. Debate has exhausted itself upon the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER offered the following amendment:

After line two hundred and fifteen insert:
For marking Joe Flogger Shoals, in the Delaware Bay, with first class nun-buoys and can-buoys, to be constructed and placed in their position under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, $3,000.

Mr. C. said: Mr. Chairman, there is scarcely a point upon our whole coast, or upon any of our bays or rivers, that can be said to be more dangerous, or that more imperatively demands the attention of the Government, than Joe Flogger Shoals. But a year or two ago a foreign vessel, of large burden, was cast away there, and, I think, every member of the crew, from captain to cook, were lost. I have now a letter before me, which says there is a vessel now upon that shoal. It is one very easily marked, and, if marked, it may be very easily avoided by any vessel ascending or descending the bay. It is now so dangerous that vessels do not think of ascending the bay in the night, unless it is a very quiet, clear, moonlight night. I ask, therefore, that this appropriation may be made, and I appeal to gentlemen of the Committee on Commerce to assist me in getting this item added to the appropriation bill. I have several amendments before me which I intended to offer, but if the committee will pass this I will forbear and take my chance for getting them in, one at a time, when another appropriation bill comes up.

Mr. DUNCAN. This is the first time this subject has been brought to the knowledge of the Committee on Commerce, and therefore we have had no evidence, one way or another, about it, except the statement now made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I hold in my hand a letter I have just received from the person in command of a United States steamer. He speaks of it as one of the most dangerous shoals upon any coast to navigators, and alludes to the fact that there is now a brig upon it. I hope it will be the pleasure of the committee to adopt this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the items providing for the State of Virginia:

For two spar-buoys, to be placed to buoy out Occapanock creek, $160.

Mr. B. said: I desire to state that the papers connected with that case were presented before the Committee on Commerce too late to be acted on. It is only an appropriation of $160, and is to place two spar-buoys at the mouth of Occapanock creek. I know personally, irrespective of the memorials which have been presented, of the necessity there is for this appropriation. It is at a point in which my constituents are less interested than anybody else, because they know the way to get into this harbor, while coasting vessels for the Chesapeake Bay, which do not belong there, find much difficulty. I mentioned this subject to the member of the Committee on Commerce from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN,] and he agreed with me in the propriety of the amendment. As I said, it is only for $160, and in which my constituents are less interested than anybody else. I hope the committee will adopt it.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANLY offered the following amendment:

For two buoys, to be placed at the mouth of Alligator river, in Albermarle Sound, $200.

Mr. S. said: I believe the Committee on Commerce had presented to them the petition of ship-owners and sailors in that part of the country, asking that buoys should be placed there; but they received them at a late period, and after they had reported this bill to the House. Some sixty or seventy vessels are constantly in the habit of passing in and out of that river, and two buoys will enable them to find their way in and out with safety. Two hundred dollars appropriated for that purpose will be of vast service to that section of the country, and I hope there will be no objection to putting that amendment in.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN offered the following amendment, to come in at line two hundred and sixty-two, at the end of appropriations for North Carolina:

For four large buoys to mark the two channels over the Frying-Pan Shoal, to be constructed and located under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, $1,600.

For four second class buoys to mark the Main and Oak Island channels, leading into the Cape Fear river, in addition to the buoys now authorized, to be constructed and located under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, $1,000.

Mr. DUNCAN. The Coast Survey, in a recent survey on that coast, have discovered a channel through the Frying-Pan Shoals, and I have letters from the secretary of the Light-House Board suggesting the necessity of placing buoys there.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the first clause under the head of appropriations for "Mississippi":

To be expended, without delay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The clause will then read:

For the erection of a light house at, or near the entrance of East Pascagoula river, instead of a former appropriation, $5,000; to be expended, without delay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN said: I will say but one word in explanation of the amendment. This appropriation has been made every Congress for the last five or six Congresses, and I can never make the Auditor of the Treasury, who has charge of the appropriations, understand that Congress is in earnest about it. Whenever I inquire of him, he seems to have forgotten about it. I simply want this amendment inserted, that he may understand that we want the appropriation expended.

Mr. HOUSTON. Those works, I think, ought not to be in the appropriation bill, and I hope the gentleman who has charge of it will resist their insertion.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN offered the following amendment, to come in after the last clause of the appropriation under the head of "Mississippi":

For Louisiana: For the examination and survey of the Ship Shoal and Raccoon Point, on the coast of Louisiana, with reference to the location and erection of a light house, and the procuring a plan for the same, $3,000.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, offered the following amendment, to come in at the same place:

For the construction of a light house on said Ship Island Shoal, or the west end of Last Island, commonly called Raccoon Point, as may on examination be deemed most expedient, $20,000.

Mr. MOORE said: I will state the reason why

I offer this amendment. Those shoals are very dangerous, lying on the outside of the island. There is no light-house on that coast between the Southwest Pass and Galveston, that can be seen by any vessel on the route from the Southwest Pass to Texas, or to Mexico. We have two light-houses upon our coast, but both of them are situated within bays, a long distance within those shoals, which are so dangerous. There has been a memorial sent to Congress by the captains of steamers, and by a considerable number of the owners, and by merchants, asking that this light-house be built. A number of vessels were lost upon that coast some years ago—one of them a British ship. Immediately west of that place, a French ship was lost some years ago. They are very dangerous shoals, and there ought to be some provision made either for a light-house on the west end of Last Island, which is a few miles north of these shoals, or upon the shoals themselves. I am told by a gentleman who is connected with the Coast Survey, that they believe that a light-house can be erected upon those shoals.

Mr. DUNCAN. I am sorry to rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Moore,] but I feel obliged to do it by the facts of the case. I have no doubt that a light-house is necessary somewhere in that vicinity. When petitions in relation to a light-house on Ship Shoal were referred to the Committee on Commerce, we referred them to the Fifth Auditor for such information as he could afford. He had in his office no chart showing the situation of these shoals. They are understood to be covered with water at high tide, and are some miles distant from the main land. The Fifth Auditor referred the petitions to the chief engineer of construction of light-houses for an estimate of cost. And in his communication, presuming, from the character of the bottom in that region, that the foundation was sand, he estimated that it would cost at least $52,000 to build a light-house on Ship Shoal. The Auditor objected on another ground: that this light-house, if erected on Ship Shoal, would be so distant from land, as to involve the necessity of keeping a vessel employed to convey wood and water and provisions for the three keepers necessary to keep that light-house. He suggested whether a light-house might not be erected on Racoon Point, the nearest land to the shoals, which would give the needed aid to navigation. We sought information of the officers of the Coast Survey, but they had no accurate charts of the soundings and depth of water, or of the situation of the shoals, and their distance from the land; but they stated that parties of the Coast Survey were serving there—one going down from New Orleans, and the other coming from Galveston; and that before the next meeting of Congress, they should be able to furnish to Congress all the necessary information upon the subject. The committee, therefore, did not feel at liberty, with the limited information before them, and with the uncertainty which hung over the matter, to recommend an appropriation for a light-house, but they preferred to wait until they should receive the result of the examination of the Coast Survey. But to insure the certainty that this point should be properly attended to, they saw fit to direct me to offer the amendment which I did, a few moments ago, providing for a survey. And before the next meeting of Congress we shall have all the information necessary to enable us properly to locate the light-house upon the shoal, or upon Last Island. I did not believe that by making the appropriation now, the construction of the light-house would be accelerated at all.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, offered the following amendment, to come in at the same place:

For three spar-buoys, to mark the channel of the harbor of refuge at Horn Island Pass, Mississippi, to be placed by the Coast Survey, $210.

Mr. M. said: I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is for a harbor of refuge for vessels coming in, when they do not happen to strike the pass.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the appropriations under the head of "Florida:"

For securing the light-house at the mouth of St. John's river, Florida, $10,000.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD offered the following amendment:

Strike out all between the word "Pass" and the word "fifty one," and insert: "or a light-house, as may be deemed most expedient upon further examination," in the following clause, under the head of "Texas:"

"For a light-boat, to be moored at Aransas Pass, instead of a light-house proposed by the act of March 3d, 1851, and for channel-buoys in said channel, and a buoy at Dollar Point, $15,000."

So that the clause would read:

"Texas: For a light-boat to be moored at Aransas pass, or a light-house, as may be deemed most expedient upon further examination, and for channel-buoys in said channel, and a buoy at Dollar Point, $15,000."

Mr. H. said: I would state that at the last Congress an appropriation was made for a light-house at Aransas Pass of $12,500. There has since been a survey, and the officers of the Coast Survey recommend that, instead of a light-house, a light-boat should be moored there; and there is reported the same appropriation for the light-boat as was made for the light-house.

I will state that it seems to me that this survey was not very well conducted. It is so esteemed by the pilots and the navigators who use that entrance. All I propose is, that the appropriation shall not be limited to the construction of a light-boat, but that the Department shall have power to construct a light-house, if, upon further examination, they shall find that a light-house is more expedient than a light-boat. I learn from the Fifth Auditor, that a light-house will cost less than a light-boat, and it costs less to keep it up, for the one is permanent, and the other is liable to be driven from its place, and to decay. I hope the discretion will be left with the Department to build a light-house, if, upon further examination, they deem it the better structure of the two.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Texas, whether the light placed either upon the light-house or upon the light-boat will subserve the interests of commerce at the same place?

Mr. HOWARD. Precisely at the same place.

Mr. HOUSTON. This seems to propose the substitution of one structure for another at that point.

Mr. HOWARD. No, not at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand it to be so.

Mr. HOWARD. I will state to the gentleman that this amendment is for a light-house, or for a light-boat, as the Department shall deem proper.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am speaking of the original paragraph of the bill. This paragraph, as I understand it, purports to substitute a light-boat for a light-ship, and appropriates $15,000. A light-house, as I understand, was authorized by the act of the 3d of March, 1851, and, as a matter of course, made this appropriation. I would like to know of the gentleman, [Mr. DUNCAN,] who has charge of the bill, what has become of that appropriation made on the 3d of March, for building a light-house at Aransas Pass?

Mr. DUNCAN. The appropriation has not been expended, and is still liable to be drawn for.

Mr. HOUSTON. That shows that this paragraph is unnecessary. If the Committee on Commerce had proposed to change the character of the improvement, and instead of a light-boat, to substitute a light-house, they should have introduced a provision to make available the money already appropriated. Why do they want to appropriate $15,000 for this house, when there stands now an appropriation of several thousand dollars, which is more than enough for it, if it was only made applicable to that object? It has not gone back to the surplus fund. These moneys are not carried back to the surplus funds, as they ought to be. But this money has not been appropriated long enough to go back to that fund. It was appropriated in 1851, and is still applicable to this improvement, for which they now propose to appropriate this $15,000. I move to strike out the $15,000, unless my friend [Mr. DUNCAN] will so alter it as to make it applicable to this improvement. There is no use in making a double appropriation.

Mr. DUNCAN. By the act of 1851, an appropriation was made for the location of a light-house at Aransas Pass. Before proceeding to the location of the light-house, it was thought necessary, by the Secretary of the Treasury, to have an examination. He intrusted that examination to the proper officers, and they reported that a light-boat was preferable, and a more suitable aid to navigation, than a light-house at that point. They also recommended that a channel buoy should be placed in the channel at that pass, and also at Dollar Point. The appropriation was therefore changed in conformity with their recommendation, and a small addition made to the amount appropriated, in order to enable them to fix those buoys in the channel, and at Dollar Point.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman does not seem to understand my point, and perhaps I am not understood by the committee. The law of 1851 made an appropriation of $12,500 for a light-house at Aransas Pass. Now, why not make that $12,500 applicable to the erection of that light-boat, instead of making another appropriation of $15,000? By doing that, you would make the appropriation for Aransas Pass $27,500, and I presume gentlemen do not want that.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will suggest whether it would not be necessary, in the alteration of the phraseology, to insert the words, "instead of the appropriation proposed by the act of March 1837?"

Mr. HOWARD. I will adopt that.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not remember where the amendment of the gentleman from Texas comes in, but I would suggest that the section be modified, so that it would read as follows:

"For a light-boat to be moored at Aransas Pass, instead of a light-house proposed by the act of March 3d, 1851, and for channel-buoys in said channel, and a buoy at Dollar Point, in addition to the appropriation of March, 1851, $2,500."

Mr. HOWARD. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is the same thing.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not the same thing. This appropriation leaves the other outstanding. It does not go back into the Treasury. The committee ought to know exactly what it appropriates.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Does the gentleman from Texas accept the modification that has been proposed—that in addition to the appropriation of March 3d, 1851, there be appropriated $2,500?

Mr. HOWARD. I have accepted it. Let the Clerk read the amendment as it now is.

The Clerk read the modified amendment, as follows:

"For a light-boat to be moored at Aransas Pass, or a light-house, as may be most expedient upon further examination, and for channel-buoys in said channel, and a buoy at Dollar Point, in addition to the sum appropriated for a light-house at said point, $2,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move at the end of the first section of the bill, the addition of the following:

For a light-house at the harbor of La Pointe, on Lake Superior, $5,000.

I will state, for the information of the committee, that the harbor of La Pointe is the only one at the west end of Lake Superior. There is no harbor nearer it than about two hundred miles. It is very important as a place of refuge for vessels in a storm. At night, as there is no light-house there, vessels cannot tell where the harbor lies, and consequently have to stand off all night. The object sought to be accomplished by my amendment is a very important one to the navigation of that lake.

Mr. DUNCAN. I can only say that the committee have not sufficient evidence of the necessity of it to recommend the appropriation.

Mr. EASTMAN. There has been no survey. I was never called upon to furnish any evidence. I had the assurance of the chairman of the committee that it would be put in. I could furnish testimony of the necessity and importance of it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. DUNCAN. For the perfection of the fourth section I move, after the words "March 3d," to insert the words "for the erection of a light-house on Flynn's Knoll," so that it will read as follows:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $30,000, appropriated by the act approved March 3d, 1851, for the erection of a light-house on Flynn's Knoll, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be applied to the erection of two-range beacon lights, for Gedney's Channel, to be placed near Point Comfort, in the State of New Jersey; and

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 146.

two-range beacon lights for the Swash channel of the harbor of New York, to be placed on Staten Island, near the Elm Tree beacon, and to be constructed under the direction of the Topographical Bureau, and according to the recommendation of the Light-House Board and the Superintendent of the Coast Survey; and for a large iron floating bell-beacon, to be moored off Flynn's Knoll, under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey."

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk having read the following section:

"Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all such reports shall, as speedily as may be, be laid before the Secretary of the Treasury, and if such as to authorize the work without further legislation, he shall forthwith proceed with it, otherwise such reports shall be laid before Congress at the next ensuing session; but in all cases where the person designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the fifth section of this act, does not report such preliminary examination as expedient, the provisions of this act shall, without delay, be carried into execution."

Mr. HOUSTON said: I should like to know of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] the application intended to be made by the seventh section? It seems to be conferring a very important power upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DUNCAN. I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that the section is identical with the one passed in the light-house bills for the last two or three years. The object is, I presume, as appropriations may sometimes be made without sufficient knowledge of the subject, that the Secretary of the Treasury being, by law, at the head of the light-house establishment, if he questions the propriety of an appropriation, he may, before proceeding with the work, have the site examined and surveyed. If it be deemed a proper one, it is proceeded with; and if it is required, he shall report to Congress at their next session.

Mr. HOUSTON. It applies to the appropriations generally in the bill.

Mr. DUNCAN. To all the appropriations, I presume.

Mr. EVANS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section. It is to carry out the act of March 3, 1851:

And be it further enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to appoint, immediately after the passage of this act, two officers of the Navy, of high rank, one officer of the corps of Engineers of the Army, one officer of the corps of Topographical Engineers of the Army, and two civilians of high scientific attainments, whose services may be at the disposal of the President, and an officer of the Navy and an officer of Engineers of the Army, as Secretaries, who shall constitute the Light-House Board of the United States, and shall have power to adopt such rules and regulations for the government of their meetings as they may judge expedient; and the board so constituted shall be attached to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under his superintendence shall discharge all the administrative duties of said office relating to the construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, sea-marks, and their appendages, and embracing the security of foundations of works already existing, procuring illuminating and other apparatus, supplies and materials of all kinds for building and for rebuilding when necessary, and keeping in good repair, the light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, and buoys of the United States.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be ex officio President of the Light-House Board of the United States; and the said Board, at their first meeting, shall proceed to ballot for one of their members as chairman, and the member who shall receive the majority of ballots of the whole board shall be declared by the president to be chairman of the Light-House Board, who shall, in the absence of the president of the board, preside over their meetings, and do and perform such acts as may be required by the rules of the board.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Light-House Board shall meet four times in each year for the transaction of general and special business, each meeting to commence on the first Monday in March, June, September, and December; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to convene the Light-House Board whenever, in his judgment, the exigencies of the service may require it.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to cause such clerks as are now employed on light-house duties in the Treasury Department, to be transferred to the Light-House Board without any change of salaries, and to provide the necessary accommodations for the secretaries and clerks, for the preservation of the archives, models, drawings, &c., &c., and for holding the meetings of the board; and that he cause to be transferred to the proper officers of the Light-House Board, all the archives, books, documents, drawings, models, returns, apparatus, &c., &c., belonging to the light-house establishment of the United States.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board, immediately after being organized, to arrange the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific, and Lake coasts of the United States, into light-house districts, not exceeding twelve in number; and the President is hereby authorized and required to direct that an officer of the Army or Navy be assigned to each district, as a light-house inspector, subject to and under the orders of the Light-house Board, who shall receive for such service the same pay and emoluments that he would be entitled to by law for the performance of duty in the regular line of his profession, and no other, except the legal allowance per mile when traveling under orders connected with his duties.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the said Light-House Board, by and with the consent and approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, be authorized and required to cause to be prepared and distributed among the light-keepers, inspectors, and others, employed in the light-house establishment, such rules, regulations, and instructions, as shall be necessary for securing an efficient, uniform, and economical system of administering the light-house establishment of the United States, and to secure responsibility from them; which rules, regulations, and instructions, when approved, shall be respected and obeyed until altered and annulled by the same authority.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board to cause to be prepared by the engineer, secretary of the board, or by such officer of engineers of the Army as may be detailed for that service, all plans, drawings, specifications, and estimates of cost of all illuminating and other apparatus, and of construction and repair of towers, buildings, &c., connected with the light-house establishment, and no bid or contract shall be accepted or entered into, except upon the decision of the board at a regular or special meeting, and through their properly-authorized officer.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That hereafter all materials for the construction and repair of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, &c., &c., shall be procured by public contracts, under such regulations as the board may from time to time adopt, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and all works of construction, renovation, and repair, shall be made by the orders of the board, under the immediate superintendence of their engineer, secretary, or of such engineer of the Army as may be detailed for that purpose.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board to furnish, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, all the estimates of expense which the several branches of the light-house service may require, and such other information as may be required, to be laid before Congress at the commencement of each session.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That all acts, and parts of acts, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed, and all acts, and parts of acts, relating to the light-house establishment of the United States, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and necessary to enable the Light-House Board, under the superintendence of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all duties relating to the management, construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, sea-marks, and their accessories, including the procuring and testing of apparatus, supplies, and materials of all kinds for illuminating, building, and rebuilding, when necessary, maintaining and keeping in good repair the light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, and sea-marks of the United States; and the second and third sections of the act, making appropriations for light-houses, light-vessels, buoys, &c., approved March 3d, 1851, are hereby declared to be in full force, and shall have the same effect as though this act had not passed: Provided, That no additional salary shall be allowed to any civil, military, or naval officer, who shall be employed on the Light-House Board, or who may be in any manner attached to the light-house service of the United States under this act: And provided further, That it shall not be lawful for any member of the Light-House Board, inspector, light-keeper, or other person in any manner connected with the light-house service, to be engaged, either directly or indirectly, in any contract for labor, materials, or supplies for the light-house service, nor to possess, either as principal or agent, any pecuniary interests in any patents, plan, or mode of construction, or illumination, or in any article of supply for the light-house service of the United States.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I rise to a question of order upon this amendment. We are upon a general appropriation bill for the service of the light-house establishment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland is for the organization of a light-house board going into all the details. It is foreign to the subject of the appropriation upon which we are now engaged.

Mr. EVANS. I will merely remark that that board was appointed by a clause in a similar act last year. This is to prescribe the duties of that board.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order. He considers the amendment germane.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, there has been no subject so long before Congress, and so much written upon as this one. The documents connected with it are more voluminous than almost any others in our archives. In 1846, Mr. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, lent all his power to bring about the very reform in the light-house system which I now desire to effect, and was only prevented from the accomplishment of his purpose by the Mexican war, as is well known to many gentlemen within hearing. By the amendment, not one dollar of appropriation is needed. Additional salary is proposed to be given to no one. It only provides for a proper superintendence of our lights, and the remarks of gentlemen to-day demonstrate the necessity for the provision. The Committee on Commerce has heretofore acted without sufficient knowledge as to the proper location of lights. Congress cannot legislate without this necessary information. My proposition gives no power to this board to expend money without the authority of Congress, and then only under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. It does not prescribe any system of lights. Yesterday I spoke in regard to what ought to be the system of lights to be up to the requirements of the age; but the amendment adopts no plan. I knew, when I addressed the committee on yesterday, what lights men of science, practical mathematicians and opticians, on becoming connected with this establishment, would adopt. I knew they would adopt lights which would cost little, and be efficient, instead of inefficient and expensive ones. It was my desire on yesterday to spare the feelings of those connected with the bureau here, and who have the control of our light-house system; but I shall be justified in being less particular now. Opposition from bureaus comes up here to every proper act of reform.

I have only connected myself with this measure out of humane and philanthropic motives, and with the intention of carrying out the express design of the laws before me, for the benefit of the whole commercial and navigating interest of the country. I want extravagant expenditures reduced, the corruption which has so long existed here rooted out, and an end put to that set of contractors in the northern cities who plunder the Treasury out of hundreds of thousands of dollars. I want this system placed, as it is in other countries of the world, under the superintendence of scientific gentlemen without salaries. For my disinterested efforts, I have been accused of being under the influence of certain persons. Those who make the charge are, unfortunately, destitute of all mathematical, chemical, and optical knowledge, as their own public reports evidence. They have made very unfortunate public mistakes in figures, such as arithmeticians do not make.

It behooves, then, those anxious for economy and improvement to adopt this great measure of proper reform. It still leaves with the Fifth Auditor the auditing of the accounts of the system. He now audits his own accounts, and I only want that our system shall be reduced to uniformity in that respect. I attack no one. I have no interest in the matter. I propose no plan to extend governmental patronage, but only ask a board of scientific men who are acquainted with the requirements of the age, serving without pay. Officers of the Navy can be sent to inspect our lights with half the money now paid to collectors of your ports. You pay the collectors two and a half per cent. for that service, but they do not visit more than one or two lights, and there are hundreds that are not visited at all. They never thoroughly inspect the lights—whether they illuminate the whole or only part of the horizon, whether the oil be of proper quality, and a thousand and one other things that should be strictly attended to for the proper superintendence of that great interest, which has for the last twenty years attracted the attention of the world. Every maritime country has adopted the system as recommended in my proposition. It should be adopted here. This light-house report has been printed for the last six months, and there is no excuse for any gentleman not having read it. Documents treating of the same subject have been before us for the last ten years. Mr. Secretary Walker's report—a model of intelligence—has been before us for the last six years.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I regret that I cannot concur with the gentleman from Maryland in the views he has expressed, both yesterday and to-day, on this very important subject; but I do not mean now to be understood by the committee as being in the end opposed to some reform in the direction to which he has called our attention. It must be apparent to the committee, however, that we are not now in a situation to institute the very searching reform which his amendment proposes. What is it? Why, we have a light-house system that has been growing up under the auspices of a particular department of this Government—the Treasury Department—and superintended by the Fifth Auditor for now more than half a century.

Mr. EVANS. Thirty years.

Mr. SEYMOUR. It has been for a long time, I cannot say whether quite half a century, under the particular supervision of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury. I do not now stand here to justify any errors which will always exist in the administration of an extensive and complicated system. I have no doubt that there are improvements which may be made in the administration of this system as it is now organized; but I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact, that we have been advancing for a year or two back in the very direction which the gentleman from Maryland has indicated. As our system has increased, as the extent of this service has magnified and spread over this widely-extended country, it has been found necessary, for the purpose of procuring that information which the Treasury Department and its subordinate, the Fifth Auditor, as well as the Committee on Commerce and members of this House, should have to refer to other boards, and obtain it through their action. And it was for that very reason that, at the last Congress, a law was passed—to which I referred in some remarks I made at the opening of the discussion upon this bill—by which the Superintendent of the Coast Survey was directed to make those examinations necessary to determine where improvements in our light-house system should be established. That information is valuable. By that process, without incurring a great deal of additional expense, we are profiting. I prefer to have it go on as at present, for by so doing, we may draw all the information required in regard to the expediency of these constructions from that very able board.

The gentleman alluded, yesterday, to some extensive improvements of a scientific character, which, he said, had been made in Europe, and which had been introduced extensively under the French Government, in the shape of lenses, used instead of reflectors, for the lights of these light-houses. Well, our predecessors had their attention called to that subject, and they provided, in a clause of the last bill which was passed by Congress upon this matter, of the 3d of March, 1851, that the Secretary of the Treasury should exercise a proper discretion upon this subject, and wherever he judged it would be for the benefit of the commerce of the country, and subserve the interest of the light-house system, he was authorized to substitute the Fresnel lenses instead of the reflectors; and that power he possesses now. It is a permanent law, a permanent provision, enacting the very thing which the gentleman desires. The law confers upon the Secretary of the Treasury the power to adopt these lenses, provided, upon inspection and upon trial, it shall be found that this French improvement is one suitable to our occasion, and conforms to the principles of economy, which we wish always to subserve.

Mr. EVANS. But the Fifth Auditor has always thwarted its introduction.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move to strike out one and insert two in the fifth section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to go back.

Mr. SKELTON. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce raised the question of order, that this is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled that question of order.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it in order to move that the committee rise and report the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending which must be acted upon before the committee rise.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr.

EVANS,] by inserting in the sixth line "two" instead of "one."

My object in doing so, is to make a few remarks upon the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.] The attention which I have been compelled to pay to this subject of light-houses during almost this entire Congress, has convinced me of the necessity of changing our system, and the propriety of constituting a board such as is recommended in the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.] There is a want of system in our present light-house establishment. While I am not disposed to subscribe to all the charges which are preferred by the Light-House Board against the present system, and I am willing to render all due honor to that venerable man who may be considered the father of the light-house establishment of the United States, I yet believe that the time has arrived to reorganize that department of the public service. The circumstances of the country have greatly changed in this respect, and the light-house system has become greatly extended from the river St. Croix to the Pacific ocean, and over the vast chain of lakes. We are compelled, from the necessity of the case, and from the necessity of light-houses in parts of the country which are yet sparsely settled, to rely upon the officers of the Coast Survey, and of our Navy, for the information we have of the necessity of light-houses, and are compelled to place in their hands the location and construction of them. There is a great defect in the present system of appropriations for light-houses. Petitions come up to Congress perhaps from interested individuals, perhaps from individuals who have no higher motive than to wish a job for building a light-house, or to place some friend in care of it. They are submitted to a committee of Congress, who are not likely to be very well informed upon this subject, and who are, therefore, liable to make improper appropriations, and to provide for light-houses at points where they are not necessary, and to authorize too many in one district, and too few in another. They have been located without reference to any system on the southern portion of the sea-coast, which, from the fact that it was sparsely settled, and without interested parties to petition Congress, has to this day been very inadequately provided with the facilities which light-houses give to the commerce of the country. I have endeavored in this bill to remedy some of these defects. The first thing in order to a proper location of light-houses is, that some responsible board should be established who will be enabled to look over the whole country, and see at what points coast-lights are necessary, and at what points only harbor-lights, and present that information to Congress. I believe it to be impossible that any individual, sitting in his office at Washington, is competent at this day properly to direct the greatly-extended light-house establishment of this country—on the sea-coast and the lakes.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. When my five minutes had expired, I had referred to a part of the considerations which I wished to present at this time. I wish to say further, after having shown that we have now, under the provisions of the existing law, what will give us, if they are really valuable, all the improvements of the Fresnel lenses, that I think the establishment of this Light-House Board will be attended with great expense in the administration of this whole light-house system. I know the provision which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] has introduced in his amendment says, "that there shall be no additional compensation given to these officers." Without meaning to call in question the honor, integrity, or ability of this board, constituted as it will be, of a majority of officers of the Army and Navy, I submit to this committee whether the estimates sent to us may not be expected to be vastly larger than they are at the present time? I think we may infer this from every thing we see in regard to the execution of service by military and naval men. It is not a part of their duty to calculate the cost. I wish to retain the superintendence of this matter where it has been, under the supervision of civilians, and if we have not enough of them, or if they are not of the proper character, let us have more, or let them be changed. I am opposed to constituting a board, a majority of whom shall be composed of naval officers and military men, for the purpose of giving us estimates upon this subject.

Mr. CARTTER. I do not understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] as replying to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN,] but to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is in order, and will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] a question. I think he is in error when he states that this board is to be composed entirely of officers of the Army and Navy.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I said a majority of the Army and Navy.

Mr. MOORE. There are to be civilians also.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to say further upon this subject, that it is now a disputed question—and the Committee on Commerce have files of matter before them upon this subject—to determine whether these Fresnel lenses are, after all, the best invention for lighting up the coast. The present Auditor contends that our reflectors show as good light as the Fresnel light does. Others contend that the Fresnel is the best. It is for this reason we have left this matter at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Besides, it is well known that the expense of the Fresnel light will vastly increase the expenses of the establishment. It is expensive, and I am told, upon good authority, that the very proposition to exchange reflectors for these Fresnel lights, will cost us half a million of dollars.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] has mistaken the language. There is not a word about Fresnel lenses in the amendment, and so far from their costing more, they will cost less.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I am replying to the argument of the gentleman on yesterday. Whether he has got the Fresnel light in his amendment or not, I do not know.

Mr. DUNCAN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to strike out the first paragraph of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.]

I offer this amendment for the purpose of enabling me to make a few remarks on the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland. I can see no good reason why we should not adopt it. It creates no additional salaries, and does not add anything to the expenses of the light-house fund, inasmuch as the board which it constitutes is to be appointed from the officers of the Navy and Army who cannot be more profitably employed for the Government.

The time has arrived when it is necessary to make some different disposition of this subject. Our light-house appropriations have grown into a vast system. I have no idea that any intelligent board of scientific men, appointed as is proposed by this amendment, would have made the appropriations half as large as those contained in the bill under consideration. These appropriations are made, in most cases, in advance of surveys. They are generally gotten up by local influences, and oftentimes without much reference to the wants of commerce. If an intelligent board had control of the subject this abuse would be corrected.

There is another reason why this board should be created. If the Fifth Auditor, against whom I have nothing to say, were a young man who kept pace with the science and improvements of the day, still it would be impossible for him to supervise the present system so as to correct its abuses. It is impossible for him to leave his office in Washington for that purpose, and he has no men of science under his order whom he can detail for that service. Some new arrangement is loudly called for by the public interests. It has been demonstrated by the report of the Light House Board, that our whole system of light is badly managed. It needs more supervision than the Fifth Auditor can give to it. The report to which I have alluded, shows that in our system, the towers and buildings are not generally well constructed, so much so, that large sums for repairs are annually required, that they are deficient in accommodations for necessary supplies, that the lanterns are badly constructed, and that there is a great waste of oil and a want of care of the public property.

It further appears from the same report, that the lighting apparatus is badly constructed and has frequently to be renewed at great expense. The report states, "that the floating lights of the United States are comparatively useless, for want of efficient lamps and parabolic reflectors." The report also shows that many of these light-houses and light-ships are so improperly located and constructed, that they mislead instead of guiding the mariner. It shows that our system of beaconage and buoyage is inefficient, and not legally nor properly managed.

The imperfect state of our light-house system attracted the attention of Mr. Walker, while Secretary of the Treasury, and he sent an agent to Europe, to examine into the lights of other countries; and the result was, that he recommended, in a report to Congress, the adoption of the French, or lenticular system, instead of the reflectors now in use. The Light-House Board, in their late report, say:

"That if all our present lights were fitted with lens apparatus of equal power to the reflectors now in use, the annual expense for supplies of oil and cleaning materials would cost little more than one fourth as much as is now expended for these articles of supply annually; that is, that the supplies now costing upwards of $152,000, would not exceed $38,000 to $42,000, making an annual saving of $110,000 to $115,000. That in addition to the greater superiority in brilliancy, power, and economy of the lenses, compared to the reflectors, they possess the great advantage of durability, to the extent of never requiring to be renewed."

Not only is the lenticular system the cheapest, but it furnishes far the most brilliant light, which can be seen at the greatest distance. I find that the advantage of the new system is thus summed up on page 602 of the report:

"That if we take into account the first cost of construction, and the expense of their maintenance, we shall find, in respect to the effect produced, the new system (dioptric) is still from one and a half to twice as advantageous as the old."

Our present system is far behind that of England and France, both in science and economy.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. My friend from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] asked me to throw some light upon the subject. [Laughter.] I will not do it, as it might be reflecting upon the committee, if he will excuse me. I spoke upon this point a short time ago; and I say here, frankly, that I am not prepared to take issue with the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] nor with other gentlemen who have spoken upon the same side of the question. Not at all. The point I make is this: that this amendment proposes a radical change in the light-house system, and we have not sufficiently considered it. I have turned my attention somewhat to this matter, and I am free to say that I am not prepared to vote for a radical change in our system of light-houses, until the matter has been investigated more fully than it has been. I am not one of those members of the House, I hope, who come in here and object to every improvement proposed, upon the ground that I have not had time to look at it. I am one of those who are of the opinion that a radical change in a system of long standing ought not to be made, without a pretty thorough investigation of its necessity and propriety.

Now, sir, if I know anything about Congress, I do know that the session preceding the presidential election is precisely, of all others, that session when questions of practical utility are least attended to; and I am, therefore, at this session of Congress, opposed to this House making any radical change in respect to our light-house system, which is so much connected with the whole of our navigation, without a thorough investigation of that subject.

Well, they tell us that the report of this Light-House Board has been communicated to us; but when?

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. Five or six months ago.

Mr. EVANS. The substance of it has been here for ten years.

Mr. BAYLY. I know when it was communicated; but when was it put into the hands of any of us?

Mr. EVANS. I have had it in my possession for several months.

Mr. BAYLY. I know I had one of the earliest copies, and that it was placed in my hands a long time before it was communicated to the House. I had one of the proof-sheets.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I wish to say that this matter, which was properly before the Committee on Commerce, was not laid before us in its present shape, printed, until the middle of June.

Mr. BAYLY. Yes, that was about the time.

Mr. EVANS. I wish merely to state to the gentleman, that the same matter was here in 1846, and in every one of Mr. Walker's reports, and although not in this shape, all the drawings and letters were here in February; the report was not.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, it is not a very enviable thing for a man to have to confess his ignorance, but I do say that this report has come in at such a late period of the session that I have not had time to master it, and I believe that I have as much diligence as most lazy men. [Laughter.] I have not mastered it, and I say that I stand by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOWARD. If there be no objection, I will now withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 312, "making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STRATTON obtained the floor.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a question of privilege. I was on yesterday or to-day appointed a member of the committee raised to investigate certain charges against the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask to be excused from serving on that committee. My engagements are such as to make it impossible for me to attend it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Before that question is put, I would beg the privilege of saying to the House that I am appointed on that committee, also. I wish merely to say, that at this late period of the session, and with the mass of business of a public and private character pressing upon me, it is physically impossible for me to undertake the discharge of the duties of that committee, and I must therefore ask to be excused.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is that a question which can take the floor from the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. STRATTON?]

I do not so understand it. The SPEAKER. It may become a question of privilege, provided the gentleman from Texas is already on two committees.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It may become necessary that this committee should sit during the recess, and I hope that the gentleman from Texas will not be excused, if the House will give the committee that power. Until that fact is ascertained, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request to be excused. If the business is to be done during the session, I shall vote to excuse the gentleman; but if it is to be done during the recess, I shall insist on his serving.

The question was then taken on excusing Mr. HOWARD from serving on the committee, and it was decided in the negative.

JOHN MOORE WHITE.

Mr. STRATTON. I am anxious to leave Washington to-morrow morning; but there is a bill from the Senate upon the Speaker's table for the relief of an old gentleman, in my district, now in his eighty-third year, whose claim has been before Congress for four or five years, and I am very desirous that the House shall pass it before I leave. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be taken up. It is Senate bill No. 318, "for the relief of John Moore White."

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. MEADE. There have been cases of hardship pending here for thirty years, to my certain knowledge.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MILLSON. I feel constrained to object.

Mr. STRATTON. Then I move that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of taking up that bill.

Mr. STRATTON. I desire, in a single remark, to state to the House what the character of the bill is. It is for the relief of the son of a revolutionary officer—

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order. Mr. STRATTON. I ask the indulgence of the House to make a single remark.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. STRATTON. I hope the House will permit me to make a brief statement of this case. I have not occupied five minutes of the time of this House this session—

[Cries of "I object!"]

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I ask for tellers on the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHANDLER, and JONES of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. HENN. I move to reconsider the vote taken on yesterday, by which the House refused to refer the steamboat bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for a recount on the motion of the gentleman from New York. I think there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, a recount will be had.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. SACKETT. I have been trying for several days to get the floor upon some bill with a view of addressing the House upon a subject on which I desire to publish my views. The session is so far advanced, and the probability that I may be able to get the floor is so small, that I desire the leave of the House to publish my speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. Is the gentleman from New York in order? The House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MEADE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Remarks are not in order while the motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was upon the floor, making a point of order. How, then, could the motion to adjourn be made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia, however, was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rose when the gentleman from New York was on the floor, and made a point of order on him, that he was not in order in proceeding with remarks whilst the House was dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair responded to that, that it was not in order for the gentleman from New York to make a speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to any gentleman publishing a speech that has not been delivered in the House. I want to hear what they have to say.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. AVERETT. I would respectfully inquire of the Chair, whether there is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. There is not, and a motion is made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] that the House do now adjourn.

WIDOW OF THE LATE COLONEL MCKEE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw that motion for one moment, as a personal favor to myself. I have a small favor to ask of the House, and now is a good time to do it. The House can grant an act of justice in two minutes, before they adjourn.

Mr. AVERETT. I must insist—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope the quorum question will not be raised.

The SPEAKER. Nothing in the way of business can be done, except by the unanimous consent of the House, a quorum being present, until the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STRATTON] is disposed of.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. MEADE. I will withdraw it to hear what the gentleman from Kentucky has to say.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My friend from Virginia having kindly withdrawn his motion, my object is to ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and pass a private bill which has been reported from the Committee on Claims, and which appeals both to the justice and to the sympathies of this House. It is a bill for the relief of the widow and orphan children of the late Colonel William R. McKee, who commanded the second Kentucky regiment, and fell at the battle of Buena Vista. His horse, accoutrements, and some money upon his person, were taken from him by the Mexican forces, and the Committee on Claims have reported a bill for the relief of his widow and children, covering a sum supposed to be equal to the amount of money upon his person, and the value of his horse and accoutrements. I need not say to this House, that he spent thrice as much money in raising the regiment as the sum now asked as an act of justice, for his widow and children, who are suffering.

If the House only saw a letter which I have received on the subject, they would not hesitate a moment to comply with my request. The bill has passed the Committee on Claims, and I hope the House will take it up.

Mr. CARTTER. There are one hundred cases just as meritorious as this, and I will not consent that one should be taken up now, unless all of them can be acted on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will vote for them all if they are as meritorious as this.

Mr. AVERETT. I rise to a question of order. It has been shown that there is no quorum present, and I submit that we have no right to transact business without—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will allow this bill to be acted on.

Mr. CARTTER. If we had time to act upon them all, I should be willing this should be acted on with the rest, but as we have not, I object.

ETHERIZATION.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to what ought to be a question of privilege—abuse in the Capitol. I am quite sure the Speaker will have it corrected when it comes to his knowledge. I understand a committee-room of this House is used as a sort of restaurant, where liquor is used by persons having claims before Congress. I know the Speaker will have it corrected when it comes to his knowledge. It is an abuse from which we suffer every day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If it be in order, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] has objected to taking up the bill indicated by me a moment ago, and, therefore, unanimous consent cannot be had, I will move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to suspend the rules. There is already such a motion pending when it was ascertained that there was no quorum present.

Mr. CARTTER. I will say to my friend from Kentucky, that if he will bring forward the case of Mrs. Hertz, which stands upon fully as high merits as is presented by his case, I will forego my objection.

Mr. AVERETT. I rise to a question of order. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Not except by unanimous consent.

Mr. AVERETT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I call for tellers in order to see whether there is a quorum present.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HENN. Is it in order to move that the House take a recess?

The SPEAKER. Not except by unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

The question was then taken upon Mr. AVERETT's motion, and it was agreed to; and

The House adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of Joseph S. Houston and 51 others, of Mississippi, praying for the removal of the land office from Augusta to Paulding, in that State.

Also, the petition of J. Downes and 7 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of James Campbell and 18 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of E. Bradshaw and 43 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of John C. Terrell and 133 others, for the same.

Also, the petition of Wm. A. Stone and 17 others, Senators, and Stephen D. Johnson and 71 others, members, of the Mississippi Legislature, making the same prayer, and also praying for change of the boundaries of the Augusta and Washington land districts.

By Mr. SIBLEY: Papers relating to the claim of William Dahl, for services as assistant marshal in taking the census of 1850.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 25, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Department of the Interior, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the 9th instant, a report from the Superintendent of the Census, with various documents connected therewith; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I give notice that I shall, in half an hour, move to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

JAMES POOL.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to postpone the previous orders, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution to authorize the settlement of the accounts of James Pool. I make this appeal to the Senate as a matter of charity. This man is a poor blacksmith who has been here during the last eight or nine months, and has a small claim against the Government. He has been prosecuting it himself at his own expense, and he has appealed to me to ask the Senate to take it up.

The motion was agreed to. The joint resolution was accordingly read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle, upon principles of equity and justice, the claim of James Pool, arising out of the service of himself and his striker, in the blacksmith shops of the Seneca, the Delaware, and the Shawnee tribes of Indians, and pay him any balance that may be found due, provided that the amount shall not exceed $3,521 67.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill from the House, to "provide for executing the public printing and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes." I think, if we design to pass the bill at all this session, it ought to be passed to-day. We are obliged to have the public printing; and I hope we shall immediately proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope that motion will not be urged. It will necessarily lead to debate.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Suppose it should lead to debate; if we do not act upon it to-day, then there will be no use taking it up to-morrow. It will lead to no more debate to-day than to-morrow. It is a public measure that ought to be acted upon, and I want to have the final action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall be compelled to vote against the motion of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, though I always vote with great reluctance against any motion made by him. This is a question that has been a long time before us, and I think it ought to have been disposed of long since, when we could have had time to consider it. But now, if it is passed at all, it must be passed without consideration; because, within the limited time which we can now devote to it, I deem it impossible that Senators who have not looked thoroughly into it, can act understandingly upon it. I shall be compelled to vote against taking up the bill, because, if it is taken up, it will postpone, and perhaps defeat measures which are of indispensable necessity.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it is known to the Senate that I am a member of the Committee on Printing. My honorable friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] was chairman of that committee for the whole of the last Congress, and during a great part of the present session; and I certainly regret very much that he has retired from the committee. This subject has been before the Committee on Printing, consisting, at present, so far as the Senate is concerned, of the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN], who is chairman, my friend from Texas, [Mr. Rusk], and myself. If this bill should be taken up, my friend from Maine, with my concurrence, is prepared to submit an entire substitute for it, which will be seriously urged upon the attention of the Senate. Whether a majority of the body would be prepared to concur in that substitute, I do not know. But if it should be rejected, I have to say to the Senate, that I shall propose, and I presume that my friend from Maine may also propose, several important amendments to the bill.

I have become convinced that it is absolutely necessary that we should change the existing system for the execution of the public printing, and I am prepared to go with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania in an effort to make a suitable and proper change in that system. But, sir, the subject ought to be fully and carefully examined by the Senate. My own belief is that it will take several days to examine it, and to bring the Senate to a judgment upon the subject. It is utterly vain to think of passing this bill at the present session of Congress, and if it be taken up it will be to the sacrifice of business that is now nearly completed, and to the prejudice of the public interests in a very high degree.

There is no necessity of passing this bill at the present session of Congress. I will concur with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, to make this bill, if it be in order to do so, the special order for the first day of the next session of Congress. We can then take it up when we may have leisure; we can give it a full and careful consideration, and can act upon it certainly before the middle of December; and thus consummate the joint action of the two Houses before it becomes necessary to let out the printing for the next Congress under the existing system. I as much desire the consummation of legislation with a view to prevent the letting out of the printing for the next Congress under the existing system as any member of the Senate; but unless a majority of the Senate are prepared to say that they are now willing to devote a considerable time to the consideration of this subject, I trust the bill will not be taken up.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senate will take up this bill, and act upon it. I differ with many honorable Senators in relation to the idea which seems to be very prevalent in this body, that the speeches enter into acts passed by Congress. One would infer from what is said here every day, that no bill would have any virtue in it unless it were discussed. Now, I think the intrinsic merits of a measure depends upon its provisions. For a novelty—as the people of this country are fond of novelty—I would respectfully propose to the Senate, as we have talked for nine months without voting, that for the remainder of the session, during the little time we have, we vote without talking, take it for granted that Senators understand the subjects that come before them, and that our constituents will understand our votes on the record. I do not see the necessity of consuming the remainder of the session in discussing every little proposition that comes forward. All the Senators agree that this is a proposition which ought to have been acted upon long ago, and that it is necessary that it should be acted upon now. I venture to say that every Senator on this floor has made up his mind upon this subject, and that discussion will have no beneficial effect. I hope the Senate will take the vote at once, and act immediately upon the subject.

Mr. SMITH. I fully concur in the opinion which the honorable Senator from Mississippi has expressed, in regard to speaking generally. I agree, that we have on many questions which come before the Senate, more discussion than is necessary or useful. I am not, however, prepared to say that a subject of this importance should receive any disposition at the hands of the Senate without an examination. The honorable Senator says that he believes that every member of the Senate understands all about this bill, and that every Senator is perfectly familiar with its provisions. I do not know but that it is so. It so happens, however, that there are several Senators about me who have not seen the bill, and who have not given the subject any consideration. I do not believe that one Senator out of ten has read the bill, or knows its contents. If, however, it is the pleasure of the majority to take up the bill, I shall acquiesce; but I am confident that there is not time at this session to dispose properly of the subject.

Mr. CASS. We have been here now about nine months, and during that time the public printing has been badly executed and very much delayed—certainly to the injury of the public service. There is not a Senator here who does not know it, and will not say so. Now, a simple proposition for the appointment of a printer, with security enough to satisfy every one, has passed the House of Representatives after due deliberation, and it comes before the Senate for consideration. There is not a member of this body who cannot make up his mind about it in fifteen minutes. It appears to me that every consideration of public duty requires the passage of this measure, and we should act upon it immediately. The returns of the census have not yet been ordered to be printed, on account of the condition of the public printing. Let us go on and make this experiment. We have found that the other plan which we have tried has been unsuccessful; and what we want now is, to have the public printing promptly executed. I hope the bill will be taken up and passed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am opposed to taking up this bill. I disagree entirely with the honorable Senator from Michigan with regard to the contract system. I say the experiment has not failed, but we have failed. There is the same law, I understand, providing for the printing of the Departments, as for the printing of Congress. That printing is let out to the lowest bidder, but there is no failure there. And why? Because the bidders understand that when the contracts are made, there is no power to release them. But the bidding for the printing of Congress has not been based upon considerations relating to the economy with which the printing can be done. It has been based upon the facility with which Congress would relax the provisions of the law in behalf of favorites, who may have done the public printing. That is the reason why the experiment has failed. I say that we have got a good law now—the best that we could possibly have—one that will practically answer all the purposes designed, if we only adhere to it, and execute it; but as long as we do not adhere to it—as long as we put one thing upon the statute-book, and then allow men to come in and take contracts at prices for which they know they cannot execute the work, and we, good, easy souls, sit here and tell them to go on, and we will help them out of the public crib, to make up their losses—the system will fail; but it is not the fault of the system, it is not the fault of the printers; it is the fault of Congress. For these reasons I am opposed to taking up the bill. I wish to let this system have a fair operation; and then, if it fails, it will be time enough to try something else.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan says that we have been nine months in session, and done nothing practical on the subject of the public printing. The honorable Senator might have gone further, and said that not a week has passed, during that time, that some Senator has not endeavored to bring this subject before the body, with a view to action on this, or some bill embracing substantially the same provisions. I am of the opinion that there is a majority here ready to consider, and act upon this subject now. At the opening of this session, the Committee on Printing were unable to agree upon any plan, and so reported to us. Since that report the committee has been reorganized in part, the Senator from Texas taking the place of the Senator from Arkansas; and within a few days past we have a second report, showing still, that the committee are unable to agree. I understand that two of the three gentlemen composing the committee are opposed to the proposition before us. I am in favor of it. The bill before us may be defective in some respects; but it is better than no bill at all, and, therefore, I am willing to take it up, and I am anxious to vote upon it, not to debate it. And now, Mr. President, to avoid a further waste of time, I hope a vote will be taken on taking up the bill, and that this may be regarded as a test question, if it be taken up that we proceed to dispose of it before adjourn, and if the motion fails, that no further effort will be made during this session to urge it upon the consideration of the Senate.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania respecting that. I hope it will be regarded as a test question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not a member of the Committee on Printing at present, but I was a member of that committee; and during the time that I was upon it, I examined this subject thoroughly. I will say, in justification of myself, that I prepared a projet of a bill substantially the same in its provisions as this, which I was desirous of bringing before the Senate for action, but I never could get sufficient support and encouragement to induce or authorize me to do so. I labored at it from the beginning of the session up to the time when I left the Committee on Printing, but I could get no one who felt anxiety enough to aid me in the matter. The bill which I proposed, though in its general provisions like this, was, I think, free from the objections which this bill presents upon its face.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot go into the consideration of the merits of this bill at this time.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not going into the merits of the bill.

The PRESIDENT. The question simply is on taking up the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going on to state reasons why I think the bill ought not to be taken up. I think the bill ought not to be taken up, because it contains a great many defects which we have not time to remedy, and because a thorough examination of it, so as to see its merits on the one side, and its demerits on the other, so as to make them intelligible to the Senate, would occupy the whole week, unless Senators have taken up the bill, and examined the subject themselves previous to this time. So far as my acquaintance extends, this has not been the case with Senators, for many of them have told me so.

I do not think there is a pressing necessity upon us at this time, which should induce us to postpone all the other practical business of the session for the purpose of occupying time with this. I cannot see such a pressing urgency for the public printing now as existed at the beginning, and during the session. Will any Senator say that the public printing proposed to be done now, is necessary to enable him to discharge his duties intelligently and usefully here? Why, none of it will have been done under it at the close of this session. We shall have adjourned and gone home, before any work will be done under it. The work that will be done, will not bear upon the legislation of the next session of Congress particularly.

The Senator from Michigan said that the census had not been printed. Will it be printed even if we pass this bill, until at a subsequent session we order it to be printed, or provide for its printing in some way? A committee of this body was raised to examine the census returns, according to the plan sent from the Department, and they have reported that four fifths of the returns ought not to be printed. Suppose we pass this bill. Why, according to its terms, the census printing is expressly excepted from its operation. Then the argument of the Senator from Michigan has no force whatever, because it does not apply.

Why should we pass this bill now? Is it of such pressing necessity that we should print the Patent Office report? When should we get it? Certainly not until the next year, even if we were to pass the bill now. The printing of the Patent Office report has no practical bearing upon the legislation of Congress, and it never has had. I have a good deal to say with regard to the bill when it comes up, but I cannot discuss its merits now, because it would be out of order to do so.

Mr. CASS. I am perfectly aware that the census printing is excepted from the operation of this bill. But I am also aware, and so must every gentleman here be aware, that the very reason why that printing has been delayed is on account of the fact that we have not gone on to make arrangements about the public printing. The census printing has not been ordered to be executed on account of the doubt in which the subject was enveloped. If this arrangement be made to-day, I think there will be no hesitation with regard to our going on and making arrangements about the census printing. In my opinion, we ought to make some arrangement for the printing. The census, taken more than two years ago, remains locked up, and no human being, unless he goes to examine the records, knows what it is. Another decade will have gone by before we get any information about it, unless we provide for its printing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope that this bill will be taken up and disposed of now. We have been here nine months without any printing, or with what amounts to none. If the subject be postponed until the next session, we shall waste that session in discussing it. The recent attempts that have been made have proved to be utter failures, and I think it is time that we had our public printing, and went on with the printing. I do not wish to discuss the matter. I will not occupy the time of the Senate in that way; but, I hope we may take up the bill and vote on it without one word of discussion, because no discussion is necessary. We all understand the subject, and it is necessary that we should now do whatever we are to do; because if we pass the bill now, it may require until the next session for the printer to make his arrangements to execute the work. The public printing will be a heavy job, and if we elect a printer now, we may expect to have our printing done regularly from the first day of the next session, and after that. It is useless to order the printing of documents, unless we can have them executed. We are ordering every day, every hour, in fact, extra numbers of documents that are important to our legislation, and still we cannot get the work done, and legislation is therefore postponed on account of it. I will not argue the question, but I hope the Senate will take up the bill.

The question was taken on the motion to take up the bill, and resulted—yeas 30, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Hamilton, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Stockton, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Fish, Geyer, Hale, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—26.

So the motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill should undergo a most careful examination by the Senate, but it is brought up at a time when that examination, I apprehend, cannot be made. I wish to state in a few words, the reasons which control my decision, and which will compel me to vote against the bill.

In the first place, it proposes to unite all the public printing, both that of the Departments and of Congress. That, in my opinion, is an objection to the bill, and I shall move to separate the two classes of printing. I believe that all the printing of the Departments is now done, and has been done satisfactorily for years, under contract.

In the next place, the bill provides for the appointment of a Superintendent by the President of the United States, and thus the Superintendent of the Congressional printing is to be completely free from our control. I think that the Superintendent should be elected by Congress; and I think that the Congressional printing should be done by itself, and that the Department printing should be done by itself. I think that the two classes of printing should be kept separate; and there are good reasons why it should be so. The two kinds of printing are different; the terms and prices are different. The printing of the Departments is of such a kind that it is not necessary to execute it at night time, and therefore the scale of prices, which would be reasonable for Congressional printing, would be exorbitant for the printing of the Departments. These are my reasons for thinking that the two should not be put together.

Another reason I desire to urge is, that the project for placing the whole of the printing under the management of one man is likely to result in no good. The printing of the Post Office, which now exceeds $50,000 per annum, requires the superintendence of two persons, one to prepare the blanks, and the other to circulate them throughout the country; and it is impossible that the superintendence of the Congressional and departmental printing could both be performed by one man.

These are my objections to the bill. I think the whole system is wrong. I think it is wrong in principle; and for the purpose of testing the question in the Senate, I will move to insert the following, after the word "printing," in the second section:

To be elected by a concurrent vote of the Senate and House of Representatives.

It will then read:

"And be it further enacted, That there shall be a Superintendent of the public printing, to be elected by a concurrent vote of the Senate and House of Representatives, who shall hold his office for the term of two years, who shall receive for his services a salary of $2,500 per annum," &c.

In that way the Superintendent will be within the control of Congress, and will not be appointed by the sole authority of the President. I hope that a vote will be taken on the question without discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to know whether it is in order to make speeches before we know what we are acting upon?

The PRESIDENT. The bill has been read twice and is now under consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have never heard the bill read. I wish to have it read through.

The bill was accordingly read.

Mr. RUSK. It seems to me that the amendment would introduce a new rule which it would be difficult to carry out. If by a concurrent vote he means a vote of both Houses in convention, that could not be done; or if it is a vote of each House separately, there would be a difficulty in getting at the object. One House might vote for one man, and the other for another.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot vote for this bill as it stands, because I am opposed to its principle as a permanent measure; but inasmuch as we must necessarily make some provision for the printing of Congress at the commencement of the next session, I am willing to take the bill if the proviso which I now offer to the twelfth section be adopted. The effect of the proviso will be to limit the duration of the law till the 4th day of March, 1853, and will necessarily compel Congress, after discussion, at their next session, either to reenact this law with alterations or amendments, or to permit it to stand as it is, or to adopt some other measure. What I mean to express is, that my own opinions are decidedly in favor of a national printing press, after a good deal of thought which I have given to the subject. I am willing to hear the views of others on the subject, and I desire to express my own when a suitable occasion may arise. It is too late to do so now, and I am willing to accept this measure as a temporary measure, until Congress shall again meet. I shall, however, vote against the bill as a permanent measure, because I am well satisfied that if it should pass, whatever may be its merits or its demerits, the bill will be continued for at least four or five years. I therefore move to amend the bill by adding at the end of the twelfth section, the following proviso:

Provided, That the preceding provisions of this act shall continue in force till the 4th day of March, 1853, and no longer.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to express the hope that the amendment will not be adopted. If the bill be tried as it is, we can, in the mean time, secure a well-digested system of public printing. Of course, this measure will only last until that time. The amendment will render it necessary to send this bill back to the House of Representatives, and if there were no other difficulties in the way, that would be enough. Inasmuch, therefore, as this amendment would appear to have no beneficial effect, it seems to me to be unnecessary to pass it.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment has its effect. It is not merely to have a printer elected, but the law will remain a permanent law; and it requires the election of a printer, if you pass it in the shape in which it stands. I am opposed to the principle of the law. There is no time to discuss it now, but I am willing to take it with this proviso, in consequence of the exigency of the public service. That exigency, however, does not require that we should swallow what is wrong in its principle; and I believe that Congress, during the next session, will be able, after discussion, to say whether they will modify, or alter, or abandon, the system altogether. I therefore must persist in my amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. It is a very important amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Sausure, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to move an amendment in the second section, simply for the purpose of testing the question whether the Senate will connect the printing of the Departments with the printing of Congress, or whether they are willing to separate these two kinds of printing. If that amendment is adopted, I shall propose another one for the purpose of separating these two kinds of printing. I propose to strike out of the twelfth and thirteenth lines the words, "or of any Department or Bureau of the Government of the United States." And upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORLAND. I have to differ with my friend from Maine on this proposition. I think, if we elect a public printer, we ought to include all the printing, bring it all into one system. The effect of that would be, to make fortunes very rapidly for somebody; and I desire to make the fortune of one at a time, and let him retire for some one else to take his place.

Mr. SMITH. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is one of very great importance. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the subject, though I shall endeavor to be as brief as possible. There is no member of the Senate who is more familiar with this subject than is my friend from Maine, and I regret very much that he did not lay before the Senate the facts and considerations which I am certain would ensure the adoption of his amendment by a very large majority of the Senate. He did not think it proper, however, to go into the merits of the subject, probably relying on the assurance that we have heard from several quarters, that every member of the Senate is perfectly familiar with the legislation of Congress, and with all the facts that pertain to the question. If I were sure that they were so, I certainly would not trouble the Senate with any remarks.

But, Mr. President, we have one system, or rather one principle, which rules and governs the printing of the two Houses of Congress, and another in each and every department of the Government; and that is, that Congress, or rather the officers of Congress, in one case, and the several heads of the Departments in the other case, shall let out the public printing to the lowest bidder. So far as the Congressional printing is concerned, I will admit that this system has not operated well, and for the reason that was adverted to by my honorable friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,]—not that there is any real defect in the system itself, but because Congress has not, and probably will not, carry into effect the provisions of the law. But I have to say to the Senate, that as far as the departmental printing is concerned, this business of letting it out to the lowest bidder has operated well, and proved satisfactory to the heads of the Departments, and highly profitable to the Government, as is suggested by a friend near me. The printers under it get fair profits, although they do not get those suggested by my friend from Arkansas. They do not make enormous fortunes in two years, as the public printers did when the printing was dealt out upon political considerations and principles of favoritism. But Congress got tired, several years ago, of dealing out departmental printing and Congressional printing to party favorites, to enable them to make large fortunes; and, therefore, they went into this system of letting it out to the lowest bidder. And I say, that so far as the departmental printing is concerned, it has operated very well. I have at my room letters from each and every one of the heads of the Departments, which I should have brought into the Chamber, if I had supposed that the subject was coming up for consideration to-day, in which they bear testimony to the admirable operation of the system of letting out the departmental printing to the lowest bidder. The honorable Postmaster General is particularly emphatic on this subject.

It will be borne in mind that the large portion of the public service pertaining to the post office of the United States is let out to the lowest bidder; and the Postmaster General tells me in his letter, which I have not at hand, that he knows no reason why the printing of the Post Office Department should not be let out to the lowest bidder, as much as the transportation of the mails is let out to the lowest bidder; and he is decidedly in favor of maintaining the system. That also is the testimony of the Secretaries of the Treasury, of the Interior, of War, and of the late Secretary of the Navy, (Mr. Graham.) They all bear testimony to the economical operation of the system. These gentlemen say they not only obtain the printing of the various Departments well executed, on good paper, and commensurate to the wants of the public service—at what rates I will not undertake to say, but at rates a great deal lower than they otherwise would—and unless Congress, as the House of Representatives seems to be, are prepared to return to the old system of giving it out upon political considerations—to the old, wasteful, prodigal, and extravagant system—I am entirely sure that a majority of this honorable body will concur in the amendment proposed by my honorable friend from Maine.

But here, Mr. President, is a most extraordinary state of things. I have no doubt that the two Houses of Congress have the right to appoint an officer, under the name of a public printer, to execute the printing that is required for the two Houses; but has Congress the right, or, if it has the right, is it expedient for Congress to seize hold of the printing of the various Departments of the Government? Upon what principle is it that we elect the public printer to do the printing of the two Houses of Congress? It is exactly upon the principle that we appoint a Secretary of the Senate—it is exactly upon the principle that we appoint a Sergeant-at-Arms—it is exactly upon the principle upon which we appoint all other officers of the two Houses of Congress—to do what? To exercise certain functions—discharge certain duties which are absolutely necessary to enable us to perform our duties under the Constitution. The public printer, therefore, is an officer of Congress, and has ever been recognized as such; but if we do usurp (for I think it is of the nature of usurpation) the power of executing the printing for the Departments, I want to know what sort of function that is? Is the Superintendent to exercise his functions and perform services necessary to enable us to discharge our legislative duties here?

I desire to know of honorable Senators whether we are to elect a public printer not to serve Congress but to serve the Departments? But to what extent is it to be carried? I say it is highly improper for the two Houses of Congress to undertake to lay their hands on printing that has nothing to do with our duties here as members of Congress; and how is this to be done? At what expense? At a very great sacrifice to the Treasury; and to what end? My honorable friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] has announced the end, or rather the result—I will not say the end contemplated by honorable Senators, because that would involve possibly an imputation on their motives—but I say the result of the system proposed has been announced to us by the Senator from Arkansas. He says he wants to put into the hands of the printer to be elected by the two Houses of Congress all the Congressional printing. If that is done in conformity with the provisions of the bill, I have no manner of doubt that its effect will be to accumulate a considerable fortune during one Congressional term. But the honorable Senator says he wants to have them accumulate a fortune rapidly. He wants these men to grow rich at the expense of the laboring industrious people of the country. He wants to have them succeed each other in the accession of these fortunes in rapid succession; and I believe they will do it if the bill passes.

Now, I am totally opposed to drawing within the vortex of the Congressional printing, the printing of the Departments. We have a system now that operates well; it is an economical system, satisfactory to the Departments, and not oppressive to the Government. Nobody complains of it. Why, then, is it proposed to lay violent hands on that branch of the public printing, and draw it under our jurisdiction, and undertake to execute it by our authority?

I have other views to express in connection with this entire subject, but I mean to limit myself precisely to the question before us. I will not travel into the question of the merits of the bill. I intend, in addressing myself to the Senate—and I fear I shall be compelled to do it more than once—to confine myself strictly and rigidly to the point before it. I do, therefore, most strenuously resist in limine the idea of breaking down the system of letting out departmental printing to the lowest bidder, when it operates well and nobody complains of it; when it is satisfactory to the heads of the Departments; when nobody calls for the change; and when it is, apparently, to draw it within our jurisdiction, upon an idea such as has been suggested by the honorable Senator from Arkansas. As it is an important question, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I think there has been an amendment adopted which destroys the utility of this bill. It is that which limits its operation to the 4th of March next. Considering that that amendment destroys the efficiency of the bill, and that there is no longer any use in considering it, I move that it lie upon the table.

Several SENATORS. "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!"

Mr. DOUGLAS. I must ask the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. WALKER. If the friends of the bill, upon this side of the Chamber particularly, do not want to lay it down, I withdraw the motion; but I think there is not much use in considering the bill any longer after the adoption of that amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table having been withdrawn, the question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against this, or any other amendment, because it seems to me, that in accordance with the amendment which I had the honor to propose, and which the Senate sanctioned, a principle has been adopted that this measure is one of a temporary character. I understood my amendment to be adopted upon the ground that there was no time now to discuss the principles of a bill of this kind, to settle a permanent system. I had objections to the bill on one ground, the honorable Senator from Maine on other grounds. We could not have an opportunity now to discuss them, and I thought it was right that a permanent system should not be adopted without discussion. But I also thought it would relieve Senators from their objections to the bill as it stood, if it were made temporary in its character. The provision making it temporary having been adopted, it certainly removes my objection. Though I am decidedly opposed to the bill as a permanent system, yet as the Senate acceded, with the statement of those views, to the amendment which I proposed, I presumed that the object was to let the bill pass as a temporary measure, which the exigencies of the public service demanded, with regard to the printing of the next session.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, the sweeping, and I had almost said suicidal amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware, which has been adopted by the Senate, renders the present amendment inoperative and unnecessary. By the amendment already adopted, the provisions of the act are to terminate on the 3d of March next; and now it is proposed to exempt the printing of the Departments from its operation. I presume that contracts have already been entered into for all the printing of the Departments up to that time; and as I think the amendment already adopted practically makes this exclusion, this amendment would seem to be unnecessary.

Mr. PRATT. The Senate will observe that the second section of the bill provides that "there shall be a Superintendent of the Public Printing, who shall hold his office for the term of two years." Now, the section does not provide, quo modo, how the Superintendent is to be appointed. On looking to the Constitution, I find that it provides that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint the officers designated, "and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments." The Superintendent then here provided for by this bill, is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, inasmuch as the bill does not provide for the appointment by the President, without that supervisory consent on the part of the Senate.

Now, I want to suggest to my friend from Maine, that the amendment which he proposes should not be made a test question, as to whether we are in favor of taking from the bill that part which gives the printing of the Departments to the printer to be elected by the two Houses of Congress; for the provision which he proposes to strike out only requires that the Department printing should be supervised by the Superintendent to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I can see no earthly difficulty; on the contrary, I can see a much greater propriety in the printing of the public offices being supervised by the appointee of the President than that the printing of Congress should be so supervised. I can see no reason for the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Maine; and therefore I hope that it will not be made a test question with regard to the sense of the Senate as to separating the Department printing from the Congressional printing.

In my judgment, there is every propriety that the Superintendent so to be appointed should supervise the departmental printing; and I have certainly heard no objection to that. But when it comes to the other question of separating the departmental from the Congressional printing, I shall vote with great pleasure with the honorable Senator from Maine. The suggestion which he has made to me in conversation is conclusive that the provision uniting the two ought to be stricken out; for you are to have under this bill two public printers—one appointed by the Senate, and one appointed by the House; and the bill does not provide which of these printers is to do the Department printing. I shall, therefore, vote with the Senator from Maine, when he comes to the amendment to strike out the departmental printing; but I shall vote for keeping in the bill the supervision of the Department printing by the Superintendent.

Mr. HAMLIN. In order to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, I withdraw my amendment and offer another; to strike out of the third section the words:

"And from the several chiefs of Departments and heads of bureaus, all matters ordered by them, respectively, to be printed at the public expense."

That presents precisely the question of disconnecting the Congressional from the departmental printing.

Mr. SMITH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Rorland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Soule, and Weller—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH. It must be manifest, I think, to the members of the body that the details of this bill cannot be considered without encroaching on other business that is pending before the Senate. The bill is now here to the interruption of the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Several SENATORS. That has been passed.

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

Mr. DAVIS. The river and harbor bill has been ordered to a third reading. It has not yet been finally passed.

Mr. SMITH. That was my understanding.

I therefore move to lay this bill on the table, and I ask the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. DAVIS. I was about to ask for the order of the day, but the Senator from Connecticut has made a motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. SMITH. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. The honorable Senator from Connecticut manifests great indignation at what he regards as an effort to reward a partisan press. He insists that the effect of passing this bill will be to reward a partisan editor, and that the contract is the only system that ought to be adopted by Congress. He further argues, that unless the contract system be adopted, the public interests will be jeopardized, and money will be appropriated out of the National Treasury without a fair consideration. Now, that honorable Senator must excuse me for saying that I am unwilling to be taught by him upon this subject, for the reason that he is grossly inconsistent. He advocates one policy in reference to the public printing to-day, and another to-morrow. He has boxed every point of the compass in discussing this question, since taking his seat as a Senator, as I will show from that honorable Senator's speeches. Some two years ago, when I introduced a proposition here disposing of the printing of the Seventh Census to the lowest bidder, that honorable Senator took decided ground against it, and alleged that it was a vicious system, fraught with mischief, and would again, as it had in times past, prove a fraud on the Treasury, and an entire failure. I desire to read a few extracts from a speech that the honorable Senator made on the occasion I have referred to. In the Congressional Globe of the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, page 687, I find that the following remarks were made by that Senator on the 10th of April, 1850:

"In addition to this, even if there was time to carry any measure, such as is contemplated by the honorable member from Indiana, I do not believe that any contract you could make upon the principle of giving it to the lowest bidder, would be executed in such a manner as the public service requires. I care not what may be the stipulation of the contract; I care not what guarantees you may demand of the public printer—of any man who may give the lowest bid for the public printing—you never can get the contract executed in such a manner as the public interests require."

To-day, according to the theory of this same Senator, the contract system is the only method known to him whereby the public Treasury can be protected and the public printing done in a proper manner. But the honorable Senator went further, and said:

"You would get an inferior quality of paper. The paper, which is now in the hands of the contractors with the Census Board, is very nearly of the strength and quality of bank paper. It is a very superior kind of paper. I believe specimens of it have been laid on the tables of honorable Senators. Now, you may stipulate in the contract that the printers shall furnish paper that has all the strength of bank paper; but I deny that you could have any guarantee that the contract would be fulfilled. The paper will be of an inferior quality, and, by the time the blanks reach Washington from the hands of the marshals and their deputies, the documents will be in such a state as to be illegible, and of no use for the purpose of making up the abstract that is ultimately to constitute the census."

On another occasion, when there was a proposition before the Senate to let the contracts for the public printing to the lowest bidder, the Senator used the following language:

"The truth is, Mr. President, that the real difficulty is with the system that we have adopted of public printing. It is a vicious system."

In another place he says:

"I am fully satisfied that the honorable Senator from Mississippi purposes to act with all due courtesy; and I beg pardon of the Senate for having trespassed upon their attention on this subject. I was about to explain what was the real cause of the delay. It is this vicious system of printing; and I contend that it is utterly impossible, under this system, that we should have public documents ready in time."

That is, under the "contract system." I leave such inconsistencies as appear between the speech made to-day, and those made by the honorable Senator on former occasions, to be reconciled by him. I do not wish to be considered as arraigning the honorable gentleman for his course, but have felt it to be my duty to hold up his former course as a reason against giving any influence whatever to his opinions to-day. He had a right to entertain these opinions, and to publish them at the time he did; and I do not question his right to change these opinions, and to announce that change to the Senate. But I do deny his right, after these tergiversations, to teach myself and other Senators on this subject. Without the least unkindness, then, toward that Senator, he will permit me to say that it does not become him to get up here, denounce this measure, and censure those who are its advocates. Such inconsistencies ought to be, and shall be commented upon.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the friends of the bill that it should be laid aside, in order to take up the civil and diplomatic bill, and then it could be taken up to-morrow during the morning hour.

Several SENATORS. Let us take the vote.

Mr. HUNTER. If we can take the vote, I will not press the proposition.

Mr. SMITH. It seems that we are not only to have this printing bill thrust upon us, but the honorable Senator from Indiana—after the bill has been forced upon us, to the postponement of the river and harbor bill, and the civil and diplomatic bill—has put me on trial on a question of consistency. The honorable Senator has preferred an indictment; I do not know how many counts he has put in it; but I hope I may be permitted to stand up here and put in a plea of "not guilty;" and before I get through I venture to say that I shall satisfy every member of the Senate, except, perhaps, that gentleman, that I am not guilty.

This is not the first time that the gentleman has stood up here and preferred against me a charge of inconsistency in relation to the subject of the public printing. When the charge was made before, I brought in the record and I proved from it that the charge was utterly false; and I now say it is unfounded. The gentleman seems to take pleasure in reading from some remarks that I had the honor to address to the Senate at the last Congress. I wish I had them before me. If I had them here I should not ask another human being in the Chamber except the Senator from Indiana to listen to me; and I think I could give him some little light on the subject.

I admit that, when the question in regard to the preparatory printing for the taking of the census was before the Senate, I did claim that it could not be let out to the lowest bidder with safety and propriety; and I assigned a special reason for it. I said that it required paper of a very excellent character—very nearly of the quality of bank bills; that these sheets were to be transmitted through the mails; that they were to undergo a great deal of manipulation or handling; and that if the paper were not of the best quality, the sheets would be broken up and returned here to the Department in such a manner as to render them wholly illegible and unintelligible. I did maintain that it would not do to let out printing of that character to the lowest bidder. But if the honorable gentleman will take up the record of my speeches in regard to the printing of the census returns, he will find it written down there that I contended that the printing of those returns should be let out to the lowest bidder. I avowed it over and over again. When I spoke upon the subject, I brought in the record and read it in the ears of the gentleman; but it seems that the reading had very little effect on his memory. I contended in the strongest terms that I never would consent to let out the departmental printing, or the printing of the census returns to any other man than the lowest bidder. He will find it so written in my speech. There it stands, and there it will stand to the end of time. I contended that the printing of the census was departmental printing, and that it ought to go to the lowest bidder—that letting it out to the lowest bidder would save a very large sum of money to the Government.

But it would really seem that I cannot rise to address the Senate on any subject but that I have some honorable Senator on the other side bringing against me an accusation of inconsistency. The honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] when I spoke on the Sault Ste. Marie canal bill, arraigned me on the charge of inconsistency. The honorable gentleman from Indiana, when I addressed the Senate on the subject of printing, early in the session, arraigned me on the same charge. I showed then that it was utterly unfounded, and if I had the record here now I would show that this charge is equally unfounded.

I have insisted from the beginning that the printing of the census returns should be let out to the lowest bidder. And here, sir, we have a revelation, and I will speak it out. The object of this measure—I do not say it is an improper object, I call in question no man's motive, I impeach the conduct of no one—and the object of pressing it now is to enable the honorable gentleman and those who act with him politically, to lay their hands on this business of printing the census returns, and hand it over to the man who may be elected public printer by the Democratic majority in the two Houses of Congress.

In relation to the system of Congressional printing, I have always said that the contract system had failed. I said that it ought to be changed. But how changed? Not by electing some partisan to do the printing of the two Houses of Congress, but I have contended that some modification was necessary, and I believe I suggested that we ought to purchase the paper and then let out the mere press-work and composition to the lowest bidder.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. I well recollect that that was your argument.

Mr. SMITH. My honorable friend from Kentucky informs me that he well recollects that I took that ground. All that the honorable Senator from Indiana, then, has to stand upon in preferring against me the accusation of inconsistency, is that I insisted, in regard to the printing preliminary to the taking of the census, that it would not do to let it out to the lowest bidder. I have always insisted that the contract system, as it now stands, according to law, should prevail in regard to the departmental printing; but in regard to the Congressional printing, I have at all times admitted that there should be some amendment. I now stand ready to vote for a proper amendment; but I am not pledged to vote for all sorts of amendments.

A majority have decided here that they will lay their hands on the departmental printing. It is not enough that the partisan to be elected by the two Houses shall have all the printing of the two Houses. It is not enough that he shall have the printing of the census, which I suppose will be conferred on him. But it is proposed to make this bill a sort of broom to go through all the Departments and gather up all the patronage to be found, and give it to some favorite of the party.

I have gone far enough in vindicating the position which I have assumed hitherto. I say that my course has been consistent. I have maintained most strenuously that we never should depart from the system of letting out the printing to the lowest bidder. I have always admitted, however, that it was necessary that there should be some modification of the law in regard to the Congressional printing. Having done this, I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the honorable Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have not arraigned the honorable Senator, or made any charge against him, which is not supported by the record which I have read. I merely charged that he had hitherto been the advocate of the contract system, whenever the contract system was likely to benefit the peculiar interest that he seems to represent on this floor; and whenever it did not suit that interest, he was against it. He has been for and against it, as circumstances and interest seemed to require.

Sir, I might, when last up, have read further, and proved that the honorable gentleman on one occasion pledged himself to bring in a bill to repeal this odious contract system; and if the Senate will indulge me, I will do so now. At page 495 of the Congressional Globe for the first session of the Thirty-first Congress, on the question of printing the Seventh Census, the honorable Senator remarked:

"I was about to explain what was the real cause of the delay. It is this vicious system of printing; and I contend that it is utterly impossible, under this system, that we should have public documents ready in time. It is necessary that it should be abrogated, and I will now intimate that, at a very early day, I intend to bring the subject under the consideration of the Senate. I say then, simply that, admitting, as I do, to the fullest extent, that neither the Committee on Printing nor the majority in the two Houses of Congress are in fault. The Administration is not responsible for what may be said by the editor of the Republic, in any degree; and that the whole difficulty results from this unfortunate system, which can only be characterized by the old proverb, as being 'penny wise, and pound foolish.'"

These were the remarks of the Senator on that occasion in which he pledged himself to bring in a bill to repeal the whole system, which I believe he has not done. There is one point to which I must allude, and I am done; and that is the fact, that the Senator objects to the bill on the ground that the prices proposed to be paid are extravagantly high—there is a great fortune in them—that we are about to pay enormous prices to sustain a partisan press, &c. Why, sir, the prices proposed to be paid by this bill are not so high as those recommended to be paid by that honorable Senator as a member of the Committee on Printing, and under which that committee proposed to let out the printing of Congress. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Arkansas, who was a member of the committee at that time, to state whether or not the statement I make is not true—whether the prices provided to be paid by the terms of this bill are not as low, if not lower, than those recommended by the Senator from Connecticut, as a member of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BORLAND. As I am appealed to by my friend from Indiana, I will state, that from an examination which I made as chairman of the Committee on Printing, and an examination which I have since made of the rates of compensation proposed to be given for printing under the contract made by the committee with Messrs. Donelson & Armstrong, and the publishers of the Republic; and from an examination which I have made, as carefully as I could, of the prices to be paid by this bill, I have come to the conclusion that the prices proposed to be given to the Republic and Union offices were higher than these. I do not think there is a great deal of difference between them; but I am perfectly satisfied that these prices were higher—I think from ten to twenty per cent. higher—than those proposed in this bill. This is my opinion. I may be mistaken; but from the best examination I have been able to make, such is the conclusion to which I have arrived.

Mr. BRIGHT. That is the statement of the prices which the Senator was willing then to have given.

Mr. SMITH. I shall be heard upon that point. I will attend to this last indictment directly.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. If there is no other Senator who desires to discuss it, we may as well vote upon it.

Mr. SMITH. I am going to be heard on this indictment, and probably shall take up half a day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope it will not be postponed. If the policy is to speak out to the end of the session on every little remark that is made here, under the plea of an indictment, to prevent the action of Congress upon the bill, I am in favor of letting the Senator go on and speak now, and speak all night. I understand this policy. He avows the object is now to take half a day in answering a single remark. Sir, he may speak until doomsday, and yet the record proves that the statement of the Senator from Indiana is true. The object then is to occupy time; and if this bill is to be evaded by occupying the time until the end of the session, I am in favor of sitting here at once until he shall weary himself out, and then vote on the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Here is a third indictment, Mr. President. [Laughter.] Indictment number three. I cannot try two indictments at the same time. I am going to take indictor the honorable Senator from Indiana, and then I will take indictor the honorable Senator from Illinois, who will see how he will come out. That I will stand by. I do not care when these indictments come on. I am willing to try them now, or next week.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to complete the river and harbor bill, which we had under consideration yesterday and ordered to be read a third time. I suppose debate upon it is exhausted, and that it will occupy no time, but that it will be necessary only to read it a third time and pass it. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until half past two o'clock. When we have passed the river and harbor bill, we can take this up again.

Mr. MANGUM. This bill is a matter of very great importance. The civil and diplomatic bill, and the river and harbor bill, are comparatively of but little moment. This is a great political machine—a party machine—as the honorable Senator from Connecticut thinks. It is vastly important that it should be considered. Sir, I do not like to interpose a word here in defense of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, because he is like the man in the Almanac. There is hardly a Democrat in this Senatorial Chamber but must cast his darts at him. He is the head of the Whig Senatorial Committee, and he throws many an arrow at the opposite party, which perhaps inflict some wounds. But, as to his consistency, it is a matter of great moment that it should be defended—a matter of vast importance—representing, as he does, the august and powerful, and, as I hope to be, triumphant Whig party. That consistency is of more consequence than the passage of the civil and diplomatic bill, or of the river and harbor bill. [Laughter.] It is the very life and soul of the great and struggling Whig party, which is to be the victorious one. Let gentlemen assail that consistency if they will. Has there ever been a Whig nominee that he has not supported? Has the Senator ever been found deserting his party? Has he ever been found scismatic in regard to the principles of his own party? Has there ever been a Democratic move, by which the Democratic party were going to pluck money out of the Treasury for party purposes, which he has not resisted? [Laughter.] If they move in one direction one day, he must take the opposite; if they change their policy the next day, he also must again take the opposite—always consistent in opposing the tricks and schemes of those who wish to pocket money for party purposes. Sir, I will defend that consistency to any extent that I would defend myself. There never has been a Whig nominee that he has not been the supporter of. [Laughter.] He never has been called upon to take part in the labor, as the head of the central committee, but he has entered into the harness, and has worked like a dray-horse.

I am not at all surprised at the threefold accusation which has been brought against him. I know he will be able to bear it—he will be able to resist it. This is a matter of great consequence. I hope the consistency of the honorable Senator will be defended successfully, and acknowledged. I appeal to the magnanimity of the Democratic party, if they have ever seen him conniving at any practice of theirs which he supposed to be aimed at the great and triumphant Whig party? Never, sir; never. [Laughter.] He has shown a consistency which is honorable to him, as a Whig, and as a Whig statesman—not only to the party, but to the country.

Well, sir, as to putting off this matter I do not know but that the money which will be expended under it may come into use. There is some little necessity to pass the civil and diplomatic bill. However, that is comparatively unimportant. I am utterly opposed to this whole scheme in its present shape. I do not desire to speak against time. The honorable Senator from Illinois says he understands that. I have never practiced it in my life. I think it is pretty well understood by some gentlemen. We saw at the close of the last session of Congress that it was pretty well understood by a certain party, upon the river and harbor bill that does not appear upon the records of the last session, except its being unsuccessfully before us. I have no disposition to speak against time, but I am utterly unwilling that, at one fell swoop, a party that is temporarily in the majority here, should seize upon the immense patronage which gentlemen are aiming at, of the entire public printing of the entire Federal Government. Sir, is there any gentleman here who will rise in his place, and upon his responsibility as a Senator, undertake to say that there is the slightest ground of imputation against the success of the present system, as practiced under the Departments of the Government?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly it has been controverted.

Mr. WELLER. Most assuredly it has.

Mr. MANGUM. Has its proper acting been controverted?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It has not only been controverted, but successfully shown that the contract system under the Departments is a mere mockery, covering up contracts to their own partisans, and paying not the slightest regard whatever to the lowest bid that may be put in.

Mr. MANGUM. I know nothing of that—

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is so.

Mr. MANGUM. I hope I shall not be interrupted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should not have interrupted the Senator if he had not put the question. My silence might have been deemed acquiescence.

Mr. MANGUM. I desire this thing to appear upon proof; not mere assertion. I desire the proofs to be made, and not that it shall go upon a mere naked, bald assertion. If, as the Senator calculates, the entire success of the Democratic party be certain, the Government, I suppose, will be in the hands of honest men. I am willing to trust the contract system to them. We have no fears or apprehensions that they will cover up from us their contracts, like this corrupt Whig party does. But I have heard, for the first time, this morning, that there is any ground of imputation whatever against the present system of printing as it is practiced in the Departments. In those Departments, I know, there are little petty, paltry things frequently done. Very recently, a very paltry and contemptible thing has been done by a great man in the Whig party—the Secretary of State—unworthy of him, unworthy of his position, and disgraceful to the party, so far as he can affect it. It will be but a little longer that he can affect it to any extent. I speak the truth of men in power; and out of power, when I speak at all, if I know it. I am opposed to a system which embraces the entire printing of the Federal Government. It is a privilege that ought to be devolved upon no party. It is a matter that ought to be conducted upon principles that steer clear of mere party interest and power.

Sir, I have seen parties here. I know something about them. I suppose there is about as much integrity in one party, in the mass, as in the other. As to this thing of cheating, though, I must do my sagacious friends of the opposite party the justice of saying that I think they understand the game a vast deal better than the raw militia of the Whig party. That party has been long in power; they understand all the tricks of the trade; and our militia could never come near enough to the outposts to compete with them in the practice. But at all events I make no imputation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. NORRIS.) The Chair will state that the question is on postponing the further consideration of the subject until half-past two o'clock.

Mr. MANGUM. I know that; and I am endeavoring to show that this is a vastly important matter—vastly important to the Democratic party, and, consequently, important to the country, that we should have a speedy action on it, though I desire to have all the information upon it that I can get. I am sorry to detain the Senate a moment—it is against my habit; but this question being so important, I trust it will be properly considered.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I shall vote for the motion, because I believe it is necessary to the passage of the river and harbor bill, and for no other reason.

Mr. BORLAND. Such will be the consideration which will induce me to vote for the postponement. I desire to see the river and harbor bill sent to the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. I shall vote against the motion to postpone, for the reason that if we pass this bill over now we shall not get it up again this session.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 27—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mallory, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Toucey, and Weller—27.

So the further consideration of the bill was postponed until half-past two o'clock.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The bill making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers was read a third time.

Mr. DE SAUSSURE. Upon the passage of the bill I desire the yeas and nays. Several Senators were absent yesterday when it was ordered to a third reading. I paired off on that question, and therefore desire to have the yeas and nays upon the question of its passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 35, nays 23—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Charlton, Clemens, Dawson, De Saussure, Downs, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Norris, Soule, Toucey, and Weller—23.

EMPLOYEES ABOUT THE CAPITOL.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to consider, by unanimous consent, a resolution relative to the compensation of the employees in and about the Capitol; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing, for the use of the Senate, five hundred copies of the Digest and Index of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, as printed by the House of Representatives, in Executive document No. 55, second session Thirty-first Congress, and to ascertain at what price the same can be procured.

POST ROUTE BILL.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives to establish certain post routes.

The amendments reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and various others proposed by Senators, establishing new routes, were agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I offer the following amendment, to come in as an additional section, after the routes:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of a daily mail between Louisville and Cairo, St. Louis and Cairo, Cairo and Memphis, and Memphis and New Orleans, and to supply such intermediate points as he may order, from time to time, on suitable and safe steamboats.

I have but a word to say in explanation of that, which I trust will be satisfactory to the Senate. Some time ago, I introduced a bill into the Senate to provide for this mail service. It was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. What I now submit as an amendment to this bill, is the substance of the report of that committee. They did not report back the bill I introduced in its terms, but reported an amendment to it, and this which I propose is the substance of their amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think that amendment ought not to be adopted. It will be compulsory upon the Department to establish one certain mail route. I think you cannot find any such provision existing anywhere. In the laws in relation to post routes you leave a discretion with the Postmaster General, and if you depart from that system and make it compulsory upon him in one instance, you will be obliged to do so in others. I think the rule would be a wrong one.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the Senator will be satisfied with the explanation which I will give him. As I stated some time ago to the Senate, in my opinion the law already authorizes the Postmaster General to do precisely what the amendment proposes; but the Post Office Department, heretofore, have not exercised the authority which the law gave them. They have declined to do it, and the consequence has been such an irregularity and confusion in all the mail service upon the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, that the business men of that region of country consider that they are almost entirely deprived of mail facilities. Estimates upon this subject have been made by persons connected with the Post Office Department—business men who have looked into the matter, and whose business interests are thrown into confusion and greatly disturbed, and rendered almost inextricable by the present system. They have entered into estimates, and say that not more than one tenth, and probably not more than one twentieth, of what would go through the mail by a regular system, now goes through it. It is carried by private conveyance along the route. The consequence is, that the revenue derived by the Department from the route, is very small; and as the Department considered it to be its duty to regulate the amount paid for transportation by the amount raised as revenue, it has considered that the amount raised in this case was so small, under the present system, as not to justify their entering into the new system; and it has declined to contract for the service. The amendment proposes to give the Post Office Department the authority of law, and to require the exercise of that authority, in overcoming the difficulty under which we all labor so much in the West; for the Mississippi river, and that portion of the Ohio below Louisville, being the great trunks from which we draw the mails to our interior, let us have as good a system as you may in the interior, let the mails there be carried as regularly as you please, yet if the service upon the great trunks is irregular, the interior supplies must necessarily be so.

There can be no question—for it is, I believe, the unanimous opinion of practical men in all that region of the country—that if the system was changed, in accordance with my proposed amendment, the revenues of the Department would not only become doubled in less than a year, but quadrupled, and perhaps increased tenfold. As I stated some time ago, we have no mail line upon this route at all, but merely agents at different points on the river.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to ask the honorable Senator if there is any mail carried on the river at all, and to what extent?

Mr. BORLAND. The mail is carried upon the rivers upon a system which makes it exceedingly irregular, and confuses the correspondence and business transactions of that region of the country in this way: Instead of putting out the mail service, as is usual upon all other routes, to contracts, mail agents are appointed who reside at particular points on the river, and they contract with boats as they pass along for the transportation from point to point. Irregularity results in the following manner: The boats on the Mississippi run irregularly; that is, some run fast and some slow. Some are engaged in the coasting trade, and some rapidly pass from point to point. The mail agent, therefore, puts the mail to-day upon a slow boat which coasts along. Two or three days a fast boat passes directly from one point to another, and he puts the mail on it containing letters written some three or four days subsequently to the former, and they reach their destination first.

Mr. SEWARD. I take an interest in the subject, and desire to know what remedy the Senator proposes?

Mr. BORLAND. The remedy is to require the Postmaster General to put the mail on this route on the same footing as that on other routes.

Mr. BELL. I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment or two upon this subject. I observe that the amendment proposes to include a daily route between Nashville and Cairo. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Arkansas to strike that out, because, in speaking upon this subject, I want to seem to stand totally disinterested. I suppose he will have no objection to doing that.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no objection to it. That more directly affects the State which the Senator represents, and he is better acquainted with the necessities of that portion of the country than I am.

Mr. BELL. I undertake to be responsible for striking out that part of the proposition; but I hope to win the favorable attention of honorable Senators here to the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I will modify my amendment by striking out the words "from Nashville to Cairo."

Mr. BELL. I desire to say a few words in relation to this subject. I desire that clause to be stricken out, not because we have no interest in such a line, for we have a considerable interest in having it; but there is a considerable trade between middle Tennessee and New Orleans, the great depot and metropolis of the southwestern States, and a pretty large trade between Nashville and that section of the country. That is a trade in which we have a direct interest, and hence we have a very considerable interest in having some regular line of communication between the country on the waters of the Cumberland, or in Middle Tennessee, and the city of New Orleans, for the purpose of carrying on our trade with safety and dispatch, and to have our communication regular. But, sir, the whole country on the Mississippi river, from St. Louis to New Orleans, has a deep interest in this measure; and we in Tennessee are not so much interested in having a daily mail from Nashville to Cairo, as in having a semi or tri-weekly mail to Cairo, if we can have an assurance that it will get from Cairo to New Orleans regularly, and that our communication from New Orleans will be received at Nashville in any reasonable time, or any time to be calculated upon by our business men—the planters and farmers, &c. Our communications now between that whole country and New Orleans by mail, are at some seasons liable to be delayed three weeks, and even a month, before we can have any communication.

Our overland mails are obstructed by deep waters, not only in Tennessee, but in the State of Mississippi; and if you happen to reach Memphis, you have no regular communication between that place and New Orleans, or any intermediate port below. Here is this great inland sea, I may properly call it, where it is perfectly practicable to have a daily communication from Louisville to Cairo, and from St. Louis to Cairo, and then to New Orleans. Leave out the country I am immediately interested in, and I repeat, although we should have only a mail to Cairo twice a week, it would be a great boon to know that when the mail reached Cairo, it would connect with a daily line to New Orleans, and that the mail from New Orleans to Cairo would regularly arrive there daily. We could then well wait two or three days, whereas, as the thing now stands, we have to wait sometimes three or four weeks.

I call upon honorable Senators to say, whether there is any other portion of the country, where such an extensive commerce is carried, which is similarly situated with regard to the mails, or is there anything like it? No, sir; it is unparalleled in the condition of the country and postal arrangements. It is eminently unjust, if it be in the power of the Government, by a reasonable expenditure, to supply greater mail facilities to the commerce of that portion of the country.

It is said that the Postmaster General is opposed to this proposition. I should like to have the authority of any gentleman to say that he is opposed to it. I have heard it said that it is known to honorable members of the Senate that the Postmaster General is opposed to it. I undertake to deny that he is opposed to any such establishment of any such a line. I undertake to deny it, not that I have had any communication with that officer recently upon the subject; but a year or two ago, I know I urged upon him, in the strongest manner, the facts which I have alluded to to-day, and my recollection is, that he admitted the truth of all I said, from the information which he had. He admitted that the mode which was adopted, of putting the mails upon any transient boat that came along, did not afford regular and daily communication, or even a communication every two days upon the Mississippi. It depended upon whether the boat got along at the proper time, and whether it made the trip without accident or delay. But the Postmaster General said it is too large a discretion; that it will require too large an allowance of funds; that he had estimated a fair proportion for the mail facilities already given to the West and Southwest; that it would be going beyond his limit to enter into this plan; and he thought proper to exercise his discretion in favor of all sections of the country, but he must have a warrant of law for this. What he wants is to be authorized by law to make the expenditure that may be necessary to establish such a line.

Suppose it should cost $5,000, or $100,000, or $150,000 a year—I do not know what it would cost; I did at that time have some estimates furnished me by practical men—would not the object to be accomplished be worth more than that? I repeat, that all the Postmaster General wants, is the warrant of law to establish the daily line, and then he will do it as an act of justice to the West. I propose to strike out the route from Nashville to Cairo, not because it does not contain what we would like to have, but I want to show that the great thing we want is a daily line upon the Mississippi, even if we have none upon the Ohio.

You may leave out Louisville. If we only get the daily line upon the Mississippi we shall feel secure. Our letters then would be received from New Orleans in something like an approximation to the true time in which they could be brought. I appeal to every gentleman from this section of the Union, whether the mails are not often delayed three and four weeks in getting from New Orleans to some of the principal towns upon the interior waters—I mean the tributaries of the Mississippi—where there is no regularity, no certain reliance upon getting your communication regularly at all? We have overland mails, but they are liable to the interruptions which I have stated.

I trust, in view of the enormous amounts allowed from time to time in the establishment of lines upon the sea, upon the Atlantic ocean, between ports upon the Atlantic ocean—we do not scruple, we do not stint our appropriations and limit them to $50,000, or $150,000, or $250,000 there, but we go the length of millions—that we will procure better facilities for the Mississippi. But I do not put it upon that ground. I appeal to the common justice of the members of the Senate to say whether, upon such a great line of communication as the Mississippi, where it is perfectly practicable to have a daily conveyance of the mail, we ought not to have a daily mail? I make this appeal from my personal knowledge and deep interest in this matter—I do not mean personal as regards individuals, but I allude to my personal knowledge of the country. The interests of the States on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Cumberland, and Tennessee, from St. Louis downwards, require that we should have the daily communication proposed by the amendment; and I suppose even beyond St. Louis it would be a great desideratum in the facilities to the trade and commerce of the country. I care not what may be the cost of establishing it, providing it be within a reasonable sum. I think $100,000 or $200,000 a year ought to be granted for the purpose.

Mr. BRADBURY. I understand the law authorizes the Postmaster General to make the contract for the transportation of the mail over the route proposed. If it is wrong for him to make the contract, he ought not to do it. If he ought to make it, and refuses to do it, it would seem that it was maladministration; and I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Arkansas, that we expect, when the new Democratic Administration comes into power on the 4th of March next, that actual evils will be removed. If this is one of those evils, a remedy will be found.

But the amendment will introduce somewhat a new principle on the subject of post routes. At any rate, I think there would be danger in passing a law compelling the Postmaster General to make a particular contract. It would then place the Department in the power of steamboat owners, who would fix their own terms; for no limit is prescribed in the amendment. Now, I submit whether we are prepared, in the haste of passing a bill of this kind, to ingraft a principle by which we place the Department at the feet of steamboat owners. Again: if we commence the introduction of a compulsory obligation of this kind into the bill, every Senator, and every member of the House, who has a road where he has been denied what he regards as a privilege which ought to be granted, will insist upon a like provision, and we shall thus load down the bill. I think the proposition had better be considered at a time when we shall have a better opportunity to consider it.

Mr. BORLAND. I dislike to consume the time of the Senate, but I do think that two or three words will satisfy the honorable Senator from Maine on this point. I expressed the opinion that the general law, as it exists, does confer this power upon the Postmaster General. There is this objection which is made at the Department to his exercising the authority: That the amount of revenue derived from the mails upon these routes has not heretofore justified the Department in paying the amount of money which would be required to have the service performed in the manner proposed. I thought the Department was mistaken, and I have undertaken, from time to time, through three Administrations, to get them to take a different view of it; but, under what the Department considered to be its duty when the revenue is so small, they have felt unwilling and unauthorized to change the system. But, as I stated, the small amount of revenue has been the result of the system which is in operation, in consequence of the communication being so irregular and so confused that the business men will not send their correspondence through the mails, but seek private hands for its conveyance; and, as I am informed by persons connected with the service upon the river, men whose interests are at stake, at this time and for years past, not more than one tenth or even one twentieth of proper mail matter has gone through the mail. They seek the communication by private hands; and, in that manner, a large amount of revenue is lost which would be derived, if the mails were carried regularly, in which case everybody would seek the mails as the most proper means of communication. But the Senator from Maine says that there is no limitation in the amendment. There is a limitation. The Postmaster General is required to issue proposals, as he does in all other cases.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is no limitation in regard to the amount of money he is to pay for the service.

Mr. BORLAND. It is impossible to tell what the price will be; but this I will say, proposals were made long ago, and have been repeated from time to time, to do the service for $100,000. In one instance, I know the proposition was made to carry the mail daily from Louisville to New Orleans for $40,000. It was refused, because, as the Postmaster General said, the revenues from the route were not sufficient to justify the payment of that amount, though there is no doubt upon the minds of business men on the routes, that if the system was changed, and the proposition which I submit adopted, the revenues would be increased tenfold within a year. The limitation is sufficient that the service is to be put out under contract. A competition will necessarily spring up at once, and the service will be obtained for the lowest price.

The consideration which I have stated as weighing with the Department deprives us of the advantages which every other route in the United States has. The Postmaster General does advertise in other cases; this stands as an exception; and as the Senator from Tennessee well said, if it should cost $100,000, why object to it when you are paying millions for the transportation of mails elsewhere? The Postmaster General did not put the service along the coast and upon other navigable streams under a general law. You had to pass a special law requiring and authorizing the service. We now simply ask that the Mississippi river and the Ohio river may be placed upon the same footing with all other streams and land routes in the country, and nothing more. It proposes to put it out at contract, not by a private arrangement, but in a manner that will bring about a competition, and secure the service at a reasonable rate.

Mr. BORLAND's amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

REMAINS OF WILLIAM T. BARRY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to bring the remains of William T. Barry, in a public vessel or otherwise, from England to his late residence at Lexington, Kentucky. Barry died very poor. He went out as Minister to Spain, but when he got to England he died very poor. Although he and I differed as wide as the poles in politics, he was my personal friend and my patron when I entered life. I always admired and esteemed him as a man. In consequence of a letter which I have received stating the facts, I conferred with the President on this subject. He says a resolution will be necessary to authorize him to bring the remains to this country and transport them to Lexington. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce the following joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to have the remains of William T. Barry, late Minister to Spain, brought to the United States in a national ship, or otherwise, and to have them transported to Lexington, in Kentucky.

Resolved, That the President be authorized to pay the necessary expenses of executing the present resolution out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

No objection was made to the introduction of the resolution, and it was read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE RAZEE INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. HALE. I desire to offer the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate the number of days the United States razez Independence, the flag-ship of the Mediterranean squadron, commanded by Charles W. Morgan, was at sea, after her arrival at Naples on the 14th of September, 1849, until she sailed thence for the United States on the 29th of March, 1852; how many days said ship was at anchor in the bay or harbor of Naples, and how long at Spezzia or other ports during that period; what portion of the aforesaid two and a half years was passed on shore, and how much of it on board ship, by said Morgan; what is the estimated expense of a ship of the class of the Independence, properly officered and manned, per day or per year; whether said Morgan, without authority from the Department, while his ship was lying at anchor in the Bay of Naples, chartered or employed a merchant vessel to transport supplies for his squadron from Spezzia to Naples, and whether the cost of such transportation has been charged to the Government by the order or approval of said Morgan; whether instructions were given to said Morgan by the Department, or by any bureau thereof, to practice his squadron in naval evolutions or fleet-sailing, and if so, whether said instructions were obeyed; whether he was directed to exercise his men in target-firing, and if so, whether he complied with such directions, and to what extent; whether there is any rule or regulation of the Department against naval officers transporting females, members of their families or others, on board ships-of-war of the United States, and if so, whether Commodore Morgan, or any officer under his command, was guilty of a violation of such regulation; whether the broad pennant of Commodore Morgan was kept flying during the period of his command in the Mediterranean, or was at any time taken down, and if so, for what length of time; whether Commodore Morgan has been held to answer for disobedience of orders, violations of regulations, or neglect of duty, while in command of the naval forces of the United States in the Mediterranean, during the past three years.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator seeks that information either for the purpose of sustaining a speech made in the other House a few days since, or for the purpose of defending Commodore Morgan against it. In either event, I object to its consideration at this time, as I desire the printing bill to be taken up.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate entitled "An act to create an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota."

A subsequent message announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of St. Mary, in said State; and

An act for the relief of John Moore White.

SECURITY ON BOARD STEAMERS.

A message was also received from the House of Representatives, announcing that it had passed the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam," with various amendments.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, the bill, with the amendments, were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PRATT presented a memorial of citizens of Baltimore, interested in vessels propelled by steam, protesting against the passage of the bill; which was also referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

The hour of half-past two having arrived, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to provide for executing the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Three separate and distinct accusations—I call them indictments—were preferred against me in the debate of this morning; and I ask now, Mr. President, that I may be heard in reply.

In that debate, I rose for the purpose of addressing the Senate on the merits of this bill; and I meant to confine myself strictly to the consideration of its merits. I did not travel out of the record. I did not occupy the time of the Senate by bringing charges of inconsistency against any member of this body. But the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] chose to pursue a different course. That Senator was in a great hurry to get this bill through; he wanted to hush it up; and, by way of expediting its passage, he undertook to arraign me before the Senate, and before the country, with having been guilty of gross inconsistency of conduct with respect to this bill. The first inconsistency with which he charges me, is an old acquaintance of mine. This is not the first time that the Senator from Indiana has stood up in his place, and made the same accusation against me on that very point.

The first accusation is, that I, in the first session of the last Congress, took the ground, in the broadest terms, that the whole system of letting out the printing of Congress and of the Departments, by contract, to the lowest bidder, was a vicious system, and that it ought to be entirely repudiated. I think it was no longer ago than January, 1852, that the Senator made this very charge against me; and I believe that he then read the same extracts which he has read this morning from the Congressional Globe, for the purpose of supporting it. I replied to the charge then, and I believe that my reply was satisfactory to every one, except the Senator from Indiana. I conclude it was not satisfactory to him, as the Senator repeats that accusation now, and exactly upon the same grounds as upon the previous occasion. This is what I call indictment number one. Then, not satisfied with this accusation, the Senator, by way of expediting the passage of the bill still further, brings forward another charge of inconsistency. He says that, as a member of the Committee on Printing, I was willing to contract, and did contract to let out the printing of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, for the residue of this Congress, on just about the same terms which are mentioned in this bill, and that I now turn round and state that those prices are exorbitant. This is indictment number two. To support this charge, he calls on my friend, the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND], to give his testimony; and the Senator from Arkansas stands up and delivers his testimony in presence of the Senate. When I intimated, as I did, that I intended to ask for a hearing on this second indictment, as well as on the first, I thought it would take a considerable time to go into the whole question; and I believe I said that it might occupy half a day, as there is very little doubt that it would, if I went into all the facts. And then we have thrust on the country and on the Senate another charge—that I am making speeches here, not for legitimate discussion, not for the purpose of referring to the merits of the bill, not for the purpose of vindicating myself from unfounded accusations, but that I am addressing the Senate merely for the purpose of preventing action on this particular bill. This is indictment number three. Well, if I am compelled, by the circumstances of the case, to occupy some little time—and I shall not occupy an unreasonable portion of the time of the Senate in showing that all these three charges are utterly unfounded;—and if action on this bill is delayed, I ask, who is to be held responsible for it? I shall ask whether that Senator is to be held responsible who charges me with misconduct as a member of this body; or whether the responsibility rests on me, because I stand up here to answer in my own defense?

I will now take up indictment number one. The indictor is the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT], and the party accused has pleaded "not guilty" to the charge. We have heard it made by the Senator from Indiana; we have heard the proof that he adduced, and let us now hear the proof on the other side. I have said that this accusation is an old acquaintance of mine, and to show that such is the case, I will read an extract from the report of the Senate debates on the 13th of January last. I addressed myself to the Senate, on the question of the disposition that we should make of the printing of the returns of the last census, and I insisted that it should be put into the departmental printing, and let out to the lowest bidder. My remarks were not very protracted; but, after they were completed, up rose the Senator from Indiana, and he told the Senate, and the country, that the Senator from Connecticut was inconsistent in his mode of treating this subject, and read, as he has done to-day, a portion of the record of the debates in the first session of the last Congress. Let us see what he said on that occasion:

"The honorable Senator [Mr. SMITH] certainly forgets that at the last session of Congress he himself proposed to the Committee on Printing to give this very work to the Republic. Hot haste! It was not too early at the last session of Congress to agitate the question."

Here the accusation made by the honorable Senator is, that I, in the Committee on Printing, in the last session of the last Congress, proposed that Congress should give the printing of the census returns to the Republic. To this I replied as follows:

"As the honorable Senator has never attended any of the meetings of the Committee on Printing, I presume he makes the statement that I was in favor of giving the printing of the census returns to the Republic on the authority of others. All I have to say is, that the gentleman is entirely misinformed."

"Mr. BRIGHT. If I am not correct, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Printing will correct me."

"Mr. BORLAND. I presume the statement of the Senator from Indiana was made on information received from me. He is mistaken, however, in supposing that I said the Senator from Connecticut proposed to give this printing to the Republic. I did say that the Senator from Connecticut was in favor of the proposition made by the Superintendent of the Census to leave the printing to him, and have it executed at that time. Whether he would have had it done at the Republic office or elsewhere, I do not know. But the Superintendent of the Census did express a wish—and that subject came before the committee—to be permitted to have the printing executed as he might think proper at that time. The committee decided that an arrangement of that sort could not be entered into, because the census bill itself, after providing for the execution of the preliminary printing, required that the report of a plan for publishing the census should be made to Congress at the present session, and that the printing of the census returns should be done as this Congress should direct. Therefore they did not feel authorized to enter into any arrangement, or give their assent to anything of that kind. I then understood the Senator from Connecticut, and I now understand him, to have been in favor of the arrangement proposed by the Superintendent of the Census."

"Mr. SMITH. I wish to say a word on this subject. It is very unusual, I believe, to bring into the Senate conversations in the rooms of the committees of this body."

Mr. BRIGHT. I refer for my information to a debate that came up on a collateral question at the last session. I have not the debates before me, but I think that I can turn to them, and show that the honorable Senator from Connecticut expressed a preference at that time for giving to the gentleman who has charge of the Census Bureau the privilege of making a contract for this printing. The inference follows as a matter of course that it would have taken the direction which I indicated."

"Mr. SMITH. I do not know what the gentleman may find recorded in the debates of the Senate, as having been said by me, but I know that I never entertained any such view as that. I must also say, in very broad terms, that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] is entirely mistaken. I do not know but that I may have used language from which he properly inferred what he seems to have inferred, but I have never entertained any such views, but I have been from the beginning totally opposed to breaking up the contract system."

I was taken quite by surprise then, as I am now. I had not the debates to refer to, but I went and searched the records; and on the succeeding day I came to the Senate Chamber, and made the following remarks:

"Mr. President, I wish to make a very few remarks in reply to my honorable friend from Indiana, and I am prompted to do so on account of the personal issue which my honorable friend made with me last evening. That honorable Senator saw fit to remark, that at the last session of Congress he understood me to take ground in the Senate in favor of giving the printing of the census returns to a political press in this city—I think he named the Republic. I then suggested that he was under an entire misapprehension upon that subject. I do not suppose that my honorable friend intended to misrepresent my position in that regard. The truth is, that from the very outset of this business, I have been utterly opposed to the reintroduction into Congress of the old practice of dispensing the public printing on the principle of political favoritism; and it so happens that I find myself on record, in a train of remarks submitted to the Senate, in relation to this very subject of printing the census returns, in which views are expressed such as I had the honor to lay before the Senate yesterday; and I hope the Senate will indulge me in reading from these remarks a few extracts, showing what I said. In the first extract which I will read, I remarked as follows:

"I fully accord in the opinion which has been expressed by my friends on the other side of the Chamber, that the time has gone by for investing the head of any Department with an arbitrary discretion upon this subject of printing."

This is an extract from some remarks made by me during the first session of the last Congress, to which the honorable Senator from Indiana referred.

And then again:

"Now, then, this committee has reported this bill, as I have before remarked, containing the provision of the old law, and conferring on the head of the Department of the Interior the arbitrary power of making a contract with any individual that he pleases, and upon any terms that he may see fit, without advertising, without competition. To any such provision in this bill, I am utterly opposed—not that I believe the honorable gentleman at the head of that Department would abuse the trust thus confided in him; I am convinced he will execute it with as much fidelity as any other of the distinguished citizens of the country."

"Now, sir, in order to realize, or rather to carry out what has been the policy of the Government for several years past, to wit: to have all the printing let out at contract, and given to the lowest bidder, all that is required is the addition of a few words to the clause of the twentieth section."

The last clause reads thus:

"And further, as the returns are made, to cause the same to be classified and arranged in the best and most convenient manner for use; and ——— thousand copies thereof to be printed for distribution."

That was the proposition of the Committee on the Census for giving arbitrary power to the Secretary of the Interior to cause the census returns to be printed.

The extract further proceeds:

"Now, sir, if the amendment of my honorable friend shall fail, I shall propose to add to that clause these words: 'On contract, as now provided by law.' That is to say, to the lowest bidder."

That is, to let it out by contract as now provided by law, by advertising in the newspapers, and subjecting the matter to fair competition. Here was a bill that would have given an absolute discretion to the Secretary of the Interior, and I came forward and said I would agree to no such thing. I could not offer the amendment just at that time, because there was an amendment pending to an amendment; but I said that when that obstacle was cleared out of the way, I would propose an amendment requiring the printing of the census to be let out by contract in conformity with law. But furthermore I remarked—

"I would say that I am not for subsidizing the press of the city, either the Whig or the Democratic press—either the one or the other."

And again:

"As to the scheme of giving the printing, at this late day, to the political press of this city, it is a proposition that I shall resist to the uttermost, and at all times."

And finally, I remarked:

"I intend, sir, to resist now, and at all times hereafter, the connection of the public printing with the political press of this city, whether upon the one side or the other. I therefore insist that the 21st section is exactly right; and with respect to the preceding section, all that is required is simply the addition of four or five words such as I have already suggested to the Senate."

Now, what was this twenty-first section? It was the section which related to the preparatory printing, and it did give discretionary power to the Secretary of the Interior. And I said that was all right, for a special reason. But with regard to the other section, regarding the printing of the returns, I said that it was not right, and that it ought to be so framed as to compel the Secretary of the Interior to let it out to the lowest bidder, and upon full competition.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] merely reads what I said in regard to this twenty-first section, relating to the preparatory printing, while he leaves entirely out of sight what I said on the question now before us. There were special reasons, as I then stated, why the preparatory printing should not be let out to the lowest bidder; and there were other reasons which I will not now repeat.

Now, after I had brought before the Senate and the country, and the Senator himself, the facts and considerations to which I now refer, the honorable Senator rises up and renews the accusation, and all, I suppose, by way of expediting this bill through the Senate. He is in a great hurry to get it through. All I have to say is, that it is rather a novel way of managing a matter of this sort. But not content with this display of diligence in coming over the record, by way of hunting up inconsistencies, of which I may have been guilty at some time or other, the honorable Senator introduces to the Senate a new indictment. He says that I insisted upon it that the prices named in this bill are extravagant; and he further says, that as a member of the Committee on Printing, I have quietly acceded to a contract to have the printing of the Senate and House of Representatives done at the same prices, if not higher prices, which the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. HAMLIN] says are extravagant. I have been a long time associated with that gentleman on the Committee on Printing, and I must say that I never knew him to swerve one hair's-breadth from the strict line of his duty as chairman of that committee, neither for party purposes, nor personal favoritism. He has been much more rigid in dealing with these contracts than I would be disposed to be, and I am rather inclined to think that he was right and that I was wrong.

I have no occasion, Mr. President, to controvert the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND.] I have said nothing about the prices named in this bill. I recollect that I did say something to the Senate on the impropriety of our laying our hands on the departmental printing. I objected to it most decidedly, although I was overruled by a majority of the Senate. I will not enter into the details of the prices we have here. I do not know what they are, or whether they are just or unjust, extravagant or otherwise; but if they somewhat correspond with the prices which the committee agreed to pay to Donelson & Armstrong for the printing of the House, and to Gideon & Co., for the printing of the Senate, I have no doubt that the prices will yield a pretty large profit. I desire, however, to ask the Senator from Indiana whether he supposes that the Committee on Printing could make a contract for a mere fragment of the printing upon the same terms, and as at low a rate as they could make for the whole of the printing for a whole Congress? Sir, we never agreed that Gideon & Co. should have the whole of this printing. We entered into no such stipulation—

Mr. BRIGHT. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire an answer to his question now?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator can answer now, if he chooses?

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that the contract which has been made requires the party undertaking the work, to do just such printing as may be referred to them to execute by either branch of Congress during the present session. It may be all, or a portion only, as Congress may decide.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Indiana does not state the matter accurately, though, doubtless, he intended to do so. The contract amounts simply to this: Messrs. Gideon & Co., and Messrs. Donelson & Armstrong, shall have so much of the printing of this Congress as it is impossible for Mr. Hamilton to execute. That is all. Now, I desire to know from the Senator whether he supposes that as favorable a contract can be made with any printer on the face of God's earth for a mere fragment of the session of Congress, as if the contract were for the whole time? Remember that the contract was not made for the entire printing of the House of Representatives, or for the entire printing of the Senate, but merely for such part of the printing as Mr. Hamilton could not execute during the residue of the session, in conformity with his contract. I will ask the Senator if he, as a business man, supposes that any printer can come forward, and get his presses, his paper, his hands, his letter, for the execution of the printing during a small portion of one session, and then make a contract on as low terms as he would be willing to take, provided that he was going to do the printing of the two Houses of Congress for two entire sessions? Here I will say, that the prices we agreed to give Donelson & Armstrong and Gideon & Co. would be exorbitant in such a case. I should, certainly, not agree to pay such prices for the whole printing. The chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. HAMLIN] was of opinion, that the prices were too high, even for the limited time for which the contract was made, and refused his assent to it. The decision was carried by my vote, added to the three votes of the members of the House of Representatives, who were on the committee. I did not think that the prices were too high, as Messrs. Gideon, and Donelson & Armstrong, were only to have a remnant of the printing for a fragment of the session.

I am going somewhat at length into this statement, because it appears to me to be necessary to do so, in reply to the charges of the Senator from Indiana, but I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate unreasonably, as another honorable Senator [Mr. DONELSON] would wish to make it appear. I never had such a purpose for a moment.

What are the facts connected with this transaction? Although the contracts were made at these rates which the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. HAMLIN] thought to be altogether too high, the contractors have not as yet received a single cent. They got their paper and other necessary materials, and made their arrangements for doing the printing of the two Houses of Congress, but, up to the present day, not a single Congressional document has been put into their hands. I repeat that, from the day the contract was entered into up to the present time, neither Donelson & Armstrong nor Gideon & Co. have derived the slightest benefit from it. I think that these two estabishments have been treated badly. I will not say shabbily, because I do not wish to introduce such an expression into the proceedings of this body. I will use a still stronger expression; I will say that these gentlemen have been treated with the most cruel injustice; and I will do Messrs. Donelson & Armstrong the justice to say that they have been persecuted for no other reason than that they have conducted a Union organ in this city. No other reason can be assigned.

I do not wish to make any reference to the proceedings of the House of Representatives. I do not wish to violate the rules of order in our proceedings; but I am desirous of explaining fully what I understand to be the state of facts. I say, therefore, that Donelson & Armstrong, not being able to get any of the printing of the House of Representatives, for certain reasons which I need not explain, the majority here have refused to give any of the printing of the Senate to Messrs. Gideon & Co. I do not complain of that. I do not bring any accusation of inconsistency against the majority here. I suppose it is all right. But how has this occurred? We have refused to give them the printing of a single document. We have here a report recommending the printing of an extra number of the Patent Office reports, and it has never been acted on up to this day, because the majority was unwilling to give Gideon & Co. any printing until Donelson & Armstrong obtained some from the House of Representatives. Well, I would ask if this is not an instance of great injustice having been done to these gentlemen? I do not hesitate to say that it is.

Now, I think I have effectually exploded indictment number two. If the honorable Senator from Indiana wishes to prosecute this indictment any further, by way of expediting this bill, I am willing to enter into the contest with him just as long as he pleases.

But, Mr. President, I now come down to indictment number three. I am sorry the prosecutor is not present. I do not see him anywhere in this Chamber. Indictment number three is, that I have been addressing the Senate by way of delaying action upon this bill. All I have to say is, that I rose to address the Senate on the merits of the bill. I made two short speeches, and I do not believe that in either instance I occupied more than five minutes. Here is my friend from California on my right; and I should like to hear either him, or any other consistent Democrat, tell me whether my remarks were not to the point—whether I did not speak to the merits of the bill? Everything, Mr. President, was going on smoothly; and I daresay that but for this attack upon me, the bill would have passed by this time. But the honorable Senator from Indiana was not satisfied with passing the bill: he must, in addition to that, demolish the Senator from Connecticut. All I have to say on that point is, that when the enormous powers of Indiana, and the more enormous powers of Illinois, undertake to demolish old Connecticut, whether she is speaking through my honorable colleague or through myself, we are on hand. We are "Green Mountain Boys," Mr. President, and you [Mr. Foor, of Vermont, in the chair] well know what that means. I do not feel quite demolished yet, notwithstanding the accusations of inconsistency, and the still more serious charge of interposing to prevent the consideration of the bill and wasting the time of the Senate. That is the charge. And how came it about? I replied to the accusation of inconsistency, and I have shown that it was unfounded. How, then, am I wasting the time of the Senate? You would have passed the bill before this time, if you had followed the ordinary course; but if you undertake to try me, instead of trying the bill, I mean to be heard in my defense. I believe that I am as consistent as either the Senator from Indiana or any one else.

Now, I believe that I have very briefly gone over the three accusations—the two charges of inconsistency, and the charge of factious conduct here in attempting to defeat the bill by occupying the time of the Senate at this late stage of the session. I did witness something of that sort at the close of the last session, in respect to the river and harbor bill. I thought it was very unreasonable—I will not say outrageous—because I have no right to characterize the conduct of any member of this body. But I did think that it was an unreasonable course to pursue. It is a course which I do not mean to pursue with reference to this bill; but if you are not content with trying the bill on its merits, but choose also to arraign me here on charges of inconsistency, then I am on hand for a hearing. How much you will gain by it, either for the good of the country or yourselves, I am perfectly willing to leave the future to demonstrate. I assail no man. I impeach the motives of no man. I have not done it in the past; I shall not do it in the future. I mean to discuss questions here upon their merits; but I wish Senators to understand that when I am attacked here, either by large giants or little giants, I shall be heard in my defense; and then gentlemen may proceed with their bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I feel that I am somewhat to blame for the speech which has been inflicted upon the Senate by the honorable Senator from Connecticut. I had no idea of drawing out a regular speech, and delaying business at this late hour. I certainly meant nothing unkind toward the honorable Senator, by calling his attention to his former course, and contrasting it with his present position. There was some propriety in my doing so, for the Senator has boasted of the Herculean power which he wields in this body, and was throwing all his strength against this bill. Under these circumstances I felt it to be my duty to show that twelve months ago the Senator would have been the advocate of this bill on the principle laid down to-day, instead of being against it. The honorable Senator says I have arraigned and put him on trial here. Not at all. I have not arraigned the honorable Senator. I preferred no charges against him. I stated on a former occasion that he had taken an opposite view of this question of disposing of the public printing, to that which he has taken to-day; and I did not leave that statement unsupported. It was no mere naked assertion of mine; I read from the record—from a former speech of the honorable Senator—and I proved conclusively that he had heretofore been in favor of the principle laid down in the bill, instead of against it. I further showed, from his own speech, that he stood pledged to bring in a bill asking for a repeal of the contract system, which he has not done. If I had made any charge against the Senator, unsupported by facts, then the honorable Senator might, with some semblance of truth, have said that I had arraigned him, and put him upon his trial. I further stated, that the honorable Senator, as a member of the Committee on Printing, had given to the present printer of this body, under a contract, about the same, if not higher prices than is proposed to be given by the bill under consideration. In that I am supported by the testimony of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] who was at one time a member of the Committee on Printing; and if the chairman of that committee was present, I would appeal to him, and he would corroborate the statement, that the bill under consideration does not propose to pay higher prices than those paid under the contract of the honorable Senator from Connecticut. But I will not further waste the time of the Senate. I have said enough to sustain my declaration, and I have no doubt the bill will be passed, and I do hope without further debate.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the twelfth section of the bill. It provides that a committee, to be called a Committee on Printing, shall consist of three members of this body, and of three members of the House of Representatives, and that the Senators who are appointed on that committee, shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate. This provision is in conflict with a long-established rule of this body, that its committees shall always be appointed by the Senate, unless the Senate itself consent to the appointments by the Presiding Officer. If this bill should pass into a law, one of the most important committees will not be under the control of this body, but will be absolutely appointed by the Presiding Officer. For instance, we all know that when the Vice President of the United States presides over the Senate, he is not under its control, and yet to him the appointment of this committee would be confided, thereby removing it, completely, from the control of the Senate.

It appears to me to have been an oversight on the part of the committee which drafted the bill. I shall, therefore, move to amend the section, by striking out the words "the President of." The section will then read:

And he it further enacted, That a committee of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives shall be appointed by the Senate and Speaker of the House, to be called the Joint Committee on the Public Printing, &c.

The question was taken on the amendment, and, on a division, it was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. I will again call the attention of the Senate to the latter part of the same section. It provides that "all motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document, shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing, from the House in which the same may be made."

If this should become law, then the Senate will have no control whatever over these documents. Every motion for printing extra copies of any bill or report must, of necessity, go to the Committee on Printing. Heretofore, the Senate have always had the control of that matter. As a general rule, it is, perhaps, correct that all such motions should go to the committee, but it may happen, and frequently does happen, that we desire to act on the documents brought before us, immediately, and require that they should be printed immediately. I wish, therefore, that the Senate would observe that the operation of this section of the bill is to take away from the Senate that power which it has always retained, of ordering the printing of extra copies of bills or reports, and to hand it over to a committee which is not under the control of the Senate. As this change appears to me to be inexpedient, I move to strike out that part of the section which I have read.

Mr. BAYARD. I barely want to state that in introducing the amendment which I offered, and which the Senate adopted, I was willing, inasmuch as there was no time to debate the provisions of the bill, and as I objected to its general provisions, if it were to be a permanent system, to agree to it as a temporary measure. My object was to stop debate; but it seems that there is an inclination, which seems to be pretty general, to defeat the bill by offering amendments. Under these circumstances, and judging of this from the course which has been taken, I shall avail myself of the privilege of voting against my own amendment, when it comes up in the Senate, trusting that the bill may be suitably altered next session.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. PRATT. The Senate will notice in the eighth section of the bill a provision, that "the following rates of compensation shall be paid from time to time, for such printing as may be ordered by Congress;" and then, in the eleventh section, the bill provides "that the same prices shall be paid for printing for the Executive Departments that are paid for printing for Congress." Now, the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] said that, although the prices stipulated in the bill for the Congressional printing might be right, yet it would be manifestly wrong to give the same prices for the printing of the Departments; that they could afford to execute the Department printing for less than half the amount which is here allowed for the Congressional printing. If that be so, the matter certainly ought to be corrected. I move, therefore, in the eleventh section to strike out the following words:

"Shall be paid for printing for the Executive Departments that are paid for printing for Congress."

The effect of this amendment is simply to withdraw the prices which are allowed by this bill for Congressional printing, from being applied to the printing of the Departments. The section can afterwards be amended in such manner as to make it read right.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As the Department printing has been referred to again, I will make a remark in explanation of a remark which I made to the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM.] I made my statement in regard to the Department printing not being in accordance with the contract on such statements, as I have heard, and on general rumor. I may have been mistaken; but I do not know it. I do not wish to be understood as affirming it to be correct. I stated what I believed to be true, although it has since been contradicted. I leave the statement to go under the general rumor, without any indorsement from me.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON. I was about to call for the yeas and nays on that last question. As I am up, I will make an inquiry for my own information. It was stated by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] that the printing of the Departments could be done for one half the cost of the printing for Congress. That declaration having been made by a friend of the bill—

Several SENATORS. Oh, no, no. He is no friend of the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Well, he is by no means desirous of preventing the object of the bill from being carried into execution. The matter will create an impression on the public mind that we are intending to impose on the country. It is now announced publicly to the country, by a Senator who is fully informed upon the subject, who is chairman of the Committee on Printing, that we are to pay double the amount which we would otherwise have to pay, and double the amount for this printing which Government has usually paid. I do not know that this is actually so. My attention has been called to it; the impression has been made upon my mind, and it will be made upon the mind of the country. The interrogatory will be propounded, "Why is this done?" Is it to make an appropriation of the public money to a printer who is to be elected without any consideration for such money? If that be so—and it has been so announced, and has not been controverted or denied—will it not be a strange fact to present to our constituents?

Several SENATORS. No, no!

Mr. DAWSON. Gentlemen may say "No;" but I say, "Yes;" and I have come to that conclusion, not from any disposition to embarrass the bill, for in that respect I have not opened my mouth. I wanted to know whether the fact is as I have stated, or if any friend of the measure will deny the assertion. If there be any such, let him rise, and give his reasons for stating that it is not true. I desire to vote understandingly upon the subject, for I am not going voluntarily to give a vote which may take money out of the Treasury, without any adequate consideration for the same. I do not say that this is so; but the declaration was made by the Senator from Maine, and it has not been controverted.

Mr. RUSK. I know that every question which comes up at this time—near as we are to the month of November—will be something like the Indian's barrel of whisky. I was present on one occasion at an Indian "talk," when a man drove up with a barrel of whisky; an old Indian who was sitting by, fixed his eye on the barrel, and after looking earnestly for some time, asked me if I knew what was in that barrel. I said it was whisky, I presumed. No, said he; there are about a thousand songs and fifty fights in that barrel. I do not believe that any proposition can be brought here about this time, which will not contain a vast number of political speeches, and a large amount of party and presidential capital.

I know very little about printing. I was placed on the Committee on Printing by the Senate, and what little knowledge I have has been acquired amidst many other pressing duties. When I went upon the committee, I was anxious that a tariff of prices should be fixed. I wished that that point should be settled, so that there might be no mistake, and that every one might have an opportunity of seeing what was done, and what was paid for it. I did not care how many stump speeches were made, or how much political capital was manufactured on the subject. I desired the printing should be promptly done, and I was willing that a fair, liberal, and remunerative price should be paid for it. I knew that it was all-important that the printing should be done well, and should be done promptly; and I knew that the public printer frequently stands by, and has nothing to do for weeks, and that, suddenly, a large quantity of work is forced upon his hands, to be executed before the next morning. I knew, also, that public printing was no ordinary system of printing, and that the person who took the contract was exposed to much trouble, and heavy expense—he must have hands whether he had work or not.

My object, then, was to ascertain what would be a reasonable and remunerative price, and to pay that price. I had no wish that the Government of the United States should employ men to do its work at a ruinous loss, for I have always been of opinion that the "laborer is worthy of his hire." A few days after I went on the committee we fixed on the tariff of prices that was to be paid on the contract entered into with Gideon & Co., and Donelson & Armstrong, and about which so much has been said. We sent for several persons, disinterested printers—for, as I have said, I knew nothing about printing myself—and we made an attempt to fix fair and remunerative prices. We did so. Subsequently, the whole matter was brought up in the House of Representatives. I had nothing to do with that; but a special committee was appointed by the House of Representatives, and at the head of that committee was an honorable gentleman from Kentucky, a man of great intelligence, above the suspicion of being influenced by party considerations. Being a member of the Senate Committee, I was invited to be present when they attempted to frame a bill. I accepted the invitation, and went, and listened to the discussions. I found several highly-intelligent gentlemen there, Whigs and Democrats, men of high character and great intelligence. I think the majority were Whigs. There were also several Whig and Democratic printers present, perhaps half a dozen in all. Every item was taken up and discussed, and, after a good deal of consultation, rates were fixed upon, which were regarded as being perfectly fair and reasonable.

It is now said that this bill is introduced for the purpose of making the fortune of some especial favorite. I am not a participator in any such project. I never intend to give votes with such an object in view, and never shall give such votes. I belong to the Democratic party, and shall always give to the members of that party such patronage as I have in my power fairly and justly to give, but will never give anything which I may regard as unjust. I have described the manner in which the tariff of prices was formed; and, from what I saw, I was induced to believe that it was reasonable. It was framed in accordance with the best information that could be obtained; and in supporting it now, I do not conceive that I am open to the charge of voting a fortune into any man's hand. At the time those prices were agreed on, no one supposed that it would produce a fortune to any one; all Whigs and Democrats viewed it as a fair and reasonable compensation for the work to be done. But I am aware that the exact amount to be paid is immaterial to the views of some persons, and I am aware that if that amount was increased twenty-five or fifty per cent. there would be no more political capital made out of it than there will be now. All this outcry, I think, will die off after November next.

Mr. PRATT. I do not think that the anecdote of the barrel of whisky, told by the Senator from Texas, is entirely applicable to my amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I was speaking to the bill, not to the amendment offered by the honorable Senator, [Mr. PRATT,] which had been acted upon by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. That amendment has been decided in the negative.

Mr. PRATT. Then I do not understand what we are discussing. I thought the question on the amendment offered by me was still pending.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. RUSK. Allow me to say that I spoke in reply to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. DAWSON.] I made no reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT,] for that was decided.

Mr. PRATT. I understood that the yeas and nays were called for on that question.

The PRESIDENT. Not until after the Chair had announced the decision.

Mr. DAWSON. I rose to call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. Yes; but not until after the vote was declared.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I merely wish to mention one fact, in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Texas: After the tariff was framed by the committee, composed of Whigs and Democrats, and sanctioned by the House of Representatives, on the motion of a Democratic member of the House of Representatives, twenty-five per cent. was deducted from the prices agreed upon by the committee for the greater part of the work. So that the bill has actually come to us with a reduction of twenty-five per cent. on the prices agreed on by the committee of the two Houses. In view of this fact, I think it will appear that we have ample security that the prices proposed in the bill are not too much for the work.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to inquire from my friend from Texas, whose fairness in regard to this matter I never doubted in the least, whether he understood that, when the committee had gentlemen before them for the purpose of making an inquiry into the prices of composition, press-work, and so forth, the committee had this specific bill under consideration?

Mr. RUSK. By no means. I said that we had fixed on a tariff to apply to the temporary contract which was made with Messrs. Gideon & Co., and with Messrs. Donelson & Armstrong; and I said that we had some practical printers there, who agreed about the prices that should be paid on that contract. I think that the Committee on Printing had nothing to do with this bill, except that two of the members were present at the meeting of the special committee, to which I have referred.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Texas has compared all the items of the contract that was made with Gideon & Co. and Donelson & Armstrong?

Mr. RUSK. No, I have not.

Mr. SMITH. Nor have I. I have not had the opportunity to do so; and thus, it appears to me, that we are legislating entirely in the dark. Nobody knows what the prices of this bill are; and if it passes, I am perfectly certain—admitting that it is not the intention of the honorable Senator to confer exorbitant profits on any one—that it will put an enormous fortune into the hands of the printer, the very first Congress that it goes into effect. I deeply regret that the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. HAMLIN] is not present; he is more conversant with these details than I am, and would be much more able to point out to the Senate the probable results of the measure. He totally objected to give to Donelson & Armstrong and Gideon & Co. the prices which the committee agreed to give. He considered that it was exorbitant—altogether too much. Why, sir, during the first Congress that such prices were given for the whole work, it would realize to any man a fortune of $100,000, and the system would break itself down by the weight of its own corruption.

I do not wish to obtrude myself unreasonably upon the Senate on this subject. I had a series of amendments which I contemplated to propose to this bill, with the view of changing its character in several essential particulars; but I see clearly that a majority of the Senate are determined to take the bill anyhow, and therefore I will not unnecessarily consume the public time by proposing amendments here which I know will be unavailing. Still I desire to say, in all candor, that I regard this as an improvement upon the old system—I mean the system which existed prior to the contract system. The separation of the supply of paper from the composition and press-work is a very great improvement, and I am inclined to think that the appointment of a Superintendent is a great improvement. There is much in the bill that I really approve; and if we only had time for its consideration, which we might have taken since last December, we might have had a well-matured system of printing now in operation. But, sir, I see no necessity for passing this bill during the present session; and if the honorable Senator will consent to let it lie over until the next session, I will undertake to satisfy him that it is wrong in many essential particulars.

There are features in the bill, which I admit, are a decided improvement. I admit that, as we manage the contract system now, it has proved a failure; and, I will admit further, that the existing state of things is absolutely intolerable. But there are some features in this bill which I regard as downright enormities. When I use that word I do not impeach the motives of any honorable Senator. But here is the departmental printing let out to the lowest bidder, and is done satisfactorily to the head of every Department; and I give notice that I will insert in my published remarks the letters which I have from all the heads of Departments, or I will have them brought in here and read. Here is a system in operation, which is an admirable system, a system free from every imputation of corruption, a system in the highest degree economical, a system which is satisfactory to the Government—and why is not that system permitted to remain as it is? I shall take the sense of the Senate on this point. If I had a favorable opportunity, and there were time, as there is not, I would endeavor to shape the bill in conformity with what I think it should be, entertaining as I do opinions in substantial coincidence with the chairman of the Committee on Printing, [Mr. HAMLIN.] I say that if I were encouraged to make the effort, I would propose a series of amendments, and I would explain precisely the grounds on which I would put the subject.

But, as I have already said to the Senate, it is not my practice to make efforts which I know beforehand will be useless. I will therefore content myself with asking the yeas and nays on the question, whether the majority will really insist on breaking up the contract system, when it is not desired by the Departments, when it is economical and satisfactory to everybody who has anything to do with the subject. I will content myself with the yeas and nays, and if the Senate choose to lay hands on the whole, why then, with the whole, they will take the responsibility.

Mr. BRIGHT. I regret that I am compelled to consume a moment of the time of the Senate; but the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut call for a reply from me. They would convey the impression abroad, that some of the members of this body are prepared to vote for the bill blindly, and without any consideration as to the amount that it would be necessary to pay out of the public Treasury for the work. Now, I give notice to that Senator that I do not give my votes here in that manner, and I will tell him that before I determined whether I should vote for this bill, I made inquiries relative to the scale of prices contained in it, of a gentleman who may be considered an authority on such subjects, and whose name I will give to the honorable Senator—it is Mr. J. C. Rives. He informed me that the bill, taking it as a whole, was a fair bill, and that the prices were not too high.

Mr. HALE. I have here an amendment which I offer as a substitute to the bill, striking out all after the enacting clause. I ask that it may be read by the Secretary.

It was accordingly read, as follows:

That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Superintendent of the Public Printing, who shall be a practical printer, of education and experience in the business of printing, the term of whose office shall be four years, unless sooner removed by the President, or by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives; who shall receive an annual compensation for his services, of $2,500, and give bond to the United States in the sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said Superintendent shall take charge of and be responsible for all original or other matter directed by the proper authority to be printed, and cause the same to be promptly executed, as required, and shall return it in good order to the officer from whom it was received, as may be required by such officer; and purchase for the United States, as the same may be required, at the usual and at reasonable prices, such presses, type, and other printing materials as may be necessary for the execution of all the printing required at the seat of Government, by, or for the use of, either of the Executive Departments of the Government, or by either or both Houses of Congress; to employ, at the usual and proper wages, such foremen, compositors, pressmen, proof-readers, and other persons, as he shall deem indispensably necessary for the accurate, speedy, economical, and faithful execution of the public printing, and to discharge either of them for incompetency or other sufficient cause, to be stated by him on the records of the office; to purchase by contract, after due notice for sealed proposals, of the lowest and best bidder, and according to the quality of the samples to be exhibited by him, all such paper as may be necessary for said printing; and to render an account annually to each House of Congress, (or oftener if required by either House,) of all of his expenditures for the purposes aforesaid.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall also be the duty of the said Superintendent to pay, on the first day of every month, all bills for the purchase of materials for the use of the said office; and all wages due to the persons employed in and about said establishment, for their labor during the preceding week; and for that purpose he shall be authorized to draw, monthly, from the Treasury of the United States, all such sums of money as may be required therefor, to be ascertained by a statement thereof to be made by him, and presented to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and on such approval he shall be authorized to receive the said sums from the Treasury.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said Superintendent shall appoint a practical bookbinder, possessing a thorough knowledge of the business, who shall receive $1,000 a year for his services. And the said bookbinder may, with the approbation of the Superintendent, employ such bookbinders and other persons as may be indispensably necessary to a neat, prompt, and economical execution of the folding, stitching, and binding, that may be directed by law, or by the order of either House of Congress, or be necessary to secure together the several sheets of which a document may consist; the wages of such bookbinders and other persons to be regulated by those paid for similar services in other binderies in the United States, and be paid by the said Superintendent; and the said Superintendent shall have the power to discharge the said binders and other persons whenever the public interest shall require, and he shall purchase all the materials required for said binding in the same manner as is hereinbefore directed for the purchase of paper.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all printing directed by law, or by either of the executive departments of the General Government in pursuance of law, or such as may be necessary to the execution of law, and all other printing directed by the Senate or House of Representatives, or both, and all folding, stitching, and binding required for the same or directed by law, shall be executed at the said public printing office, and in the manner required; but no private printing or binding of any description whatsoever, or for any person or persons whomsoever, shall be received at or executed in said office; and any infraction of this prohibition, by any person belonging to either of said offices, shall be deemed and acted upon as a good cause for the removal of such person, so offending, from public employment.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That for the regulation and government of the persons, business, expenditures, and every other object or matter connected with the said public printing office, rules shall be prepared by the said Superintendent, the Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, which, when confirmed and approved by the Committees on Printing of both Houses of Congress, shall be binding, and shall be observed and enforced by the said Superintendent.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the resolution entitled "Joint resolution directing the manner of procuring the printing for the two Houses of Congress," approved August 3d, 1846, shall be, and the same is hereby rescinded.

Mr. HALE. This amendment, it will be perceived by those who have taken the trouble to listen to it, proposes the establishment of a Government printing office. In all essential improvements it goes as far as the other bill does; only it does not provide for two or three middle men between the Superintendent and the printers who are to receive the profits. It authorizes the Superintendent to employ printers to do the work; it makes the printing to be done under a bureau of the Government. In other words, it is to have the printing done in such a way that nobody loses on it. The wages are to be paid to those who do the work. I submit the proposition to the Senate, and ask the yeas and nays upon it.

Now permit me to say a single word in regard to the provisions of the other bill, for which this is a substitute. I suppose it is not worth while for us to affect to be a great deal purer than we are, and we might as well look at the matter as it exists, as to pretend to mystify it. What, then, is the fact? There are published in this city a certain number of daily papers, and I believe that of all the papers published in the city there is but one that has brains enough to live upon its own resources.

A SENATOR. Which is that?

Mr. HALE. It is one that is not knocking at the door of Congress for Treasury pay. But, sir, there has been one paper which was made the special organ of the great interests of a great portion of the country, and yet it could not live. It died; and the others are suffering under the same complaint—a sort of collapse of the stomach; and unless something be done for their relief, they must follow the fate of their illustrious predecessor. It had no brains, and therefore it could not think; it had no heart, and therefore it could not feel; it had no cash, and therefore it could not live. [Laughter.] With this complication of disorders it has gone the way of all the earth, and has left a mournful valedictory behind it. Well, Mr. President, there is danger that this complaint is contagious, and unless something is done for the relief of the other papers they will be apt to go the same way. This bill is intended to subvert great public interests—no doubt that is the object, the highest motives of patriotism which impels them to pursue the course they are taking—but we cannot help looking a little at the incidental consequences which follow their patriotic action.

I take it, sir, that without any impeachment of the patriotism of those gentlemen who urge the adoption of this bill, we may take a glance at some of the incidental consequences that may result from it. I believe that is unquestionably intended for the relief of some of those newspaper establishments in this city, which cannot live without aid. They cannot do it, Mr. President. The experiment has been repeatedly tried here both by Whigs and Democrats, and it has always failed. There is something unhealthy in the air of this District for these party organs. They cannot live without such aid as this bill is intended to confer. And when that is the fact, when we all know it, what is the use of pretending ignorance of what is obvious to all? For my part, I think that newspapers should live here as they do everywhere else. If they can commend themselves by their own resources, their talents, and their ingenuity and enterprise, to the community, so as to be supported, it is an evidence that they are worthy of support, and do not need our assistance. It is only those sickly, rickety things which are not worth raising that come and ask for aid, simply because they are unable to support themselves. For this reason I propose that we do our own printing, and that we appoint a Superintendent, who will know when the printing is done well, and who will be able to act without the intervention of two or three contractors. What necessity is there for these contractors? Suppose you pass this bill, and it becomes law, a Superintendent will be appointed; if my amendment passes a Superintendent will also be appointed. If this bill passes, you will pay him a salary of $2,500 a year; my amendment proposes exactly the same thing. What, then, is the difference? Simply this: My amendment will cause every cent that is paid out of the public Treasury to go directly into the hands of those who do the work; but pass the bill for which this is a substitute, and you will have a person elected for Superintendent. You will have printers elected who probably know as much about printing as of anything else which they do not understand, and they will stand between the Superintendent and the workmen, for the purpose of receiving the profits. What necessity is there for these contractors? If profits are to be made, let them go to those who have the labor to perform. But it seems to be very much the habit of thinking with some gentlemen who are in favor of this bill, to suppose that it is impossible to execute any labor without the intervention of an overseer. I do not see the necessity of it myself. Suppose that the printers who do this work are competent, and that the Superintendent is competent, and able to take charge of the establishment, what use is there for these gentlemen contractors to come and stand between him and the men who do the work? There may be some object to gain, some purpose to serve, but I am very much afraid that it does not now meet the public eye. If we are merely desirous of getting the public printing done properly, let us adopt this amendment, and then we can appoint our own officers; and if they do not perform their work properly, we can grumble to our heart's content, and replace them by those who will.

We have tried the contract system, and it failed—that is conceded. We have tried the plan of electing a public printer, and it failed—that is conceded. Let us now, then, take the thing into our own hands altogether; appoint our own Superintendent; hire our own workmen; buy our own paper and presses; and in that way we can do the work to our own satisfaction, and as cheaply as by any other mode. The only real and substantial difference between the plan proposed by the bill, and the plan proposed by my amendment, will be that, by the latter, there will be no middle man, no daysman, to come in between the Government and the laboring men. For these reasons, I think the amendment is preferable.

I beg pardon for having occupied so much of the time of the Senate; but I have not spoken before on this subject; I have listened in silence to the admonitions which Senators have given each other. I will not follow the example set me, by inflicting an admonition on any one, but shall content myself by asking the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. WELLER. There are many of us here who are satisfied that the contract system, after an experiment, has most signally failed. We are desirous, therefore, of resorting to the old plan of electing a public printer, who shall be responsible to Congress for the manner in which he discharges his official duties. Being satisfied of that, the first question which naturally presents itself is, what compensation shall be allowed to this public printer? Now, Senators who have no knowledge whatever upon the subject of printing, would very naturally inquire with regard to it of those whose vocation it was to understand that business. I say that it was very natural that those who are intrusted with the examination of this question should have called to their aid the information which had been acquired and could be furnished by practical printers. It has been disclosed to the Senate that the joint committee, which was selected upon this subject, have brought before them practical printers, and from the statement of these printers they have fixed upon a certain tariff of prices to be paid for the public printing. Now I ask, is there anything unjust or unfair in this? Was there any other way by which the committee could put themselves in possession of the information necessary to enable them to decide this question? We have the statement of these Senators that this course has been adopted.

I profess to be actuated by no other consideration than a desire to have the public printing faithfully and fairly executed. I say, therefore, that the Senator from New Hampshire had no right to impugn the motives of Senators here, in advocating this bill. He had no right to say, or to insinuate that we, upon this side of the Chamber, were desirous of bolstering up a party press in the city of Washington. Senators who act from pure motives themselves, are not apt to impute improper motives to others. Whether the Abolition organ monopolizes all the brains of the editorial fraternity in Washington, is not, perhaps, material in the adjustment of this question. But I desire to say that the Senator from New Hampshire has no right to intimate that we, on this side of the Chamber, have a desire to bolster up a party press in the city of Washington. We claim to be actuated by high and honorable motives. We claim to be satisfied that the contract system has utterly failed, and that some other course must be adopted in order to secure the proper execution of the public printing. We claim to be willing to give to that public printer, whoever he may be, a just and fair compensation for that duty. Therefore, I say, it did not become the Senator from New Hampshire to impute improper motives to gentlemen upon this side, to intimate that, because one of the political organs in this city has been extinguished, therefore it was possible another party press might be in the same position, and that it was our desire to do—what? To seize upon the public treasure to build up a party press. Does the Senator from New Hampshire believe it? Does he believe that there are Senators on this side of the Chamber who are so strongly actuated by party considerations that they would seize upon the public treasure to prevent a political paper from going out of existence? If he does believe it, he ought to have the manliness to avow it and not to insinuate. Sir, I am for fair play, and for fair dealing; and if I attempt to assail the motives of a man, I will say so to his face, openly. I will not insinuate that he is trying to steal the public money for improper purposes.

I have felt myself called upon to say this much in reply to the insinuations that have been made by the Senator from New Hampshire. I believe he has been the first one who has intimated that we were actuated by improper motives, or by a desire to sustain a party press at the expense of the public Treasury. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I believe that in the little time I have been in the Senate, I have not been accused of concealing what I had to say; and I can tell the honorable Senator from California, that I shall not begin at this late day. I did not say what he put into my mouth, nor anything like it.

The PRESIDENT. If the Senator had, he would have been called to order.

Mr. HALE. Then you and I agree, Mr. President, however it may be with the Senator from California. I did not say it, nor did I insinuate it; and I can only say, that if the Senator got any such idea, he got it from a place inside his own waistcoat, and not from anything I said. Sir, I am a little surprised at the manner of the Senator from California. I was not surprised at the extreme intonations—I do not know their names—of his musical tones, the high and the low; but I can tell the honorable Senator that the views which I advanced, I entertain. If I am obnoxious to anything which he has said, it may be found in the fact that I do not bring out, in quite so bold relief as I might have done, the plain, naked truth, which everybody else admits except the Senator from California. Would the Senator from California, or anybody else upon this floor, deem it an impeachment of his integrity to have it said that he was desirous of building up the party press with which he was associated? Why, sir, the honorable Senator from Texas openly avowed, but a few minutes before the honorable Senator from California spoke, that whilst he was here as a member of the Senate, he would give to the press he was associated with any patronage that fairly came within his disposition.

Mr. WELLER. So would I.

Mr. HALE. Well, that is going a great way further than I intimated gentlemen might go. And when the honorable Senator from Texas had avowed it so plainly, surely there was no necessity for me to insinuate as a fact that which had been boldly proclaimed as a principle of action. I simply said this, and I want to repeat it, because I am astonished at the exhibition the Senator from California has made, that the motives of those Senators were honorable and patriotic. Does the Senator take that as ironical? Does he think that it is an insinuation to say that gentlemen's motives are honorable and patriotic? That was just exactly what I did say. And then I said, their motives being honorable and patriotic, it was well enough not to pretend to shut our eyes to the incidents which follow in the train of patriotism. Was there anything wrong in that? Sir, we have the declaration of inspiration that "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come;" and it was never supposed to be an impeachment of the Apostle's piety that he made the discovery. No, sir, I have had my own motives impeached, too often, and too long, and too openly, and too boldly—I have felt it in my own experience too much and too keenly—to retort upon anybody else. I have sat here for five years past and breasted the storm of vituperation and impeachment of my motives almost every time that I opened my mouth; and if it has had no other effect, it has impressed upon my heart a lesson which I shall never forget, and from which I shall never depart, and that is, not to impeach the motives of others. I have never done so, sir. In fact, my fault has been that I have gone so far the other way in attributing honorable motives to Senators that they have thought the exuberance of my compliments was an impeachment of my sincerity. [Laughter.] That has been my fault, if anything.

Now, sir, I say, once for all, that I think the Senator from California must have misunderstood me. He misunderstood me when he undertook to impeach my motives. If he did not misunderstand me then, he will find that he misunderstands me now, if he thinks that I am to be, by any consideration, deterred from the expression of my honest convictions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to inquire why has the contract system failed, if it be a failure? Why are we to monopolize this business of printing, and give it to whom we please, excluding all competition? If you trace it, I apprehend it will be found it is just because we ourselves have not had the firmness to rein people up, and make them abide by the contracts into which they have entered. Now, sir, while the contract system upon advertisement has been carried out with regard to all the other business of the country, is it not derogatory to ourselves to proclaim that we cannot have that system succeed here which succeeds everywhere else? If it is to be abandoned, I am for the plan suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Allow me here to say that I have been sufficiently long in this and the other branch of Congress, to see the operation of this system in all its various phases, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a few considerations. Suppose you adopt this change, and go back to the old plan, which was in vogue when I came here, of electing your public printer, will it follow that the favorite of a party will always succeed? Not unless by party drill and caucus machinery you can concentrate the votes beforehand upon that favorite; for there will be division; there will be cliques; there will be counter interests; and by dividing, you will have these things in party machinery, which will be inimical to the best interests of the party. It will be made on a ground by which you will endeavor to keep up party, and party interests. My word for it, the desire for the spoils and the accumulation of wealth, are sufficient motives to appeal to everything of that sort. Is it prudent—is it proper, to lay a foundation by which such struggles can be introduced into party, or among the members of Congress? I am opposed to it. I am opposed to it, because these are principles which often operate upon the human heart, and I could give you instances where I believe they have operated, but I will not do it, because it might excite feelings unpleasant to myself and others; but everybody can see, from the mere statement of facts, how this thing will operate. Is there any party advantage in it? I do not believe there is. I look at some of the publications in the party press of the day, both in regard to General Scott and General Pierce, with the utmost abhorrence.

The PRESIDENT. That is not the subject under consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not intend to make a party question of it; but the view I am presenting has a direct bearing upon this case. An argument has been suggested here, that this is a party maneuver for the purpose of getting party advantage. I wanted to state my candid conviction that no party advantage can be obtained in this way, by patronizing a party press at the expense of other presses, and thereby to show that an argument based upon considerations of that sort ought not to prevail, to influence Senators to vote for this bill.

A suggestion has been made that the minds of gentlemen will be influenced to vote for this bill by party considerations and party advantages. My argument against that is, that there can be no such party advantage obtained; and in support of that argument, I say that there is no right-minded man—there is no sensible man who will look at the slanders against the nominees of both the Democratic and Whig parties, but must feel the disgust which I have already expressed. Instead of its doing any good, if the party press is to be maintained for the purpose of propagating slander of that sort, it will do harm to the party that employs such machinery. That is my candid conviction. It seems to me sometimes that I can almost fancy that I see the very motives of the heart, when it has been penning a sentiment, to put in print for party purposes, which shall steer as near the truth as possible in words, while the collocation of those words is such as to convey a lie, and thereby to deceive. I hope and believe the public sentiment of the country is becoming awakened to this species of party tactics, and is becoming disgusted with it. The party that resorts to anything of that sort will fail before an intelligent community.

I mention these things to show that these party considerations cannot, and ought not to operate here as a motive for passing any such bill; and that we ought, if we can, to resort to the system of contract—an open field, and fair competition. If we cannot resort to that, then you ought to establish a Government press, if for no other reason, for the purpose of getting clear of these political influences, and for the purpose of getting clear of these imputations upon the motives of Senators and Representatives, and of escaping those involvements in contests such as I have seen prevail before.

The yeas and nays were ordered on Mr. HALE's amendment; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chase, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Hale, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pearce, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Charlton, De Sausure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Sumner, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—28.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, when his name was called, rose and said: Upon this question, and upon this bill, I have paired off with the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS,] and do not feel at liberty to vote.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall not tire the Senate with a speech; but the position in which I feel myself placed on this occasion, requires me to say a few words to put myself, as I consider, right upon the record. I regret exceedingly to appear in seeming opposition to the political party to which I belong, to the service of which I have devoted my life, and in the success of which I feel as deep an interest, I apprehend, as any Senator on this floor.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 147.

I would vote for this bill if, in my own conscience, I could do so. I am very sorry that I cannot vote for it. I believe the principle of the bill is right. It is what I have advocated ever since I have been in the Senate. I believe I should not object to the individuals who will probably—if the bill passes; and I suppose it will pass—be made public printers. I apprehend I should go with the majority of my party in that choice. But, sir, I object to the bill, and shall be compelled to vote against it, for one or two reasons, which I will briefly state.

In the first place, although I think the principle of the bill is right, yet I think its details are impracticable. I think its working will be mischievous instead of beneficial. I agree with those Senators who have said that the contract system has failed. I have considered it a failure from the beginning. That has ever been my conviction. I think it ought to be abandoned; it ought to be substituted by a system resting upon the principle of this bill; but this bill contains within itself provisions which are, in my opinion, contradictory to each other and impracticable in operation. It lays down foundations of disputes which we shall never get over, if we once get into them. It provides for two printers, one to do the printing of the House, and the other to do the printing of the Senate. Now, if we elect two separate individuals, it will raise up a dispute with which we shall be troubled during the rest of the time that it is in operation. We shall have disputes between these two printers as to who shall do the bulk of the printing, and who shall get the profits. For instance, if we order the printing of a large number of the Patent Office report, what will be the effect of it?

The bill provides that the printer to the House where the first order is made shall do the printing. It forbids payment for double composition. It will then be a contest between the two Houses who shall order first, and who shall order most for the purpose of sustaining its own printer. If we should order fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office report first, the work would be done by our printer. Then suppose the House should order one hundred thousand copies. Double composition cannot be paid for; the bill forbids it; and there will be the House printer ordered by the House to print one hundred thousand copies of this work which our printer will have already printed.

Mr. DOWNS. I would ask the honorable Senator if there is not a provision in the bill that such a question shall be submitted to the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. BORLAND. I know that some such provision is made, but it leads to the very difficulty which I suggested. It gives rise to disputes which we will find it exceedingly troublesome to settle.

Mr. WELLER. How did we get along when each House had its own printer?

Mr. BORLAND. I would say to the Senator from California, that we had a printer who undertook the whole work by contract, and when a particular document was ordered to be printed by the Senate, it was printed under that contract, and when additional numbers were ordered by the House, they were printed by the same individual as additional numbers for the reduced compensation which the contract provided. But in this case, each printer will have an equal right to do the work. Each will be acting under the orders of the respective Houses. If the printer of the House should be required to print one hundred thousand copies of the Patent Office report—as the order of the House I apprehend will be—he will not be allowed to charge for double composition, or for the first execution of the work; and he will be required, under the terms of this bill, to do it at a reduced price, for which he will tell you he cannot do it. Yet, having been elected printer, and required to do the work, he will have a legal obligation upon him to execute it without the ability to do it. He will thus be deprived of profits, in consideration and anticipation of which he was required to have a printing establishment competent to do the work. There is a practical difficulty in the way.

Then the bill fixes the prices for Executive printing at the same rates as Congressional printing. Any one who has a practical knowledge of the printing which is done for the Houses of Congress, and that which is done for the Executive Departments, knows very well how the printers regard it. He knows very well that the printing for Congress cannot be done for the same rates as those paid for departmental printing; and here you will be paying a high rate for printing which can be done at a lower rate. If the rate you have agreed upon were a reduced rate, or if it were one no more than fair, and what you could command the work for in the market, then this would not be an objection; but the rates fixed are, in my opinion—and it has been formed after a somewhat careful examination—from twenty to twenty-five per cent. higher than you can go into the market and get the work done for. I may be wrong in this. I do not state it as a rule to govern the opinions and views of other Senators. I am simply giving the reasons which will control me in casting my vote. You are providing in this bill to put all printing on the same footing as to compensation. You can go into the market and get a portion of it done for a much smaller price than you are giving, at the lowest rate of compensation, and more than—if you go into the market—you can get the highest-priced printing done for.

These are practical objections to the bill, which, to my mind, are insuperable. Then, there is another practical difficulty. You provide that a Superintendent of Printing shall be appointed—a single individual—at a salary of $2,500 a year. You require him to do more work than any ten men in the city of Washington can do, and you have made no provision for any assistants for him. You require the Superintendent to do work which I venture the assertion, that no ten practical men, or to speak within bounds, no five men here, however intelligent, active, and skillful, can do. You provide a single man to do that much work. That objection could be remedied by authorizing the Superintendent to employ assistants, and give him the means of paying them; but there is no such provision in the bill.

I stated before that I was in favor of the principle of the bill; but I say this bill is so defective in its provisions that you cannot execute it. It requires impossible things. The amount of compensation which it provides is put where it is not needed, and it is omitted where it is absolutely necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill. High prices are put on that portion of the work which can be done for from twenty to twenty-five per cent. less than you provide.

There is another objection in my mind, though I admit it is a minor one. You give the control of all this Congressional printing—printing which we now keep within our own authority and control—to the Executive, without any voice on the part of the Senate to say aye or no. You provide for the appointment of a Superintendent of Printing, who shall have charge of this whole work, involving, as I believe, under the principles proposed in this bill, an expenditure of from a million to a million and a half of dollars a year. The Superintendent, who is to expend it, is to be wholly irresponsible to us, and to be appointed by the Executive, without any voice on the part of the Senate. Now, the Constitution gives to the President the power to fill by appointment the offices which we may establish by law. We may require that the nomination of an individual to an office may be sent to us for confirmation; but here it is left entirely to the Executive, wholly irresponsible to us. Yet the expenditure, as I believe, of more than $1,000,000 a year is to be intrusted to the hands of an Executive appointee, who is to be wholly irresponsible to us, and beyond our control. To this I am opposed.

There are many other minor objections to the bill which I could point out; but, having stated those which are controlling so far as my own vote is concerned, I shall not trouble the Senate with going any further into the subject. I make no factious opposition to the bill, but I venture to predict now that if it be passed in its present form, those who vote for it will hereafter, in bitterness, regret it, not only because it will be disastrous in its effects upon the public work, but it will be disastrous upon the political party who stamp it with their sanction and approbation.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the question was on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to insert at the end of the twelfth section:

"Provided, That the preceding sections of this act shall continue in force until the fourth day of March, 1853, and no longer."

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BORLAND. If this amendment of the Senator from Delaware, which was adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and proposed by him for considerations which were controlling at the time, be adopted now, I admit that much of what I considered as disasters to result from this bill will be avoided, and we shall guard against many mischiefs which I think will result from the bill in its present form. If this amendment, however, should be rejected, I think all the evils which I have pointed out will result.

Mr. WELLER. I only wish to say, that if the amendment be adopted, the whole bill will, in my judgment, be rendered worthless, and of no consequence.

The question being taken, by yeas and nays, upon concurring in the amendment, resulted—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Borland, Brooke, Chase, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Fish, Foot, Hale, Mason, Pearce, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, and Wade—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Charlton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—22.

So it was not concurred in.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to ask whether this bill interferes with the contracts made for the present Congress?

Several SENATORS. It does not.

Mr. SMITH. There is an express provision in the thirteenth section that it shall not interfere with existing contracts.

Mr. BORLAND. As I wish this matter to be understood, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the bill, as I understand it, provides for the preservation and continuance of all contracts with the Departments; but I do think it in effect substitutes another mode of executing the public printing for Congress from this time, on the ground that the contract already made for the public printing has failed.

Mr. DAWSON. What I want to understand is, whether we, by this act, declare null and void the existing contract for the printing of this Congress.

Mr. CASS. We do not say a word about it.

Mr. SMITH. I do not understand this matter as the Senator from Arkansas does. The thirteenth section provides:

"That all acts or joint resolutions conflicting with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the cancellation of any contract now or heretofore entered into with any printer, under the laws heretofore in force, or to abrogate his rights in any way without his consent."

I understand this clause to preserve whatever rights Mr. Hamilton may have under his contract—and, I must confess, I do not think he has many—and to preserve, also, the rights of Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co. I say that contracts have been made with these gentlemen, under outstanding laws, but those contracts have not been carried into effect.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state to him that I heard the consent of both these parties read in a public meeting, by which they assented to abandon their contracts.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know but that it is so. I do not know but that Gideon & Co. have assented to give up their contract. If they have said that they will give up their contract, and are to come in under the provisions of this bill, it is pretty conclusive evidence to my mind, that they expect to get a great deal better terms under the bill than under the contract the committee made with them. This reveals to the Senate and to the country, the fact that there is an underhanded agreement between the Union and Republic offices, because, if this be true, the business is to be given to the Union, and the Republic is to be let in to participate in the profits.

Mr. CASS. We have to elect the printer. This bill does not make a printer.

Mr. SMITH. This bill does not make a printer, but we know very well who is to be elected printer. Gentlemen tell us that the Republic office and the Union office are both willing to give up their contracts. We know very well what that means. I did not suppose that the Republic office would consent to give up its contract. I did not rise to dwell upon the subject. I rose simply that it might be understood that I differed from the honorable Senator from Arkansas in regard to the construction of the provision in the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. I proceeded upon the supposition that no such bill as this would have been introduced and passed, if such was not to be its effect. I apprehend that a majority of the two Houses of Congress would not pass a bill that was to be wholly inoperative, and that could not, by possibility, be carried into effect.

Mr. SMITH. I would inquire if this bill cannot operate upon the next Congress? I will not dwell upon the subject; I did not rise to occupy the time of the Senate, but simply to say that I shall insist, if it becomes necessary to insist, that if Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co., abandon their contracts, the rights of the present contractor, Mr. Hamilton, shall be respected.

Mr. SEWARD. I have no information which seems to me to be entirely authentic with regard to the fact that Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co., have consented to the abrogation of their contracts. If they have consented, or shall consent, no harm will be done by securing their rights until they do consent. If they have not consented, it may be well to attempt to save their rights. I therefore move to amend the bill in the thirteenth section, by inserting after the word "consent," the words "nor to abrogate the existing contracts with Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co., without their consent."

Mr. WELLER. There is no sort of doubt about these gentlemen having utterly abandoned their contracts. I understand that they have given them up, and that in writing.

Mr. CASS. I do not suppose there is any existing contract at all with them. I wish the honorable Senator from Arkansas would state the facts, for I believe there has been nothing done under those contracts.

Mr. BORLAND. I will state my understanding of the matter. When the contractor for the public printing, Mr. Hamilton, failed—in the estimation of the committee—to fulfill his contract, they proceeded under what they understood to be their authority, under the joint resolution of 1846, to make a contract with Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co., to execute so much of the printing as the committee might give them. They executed contracts on these terms, but the committee up to this time, as I understand, have never given them any of the public printing. Those contracts have never been carried into effect. The passage of this bill repeals the joint resolution of 1846, and takes away the committee. It leaves them without any functions to perform. They cannot, after the passage of this bill, give out any printing, and for that reason the contracts with Donelson & Armstrong, and Gideon & Co., fail of necessity, by operation of law. According to their own terms, they depend upon the will of the committee; and the committee itself being abolished by the passage of this law, and provision being made for another committee, no power exists to fulfill those contracts.

Mr. RUSK. It will be impossible to amend this bill so as to guard it better in that respect than it already is. The thirteenth section provides that—

"All acts or joint resolutions conflicting with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the cancellation of any contract now, or heretofore, entered into with any printer, under the laws heretofore in force, or to abrogate his rights in any way without his consent."

ions of this act, are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the cancellation of any contract now, or heretofore, entered into with any printer, under the laws heretofore in force, or to abrogate his rights in any way without his consent."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would state in addition, that the chairman of the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives holds, I know, the written release of the parties to these contracts, surrendering them up entirely.

Mr. CASS. What right has any member of the Senate to question it, when one of our worthy associates here in the Senate says that he himself has seen the release? I think that should put an end to the dispute.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not know how much reflection there is upon me, in the question put by the honorable Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CASS. None at all.

Mr. SEWARD. I did not understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that he had seen a release of the contract. At the distance I am from him, perhaps I heard him imperfectly; but what I heard him say was, as I understood it, that in a public meeting he had heard read the consent of the parties. What kind of a public meeting it was, where it was, and who were present, he has not stated.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement of the Senator from New York is correct. I did not say that I saw the release, but I heard it read, and I presumed it to be correct. I did not examine personally to see that it was genuine.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know that the release is in the hands of a member of the Committee on Printing of the House.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COOPER asked for the yeas and nays on the question of ordering the bill to a third reading, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Sumner, Toney, Walker, and Weller—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Borland, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Fish, Foot, Pearce, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, and Wade—13.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. MILLER, when his name was called, stated that he had paired off with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS.]

Mr. BROOKE, when his name was called, stated that he had paired off with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MORTON.]

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

Mr. CASS. I give notice that I intend to ask the Senate on Friday, to take up the President's Message with regard to the fisheries, in order to give an opportunity to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] to express his views upon the question.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853, and for other purposes;" the pending question being upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance, so to amend the clause, "for salaries of Ministers of the United States to Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Brazil, Mexico, and Chili, $72,000," as to make it read:

"For salaries of Ministers of the United States to Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Brazil, Mexico, Chili, China, and Turkey, $50,000: It being provided, That hereafter there shall be Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary, to conduct diplomatic relations with China and the Ottoman Porte, instead of the Commissioners now authorized by law; and the said Ministers to China and the Ottoman Porte, shall be vested with all the judicial powers now legally exercised by the Commissioners to China and the Minister Resident at the Ottoman Porte respectively; and for the performance of the duties resulting therefrom, they shall receive no other compensation than their salaries as Ministers Plenipotentiary."

Mr. MERIWETHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CLARKE] made a constitutional argument yesterday against the proposed increase of compensation to the Commissioner to China. I am no constitutional lawyer, but I beg leave to give my view upon the subject.

The clause of the Constitution to which the gentleman alluded, reads thus:

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

Now, sir, Colonel Marshall has not been appointed to an office which has been created during the term for which he was elected; for the office of Commissioner to China has existed for many years. Nor has he been appointed to an office, the emoluments of which have been increased; the increase has not yet taken place, and he has been appointed several weeks. It appears to me that question, if properly stated, would stand thus: A member of Congress is appointed to an office which has not been created, nor have the emoluments of such office been increased before his appointment. Then can Congress increase the emoluments of this office? Now, I apprehend that the restriction in the Constitution is one placed upon the Executive, the appointing power, and says to the Executive, you shall not appoint a member of Congress to any office, provided such office has been created, or its emoluments increased.

But the Constitution does not say to Congress, that you shall not increase the pay of a member of Congress who has been appointed to an office during the time for which he was elected. I repeat it, the restriction is upon the appointing power, and not upon Congress. However, if it be unconstitutional, the unconstitutionality will prevent his reception of the pay, and cannot turn the incumbent out of office.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to say a word in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Kentucky. It is manifest that that must be the construction of the Constitution, or the result would be that the Executive power, when properly exercised, would be limited and controlled by the legislative power; for, if the opposite construction be the true one, then the Legislature would have the power, at any time after the Executive had made an appointment of a member of Congress, to vacate that appointment by making an increase of the salary. Therefore, it seems to me, that the construction placed upon this clause of the Constitution by the Senator from Kentucky, must inevitably be the true one. The conclusion would otherwise necessarily be, if that were not the construction, that the legislative department of the Government could annul, at any time, the appointment of a member of Congress to an office, by increasing the salary of that office, after he had been constitutionally appointed.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, it is refreshing in these days, when we have so little to interest us, to hear these elucidations and to receive those lights upon the construction of a distinct, direct, and positive provision of the Constitution. What says the Constitution? Why, that "no Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

Is not that a prohibition? Does it not prevent a Senator or Representative from being appointed to such an office, during the time for which he was elected? Or is it only a restriction upon the Executive, that he shall not appoint any such officer?

The object of the Constitution is, I think, very plain. It was to prevent any member of either House of Congress, with a view either to an increase of his emoluments or his appointment to an office, from being instrumental in the creation of that office, or in the enlargement of its emoluments. Those who framed the Constitution, guarded this with so much precaution that they absolutely prohibited any member of either House of Congress from being appointed to an office created during the term "for which he was elected"—not during the term for which he held his seat. Suppose I should resign my position here, and possibly get appointed to some miserable office; which is not within the range of probabilities: the time for which I was elected was six years from the 4th of March, 1847, and the period does not expire until the 4th of March, 1853. I am, therefore, ineligible to any office that may have been created during the time for which I was elected, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during that time.

Now, what are the facts in this case? I have no personal feeling about the matter at all; but what is the case here? The Congress of the United States have created an office, denominated the Commissioner to the Empire of China, for which that Commissioner has received a compensation of $6,000 a year. The facts of the case, as I understand them from the public papers, are, that this office was vacant; that the President of the United States nominated to the Senate an individual, and that individual has been confirmed, as Commissioner to China. He was a member of the House of Representatives at the moment of his confirmation. So much I know. Since his confirmation—and whether it be one week, or one day, or one hour, I do not know, and I suspect the latter time—he resigned his position as a member of the House of Representatives. The civil and diplomatic appropriation bill now comes here from the House, appropriating $18,000 for this object—$9,000 for the outfit, and $9,000 for the salary of a Commissioner to China. The Committee on Finance of this body knew too much to sanction that appropriation; but that committee have offered an amendment, creating, instead of a Commissioner to China, an officer to be an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, which officer is to have a salary of $9,000, and an outfit of $9,000; and in that same amendment they propose to legislate, that the judicial powers which have been conferred by law upon the Commissioner to China, shall be transferred to this new Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Celestial Empire.

There is a common expression in my section of the country, and according to that, this is "whipping the devil round the stump." This amendment aims to get at a thing which constitutionally cannot be got at by the provision as it came to us.

Mr. President, as it regards the mission to China, I have not much to say. But I shall have no objection to the mission to the Ottoman Porte if it is to be connected with a mission to Greece. If the Government of the United States chooses to extend the mission to Constantinople and embrace Greece within it, I have no sort of objection. I did endeavor to state very briefly yesterday, and I will state again now, that the country with which the United States have the least diplomatic relations is the Empire of China, if we except that of Japan; and it is understood that an expedition has been fitted out to force diplomatic relations with that empire. Now, as to the Empire of China—

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he would be willing to leave the bill as it originally came from the House? Is the point of his objection to the change proposed to be made? Will he be content to have the amendment of the Committee on Finance voted down, and the proposition left as it came from the House?

Mr. CLARKE. If you vote this down, then I will attend to the other proposition.

Mr. HUNTER. Then the voting down of this provision would not remove the Senator's difficulty?

Mr. CLARKE. You cannot remove in this way the objection which I have, under the terms of the Constitution, which I have sworn to support. I am not to be bought off in that way; what little integrity I have I should like to save.

What is to be the use of this mission to China? If I understand it aright, there is provision made in this bill for consuls at Kwang-Chow, Amoy, Fu-Chow, Ning-Po, and Shanghai, and I believe those consuls receive annual salaries of $5,000. Now, at the time that the late treaty with China was formed, there never was any compensation whatever paid to the consul of the United States who resided at Canton. No compensation, I believe, was asked from the Government of the United States. It was rather a commercial consulate, and it might have been supposed to be what we call a commercial agency. It was thought best, however—after the English had forced China to consent to open her ports to receive English opium—that the United States should form commercial relations by treaty with the Celestial Empire. A commissioner was sent out, and a treaty was formed. Since that time to this, except during the period when the Hon. John W. Davis, of Indiana, was Commissioner to China, we have had no commissioner there; but the whole of the duties of the office have been performed by Dr. Parker. He understands the Chinese language. He has been the medium of communication between this Government and the Chinese Government during the period of ten years. He was the medium of communication when the treaty was formed by General Cushing. He was made Secretary of the Commission, and he exercised all the duties of the commission during the time that elapsed between the appointment of Mr. Everett and the appointment of Mr. Davis, of Indiana. While Mr. Davis was there, I believe I am safe in saying, he had not one single solitary function to perform. To be sure, according to the terms of the treaty, the commissioner had high judicial functions to exercise; but they were not exercised while Mr. Davis was there. It was a position without employment to him; and he got tired of it and came away. Since that time the Government has not found it necessary to send a commissioner, much less an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to the Celestial Empire. It has not been found necessary to send any body there until the present moment.

Now, the President of the United States—I speak of this from newspaper report, for I am not certain that the injunction of secrecy has yet been removed—has seen fit to nominate a gentleman of high character and talent as Commissioner to China. That is very well. But the very moment that is done, and it is hastened through the Senate, before the civil and diplomatic bill can pass the House, a proposition is made there to increase the salary of the officer from $6,000 to $18,000 for one year.

Nobody expects that any gentleman of his high talents and character would go to reside in China for a great while. Why, he would go to Canton, and the whole extent of country for him to travel through there would not be much more than the Capitol grounds. He would be confined to the limits of Canton, or within three or four miles of there. That would be all the opportunity any gentleman would have to have anything like the ordinary comforts of life.

There are no communications to be made with the Emperor of China, as to whether he will receive our produce, and we shall receive his in exchange. There is nothing to be negotiated relating to the fisheries, or any other subject which excites the attention of the public, at this time. In fact, there is nothing between us and the Chinese Empire except that we shall carry ginseng, cotton goods, and a few articles of that sort from this country to China, and bring away their silks and teas.

Why is it, I ask, that the emoluments of this position, at this time, should be increased two hundred per cent? I consider that the United States have been well represented in that empire by Dr. Parker, who is now Secretary of the Commission. He has done all the work. He understands the Chinese language; and the whole of the negotiations that have passed between the American Commissioner and the Chinese Government, have been through him. No commissioner that has been sent from this country has ever seen His Holiness, the Emperor of the Celestial Empire, or anybody, except some one with a crooked name, who is Governor of the town of Canton.

I insist upon it, that there is no reason why the relations between this country and China have become so intimate and important that we should now pay $18,000 for a year's mission to that country, instead of $6,000, which we have heretofore paid.

I am perfectly satisfied to agree to the full mission to the Ottoman Porte, if you will include in it the mission to Greece. Recent events in that country would seem to require that somebody should be there to attend to our interests, somebody more than Mr. King, who has been recently in difficulty. If that provision be made, I have no objection to the mission for Turkey. I think that might very well be made a full mission, because our relations with the Turkish Empire and Greece are much more important than those with the Chinese Empire, not merely in a commercial point of view, but in any point that connects itself with the diplomatic relations of our country.

I say that this mission to China is of no importance whatever; that it has not attracted attention within the last five years, and why it should be increased in this way, I do not know. I do not say this because I object to the individual appointed, but I place myself upon the Constitution, and I say that this is a direct violation of the spirit, letter, and words of the Constitution, which prohibit the appointment of any member of Congress to an office created during the time for which he was elected. Here is the office of Minister Plenipotentiary created. Is not that an appointment? It may not be an "office;" gentlemen may cavil upon the word; but the real truth is, it is an appointment, and the position will have been created between the time of this gentleman's election to Congress and the 4th of March next, when his term expires.

Then take it that it does not create a new office, but that it continues the commissioner. If that be so, the emoluments of the commissioner are increased, and increased during the time for which he was elected a member of Congress, and this is equally forbidden by the Constitution. So that, upon both points, the Constitution is directly against it. It is either an office created during the time for which the gentleman who holds the place was elected to Congress, or it is an increase of emolument, which is also forbidden by the Constitution.

Mr. PEARCE. I propose to state very briefly what took place in the Committee on Finance in regard to this matter. The Committee on Finance had the subject under consideration this morning, and if it had been competent with them to withdraw the amendment, they would do so, not because they see any impropriety in the recommendation which they have made, but from the very obvious consideration, that by withdrawing the amendment they would simplify the business of the Senate, and shorten the debate. It is their desire, therefore, that the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. SEWARD. I will concur with the committee in voting down this amendment, and then, as I understand it, it will leave the matter in this way, that the compensation is increased, while the rank and office are undisturbed.

Now, Mr. President, there are two questions which arise on this subject; and I should not venture to speak upon it at all were it not that I consider this a question of precedence with regard to the future action of Congress, and that it is important to have a just view of it on that ground, rather than in relation to its present bearing. For myself, I can see no kind of difficulty about the whole case. The Constitution declares that "no Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time." Now, sir, this involves the question of the power of the President to appoint a Commissioner to China, the power of the person nominated to accept the appointment, or to be appointed—or, in other words—his eligibility; and thirdly, the power of Congress to increase his compensation.

Had the President power to appoint this distinguished citizen Commissioner to China? The President had power to appoint him, because, although he was a member of Congress, the office existed, and the compensation had not been, at the time of the appointment, increased. Then the appointment was valid.

Was this person eligible? Could he take the office? It is perfectly clear that he could take the office. It was not a new office. It was not an office which had been created, or the emoluments of which had been increased during the time he was a member of Congress.

These two things, then, are settled. A further question arises: Have Congress the right to increase the compensation of the office after a member of Congress has been appointed to hold it? Clearly they have. There is no limitation upon Congress. They may increase the compensation of anybody in the public service. There is no stipulation that they shall not do so. There is no restriction upon their power. They may do it before the person is appointed, or afterwards. They may do it at any time, and whenever they do it the act is valid. The only consequence that can arise is, that a person claiming the office, or desiring to get the office, might not be eligible after the act had been passed; but from the first day of Congress until this time, there has been no day when they could not increase the compensation of the Commissioner to China. The power of Congress to increase that compensation is exercised generally. It does not relate to this particular individual, but it relates to the office, and it exists forever afterwards until repealed.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that the Committee on Finance have instructed me to say that they are willing that the amendment shall be voted down, and the provision should be left as it came from the House? We have a great many amendments to offer, and but very little time to act upon them.

Mr. SEWARD. It leaves it, then, without any kind of question. What I was going on to say was, that the most that could be claimed was, that there was an abuse or perversion of the Constitution—a circuitous mode of getting round it. But the Constitution is express, and we are to be guided by its terms, and the Constitution is satisfied. We are to presume that the President of the United States performed his duty in appointing Mr. Marshall to be Commissioner to China, because the compensation had not then been increased. We cannot know that it was at that time in the contemplation of the President or the Senate, that that compensation should be increased. And acting now, the constitutional question cannot be affected at all by our increasing the salary. It brings about the question whether it is expedient for us to increase this compensation. So the question is reduced to one, simply, of expediency.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is no constitutional difficulty in the way of the appointment in question, or of the legislation which is now proposed. The appointment was made while Mr. Marshall was eligible; the appointment was, therefore, constitutional. As to the legislation now proposed, there is no constitutional prohibition in relation to that.

The object of the constitutional provision was to prevent the appointment of persons in office, who might be induced, if not prohibited by such a provision, to abuse their position by legislating for their own benefit. In this case no legislation had taken place during the period of the appointee's service in Congress. He does not, therefore, it seems to me, fall within the true meaning of the prohibition. The office was not created during the period either of the appointee's service, or during the period for which he was elected. Nor were the emoluments of the office previously increased. I repeat, therefore, that there was nothing to prevent his appointment by the President; and I also repeat, that there is no provision, anywhere in the Constitution, to prevent legislation to increase the emoluments of an office filled by appointment previously. For these reasons, I see no ground for the constitutional objection which has been urged against the passage of the amendment in question.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think the gentlemen have got so easily around the provision of the Constitution. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests that this does not fall within the spirit of the Constitution, because the member had resigned before the salary was increased. Now, if the Constitution meant that, another phrase might have been used, and it might have been said, "during the time he is a member;" but the Constitution has cautiously avoided the use of that language, and said, "during the time for which he was elected." Why, there is no mistaking the effect of that. The evil meant to be avoided was, that a man while he was a member of Congress, or during the time he might have influence there, should bring about a scheme of this sort, and then resign and escape in a technical way the consequences which the Constitution put upon it.

Mr. TOUCEY. I think there is no foundation for the constitutional objection that has been made. It is neither within the letter of the Constitution nor its spirit. The constitutional impediment, I insist, must exist at the time of the appointment, and that is the letter of the article referred to. It is obvious, from the very nature of the case, that the impediment must exist then, or it does not exist at all. The letter of the Constitution points to that construction, and you must go against its letter to raise any objection. It says: "No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, during such time." Not, "which shall be increased," but "which shall have been increased." Now, the question is, whether the President had power to appoint this incumbent referred to. Why, at the time when he appointed him, by and with the consent of the Senate, there was no objection; there was no constitutional impediment in the way. He was eligible, and the President had the power to appoint him. When the language is "shall have been created during such time," it means from the commencement of the term of the time when he was appointed; not to a period that accrued after the appointment.

Every word and every letter of this article of the Constitution excludes the idea that the subsequent act of increasing the emoluments would create an impediment to an appointment that already existed. There is no foundation for the belief.

Besides that, the objection interposed by the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] is of itself conclusive. It would be a transfer to the legislative power of the Government of the power of removing from office persons constitutionally in office. That is unavoidable, because it would follow that if two thirds of both branches of Congress should persist in increasing the emoluments of an office, when the President refused to remove an incumbent, by that very act they would displace an officer who had been previously constitutionally appointed.

I think myself that there is no ground, either in the letter of the Constitution or in its spirit, for the objection made by the Senator from Rhode Island. I agree that there may be a question of expediency, if there has been any undue management—if there is any ground to believe that we ought not to increase the emolument. On such a reason, then, it might be proper to allege it. Otherwise, we have nothing to do with it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. There is a provision in the bill "for outfit of Ministers of the United States to Great Britain, Prussia, and Mexico, $27,000." Upon consultation with the Department, the Committee on Finance have found that it was not desired to have an outfit for a Minister to Prussia. I therefore move to amend the amendment, by striking out "Prussia," and also by striking out "$27,000," and inserting "$18,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I am also instructed, by the Committee on Finance, to move to insert, "For outfit of a Chargé d'Affaires for Austria, the present incumbent having expressed an earnest desire to be permitted to return home, $4,500."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. I give notice that I shall offer the amendment again after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

In the provision providing "for the survey of 10,625 miles of meridian, base, and standard lines," &c., I move to strike out "ten," and insert "two." It has been a mistake of the printer that 10,625 was inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I am also instructed by the Committee on Finance to move to amend the bill by inserting:

"To enable the President of the United States to make compensation to the Spanish consul and other subjects of Spain residing at New Orleans, and subjects of Spain at Key West, for losses occasioned by violence by a mob, in the year 1851, arising from intelligence then recently received at those places of the execution of certain persons at Havana, who had recently invaded the Island of Cuba, $25,000: Provided, That before payment be made under this appropriation, the President of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made of such alleged losses, and that the same, together with the reasonable costs of the investigation, shall be paid on the certificate of the Secretary of State that the same are proven to the satisfaction of the President."

Mr. CLARKE. I do not like the expression "mob" in the amendment. It appears to me that it does not look well to apply it to the South; it might do very well for the North.

Mr. WELLER. Say public meeting.

Mr. CLARKE. Public meeting, mass meeting, or filibustering—anything of that kind.

Mr. HAMLIN. It seems to me that this is a very curious amendment. I do not know that we are bound to use strangers better than our own citizens; but really it seems to me that we are under no obligations to the citizens of a foreign Government which are superior to those that we owe to American citizens. I presume that when we have mobs at the North, the Government does not pay for the destruction thereby occasioned.

Mr. MASON. Compensation for these losses was made the subject of a special message of the President of the United States to the Senate. It was considered by the Senate, and a bill was passed by this body in the same terms almost as this amendment. It was considered, and I agreed in that view, a matter of some moment in the present condition of our relations with Spain, that these losses should be compensated. There is no other mode of doing it than by putting this provision in the bill.

Mr. CLARKE. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Virginia whether the President ever recommended that there should be an appropriation made for any destruction of property occasioned by a mob?

Mr. MASON. I will strike out that word.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not like the word. It conflicts with my ideas of propriety.

Mr. WELLER. You had better call it as they do in my country—a Vigilance Committee.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not like the phrase "mob." Besides, I would suggest, that if that had been the communication made by the President of the United States, it was one reason why he was not nominated, because he dared to call a public excitement a mob. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "by a mob," so that it shall read, "for losses occasioned by violence in the year 1851."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I want the amendment read again. I want to hear something more about the facts of the case. My recollection of them, I think, is pretty accurate, but I want to see whether there is anything that will justify the Congress of the United States in paying for those losses. I recollect that some time ago a church was burned near Boston, and I think that the Catholics would have about as much right to compensation for that as these men for compensation for these losses. I recollect a still later case: There was property destroyed in the city of Baltimore, within forty miles of us; but we never thought of paying for that. I recollect again, that in Philadelphia a great deal of the same sort of destruction was carried on; but it was never thought that the Government should pay for it. I think we are about as much entitled to pay for one as the other. I want to hear the amendment read, and to hear any special reasons to be assigned for it, and then I want the privilege of recording my vote against it.

The amendment was read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sorry to hear the Senator from Alabama say that he wants to record his vote against the amendment. I wish to say to him that it is based upon this principle, which the Committee on Foreign Relations thought it proper to apply to international courtesy and intercommunication. We are under obligations to protect the citizens of foreign countries visiting us for purposes of commerce, just as those foreign countries are under obligation to protect our citizens when they go there for purposes of that sort. Therefore, in relation to foreign countries, there is, as I conceive, a different principle to be applied from that which applies to our own citizens, subject to our own municipal laws. If there had been a treaty guarantying this protection between the two countries, there could have been no doubt about it at all. In the absence of a treaty, I conceive that these international courtesies and intercommunications fall within the scope of protection which one Government owes to the citizens of another, which justifies the appropriation proposed to be made on this occasion. This takes the appropriation out of the operation of principles which apply to the case of mobs which burn churches, and all other mobs, by our own citizens destroying the property of citizens. If you would claim from other Governments indemnities for trespasses which may be committed within their jurisdiction, you ought to set the example that you are willing, in reference to their citizens, to make provision for them.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. President, it may be that I am mistaken in my memory with regard to this matter; but it does not seem to me to be possible that I can be so. These men were cigar-dealers, grocery-dealers, oyster-house keepers—men who had been in the city of New Orleans for ten or fifteen years, but who claimed, it is true, to be subjects of Spain, because they had never been naturalized. They had been for years residents of the city of New Orleans. They had enjoyed the protection of the laws of the State of Louisiana; and this destruction of their property originated from what was supposed, at the time, by the people to be an undue amount of exultation manifested by them at the destruction of our citizens in the Island of Cuba. Fifty citizens of the United States were murdered in Cuba; and it was the impression among the populace of New Orleans, that these men had manifested an undue amount of exultation over that fact. The consequence was, that the people destroyed their property. Where is the obligation on the part of the Government to pay for it? They had the same remedy which citizens of the United States would have had under similar circumstances. And if citizens of the United States had behaved as they did, they would have been subjected to the same penalties, no matter where they were. I am glad that it is so. I am glad to say that there is not a State in this Union, from Maine to Louisiana, where such manifestations over such events can be made without exciting public indignation. The destruction of property was the result of these manifestations.

These men were bad men any way. They kept bad houses. They were disreputable men—men who had no claim at any time upon the sympathies of the community.

These I understand to be the facts of the case. They are the facts, certainly, as they were promulgated in the newspapers at the time; and I have not seen them contradicted. I want to know what right these men have to come here now, and demand that we shall pay for their losses under such circumstances? Why, did any foreign Government ever ask for redress from us under similar circumstances? It is a case unprecedented in our annals, and it is a case against which I want to record my vote; although I regret to hear the Senator from Kentucky say that he intends to record his vote for the proposition. Sir, he has been led astray in regard to the matter. He does not know as much about this case as I do, or else I have been totally misinformed in relation to the facts. These men saw proper to excite a popular mob, and they felt the results of it. The laws are open to them; let them seek redress where an American citizen would have to seek it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, there is certainly no obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to compensate for losses sustained by popular violence in any of the States; but it is not upon that ground that this amendment is based. It is known, as a part of the history of the day, that as soon as intelligence arrived at New Orleans of the murder—as the gentleman calls it—of the putting to death of those citizens of the United States who had invaded Cuba, it produced intense excitement at New Orleans, whence the expedition had sailed. Immediately there was a great degree of popular violence manifested there, which resulted first in depredation to a very great extent upon the property and person of the Spanish consul at New Orleans. Now, the Spanish consul was under the protection of the Government of the United States, and whatever losses resulted to him anywhere within the limits of the United States from popular violence, it was certainly the duty of the Government to make good.

We know, also, that by the interposition of the Minister of the United States at Spain—unofficially, for he could not demand it as a right—under instructions from his Government, the Queen of Spain was induced to grant a free pardon of those of the invaders of Cuba, who had been sent to Spain, and they were allowed to return home.

Under these circumstances, the President of the United States thought it to be his duty to ask of Congress, by law—upon the application of the Spanish Minister here, most urgently and repeatedly instigated to him by his own Government—to provide for compensating any actual losses sustained by the Spanish consul, which we were bound to do; and also the losses of Spanish subjects at these places.

Now, the ground upon which the committee proceeded, and upon a bill for this purpose passed in the Senate without any opposition, was this: that, in fact, this injury had been committed to Spanish subjects, not for any offense which they had committed, but for an imaginary offense committed by their sovereign, through the authorities of that sovereign at Cuba, against citizens of the United States. It was because of the act of the Queen of Spain, in granting this free pardon to citizens of the United States who had been sent to Spain, and because it was at the request of Spain that it should be done, that the President made the recommendation, and the Senate concurred in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not intend to enter into any discussion, particularly with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as to the question of obligation. I would remark to him, however, that there are cases of positive and direct obligation. Suppose the diplomatic agent to a foreign nation should not receive from the country to which he was sent the protection to which he was entitled under the laws of nations, could it be said in that case (if it had occurred here) that there would have been no obligation upon the Government to indemnify that diplomatic agent, to whom we owe protection in every instance for losses which violence committed upon him may occasion? There is an instance which illustrates the principle. It is discretionary whether you extend it to citizens or not.

I hold that it is the obligation of every civilized country, whether it be State or Federal, as in our case, to extend protection to that class of citizens or subjects of foreign countries who happen to fall within its peculiar jurisdiction. But I will not press this view.

The ground upon which the question was put before the Committee on Foreign Relations, in a great degree, was the magnanimity of the Queen of Spain in liberating those individuals after they had been sent across the ocean, and permitting them to return home. We wished to show a mark of courtesy and respect for that magnanimity, in conceding a boon, if you so regard it, in making this concession to the subjects of Spain. The very fact that I have not known the subjects of this violence, as my friend from Alabama says he has, shows that I had no opinions to warp my judgment, as I am afraid has been the case with him. I know nothing about them; and I have presented the case in a perfectly disinterested attitude, where I could decide purely upon the principles and considerations I have suggested.

Mr. CLEMENS. It has been suggested to me that perhaps it would be desirable to have a fuller Senate in order to vote upon this proposition. I am willing to vote upon it now; but, as the chairman of the Committee on Finance has suggested to me the propriety of laying it over, and taking up other amendments, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass this amendment by, until the others shall have been acted upon.

There being no objection that course was pursued.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to amend the clause "for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, $30,000," by striking out "30," and inserting "40," so as to make the amount $40,000. This is the secret service fund. The original estimate was for $40,000. The House cut it down to $30,000; but since that time the Secretary of State addressed us a communication saying that the sum asked for in the original estimate would be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to insert the following: For compensation for two additional day watchmen, to be employed in preserving the public grounds about the Capitol, authorized by the act of 15th May, 1850, to supply deficiencies, and also the act of the 30th of September, 1850, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government, at $500 each, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President of the United States, to purchase a site, containing not less than ten, nor more than fifteen acres of land, in the neighborhood of Washington, for the erection, furnishing, and fitting up of an asylum for the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy of the United States, $100,000: Provided, That the whole expense of purchasing the site, the erecting and furnishing and fitting up of the building shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated.

That is in pursuance of estimate. There was an annual appropriation formerly made for supporting the insane of the District of Columbia in the Maryland hospital. That hospital will not now hold them. An effort was made to obtain a place for them in Virginia and Pennsylvania; but the hospitals in both places are full. The only chance, then, for them is to build a hospital here, and it was thought that it might have an unhappy effect upon the lunatics to confine them in a place not suitable for them. Hence the necessity for the appropriation. It ought to be made at once.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is to insert after the appropriation inclosing Lafayette Square, the following:

"For defraying the expenses incurred in the improvement of Lafayette Square, 3,938."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next is to insert in the clause, "for the erection of the west wing of the Patent Office Building, $150,000," after the word "Building," the words "and completing the drains for said building, and for the Post Office Building."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is to add to the clause making an appropriation for the branch Mint in California, the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to contract for a term of not more than one year, and upon the most reasonable terms, not exceeding one per cent., with the proprietors of one, and, if practicable, with those of more than one, assaying establishment in California, upon satisfactory security, to be adjudged by him, who shall discharge the duties prescribed, and in the manner designated by the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1851; and no gold or silver, other than coin of the standard fineness of the United States, or foreign coin, in the manner prescribed by existing laws, shall be receivable in payment of dues to the United States; and hereafter no greater compensation than one per cent. shall be required by the proprietors of any assaying establishment in California for services prescribed in the act herein recited."

That has the assent of the Treasury Department, and of the California delegation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is to insert at the end of the first section, the following:

"To enable the Secretary of State to purchase one hundred copies of the Synoptical Index, to complete the series of the Statutes at Large, heretofore authorized by law, at $3 50 per volume, $350."

In the deficiency bill we made an appropriation for the Statutes, but the estimate for the Synoptical Index was omitted.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know how many will agree with me, but I wish to express the opinion that I entertained at the time we first undertook to get the Synoptical Index—that it is not worth the paper upon which it is printed. It affords no facility for consulting the Statutes. It is no better, in any respect, than the indexes we have attached to each volume of the laws; and it gives rise to trouble rather than facilitates the search for the particular acts which it is desired to consult. For this reason I shall not vote for the amendment.

Mr. CASS. I have had occasion to look over the indexes, and more miserable things were never presented to us. They are not worth one straw.

Mr. PEARCE. I have had frequent occasions to use the Synoptical Index, which supplies deficiencies in the other indexes, and I have found it exceedingly useful. I think it is a good index. It is not perfect, I admit. It would be very difficult to get a perfect one.

Mr. CASS. Under whose direction were the indexes got up?

Mr. PEARCE. The indexes of the laws are made by the publishers. I suppose the Senator refers to that edition.

Mr. CASS. I refer to any edition that I have seen.

Mr. PEARCE. The Synoptical Index is a great help, as any gentleman who has occasion to use it as often as I have had, will find.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is to strike out of the following clause the words in italics:

"That the clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers employed at an annual salary, or in temporary positions in the executive or legislative departments of the Government, in the city of Washington, whose compensation does not exceed $1,200 per annum, shall, in addition thereto, be allowed the following annual increase of compensation, commencing from the first day of the present fiscal year, viz: all whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,200," &c.

It is proposed to strike it out, because the idea is expressed again.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment is to add the following after the eighth section:

"And be it further enacted, That when any moneys shall have remained unexpended upon any appropriations by law other than for the payment of interest on the funded debt, or payment of interest or reimbursement, according to contract, of any loan or loans made on account of the United States, as likewise moneys appropriated for a purpose in respect to which a large portion is specially assigned by law, for more than two years after the expiration of the fiscal year in which the act shall have been passed, all and any such appropriations shall be deemed to have ceased and been determined, and the moneys so unexpended shall be immediately thereafter carried, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the account on the books of the Treasury denominated the 'surplus fund,' to remain, like other unappropriated moneys, in the Treasury; and it shall not be lawful, for any cause or pretense whatsoever, to withdraw, transfer, apply, or use for any purpose whatever, any moneys carried as aforesaid to the surplus fund, without a specific appropriation by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The following amendment is one which I passed over. To insert in the bill:

"For an additional watchman of the southwest executive building."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have now gone through all the manuscript amendments except two, in relation to the District, which have been mislaid, but which I will bring in in the morning. The next one we come to is the ninth section, which will be controverted: and the Senator from Texas desires to offer one before that.

Mr. RUSK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to offer the following amendment:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That one additional Assistant Postmaster General shall be appointed in the manner provided by law, who shall be assigned to duty as Chief of the Inspection Office of the Post Office Department, with the powers, duties, privileges, and compensation as an Assistant Postmaster General, as the same are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law."

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint and employ seven additional clerks in the Post Office Department, to wit: one at an annual salary of $1,800, one at an annual salary of $1,600, one at an annual salary of $1,400, and four at an annual salary of $1,200.

Mr. CASS. I do not know the law to which that refers, but I would rather have the additional Assistant Postmaster General nominated and appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. The honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] intends to offer such an amendment to the bill.

Mr. CASS. This amendment can be very easily modified to effect the object. The appointment ought to be sent to the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. The amendment provides that the additional Assistant Postmaster General shall be appointed according to law, and with such a salary as the law prescribes. The honorable Senator from Indiana intends to offer an amendment to the bill—and no doubt it will pass—requiring the appointment of the Assistant Postmaster General to be confirmed by the Senate, and increasing the salary from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. CASS. If it were certain that would pass, it would do very well; but I object to that mode of legislation giving to the Postmaster General the right to appoint the Assistant Postmaster Generals—officers of such high duties and salaries. It is all wrong.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment which the Committee on Finance propose as section nine, will be controverted. It is one upon which the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to speak. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will, by unanimous consent, pass over it until to-morrow, and take up the next amendment, which is the tenth section.

No objection was made; and the next amendment reported from the committee was as follows:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States appoint an associate law agent, learned in the law, and skilled in the Spanish and English language, whose duties and compensation shall be the same as those of the law agent: Provided, That the compensation of the agent and assistant shall not exceed $5,000 each. And in every case in which the Board of Commissioners shall render a final decision, it shall be their duty to have two certified transcripts prepared of their proceedings and decision, and of the papers and evidence on which the same are founded, one of which transcripts shall be filed with the clerk of the proper district court, and the other shall be transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States, and the filing of such transcript with the clerk aforesaid, shall, ipso facto, operate as an appeal for the party against whom the decision shall be rendered; and if such decision shall be against the private claimant, it shall be his duty to file a notice with the clerk aforesaid; within six months thereafter, of his intention to prosecute the appeal and if the decision shall be against the United States, it shall be the duty of the Attorney General within a like period, to cause a notice to be filed with the clerk aforesaid, that the appeal will be prosecuted by the United States; and on a failure of either party to file such notice with the clerk aforesaid, the appeal shall be regarded as dismissed."

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment consists of two parts. The first relates to the appointment of an assistant law agent. This has been applied for, I believe, by all the bar in California, and is estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior. It is said to be one of the causes of the delay in the decision of these claims, that they have not more than one law agent. The residue of the amendment is for the purpose of protecting the interests of the United States, and extends the time in which appeals may be taken.

Mr. PRATT. I think the Senator will perceive one omission in the amendment. It provides that, after the commissioners shall have decided any case, they shall cause two transcripts of their decisions, together with the testimony, to be made. One of these is to be filed in the district court of California within which the decision shall have been made, and the other is to be sent to the Attorney General. There is no time specified within which these transcripts are to be made out. There is no time limited within which the copy is to be sent to the Attorney General. But the limitation is, that the Attorney General, within six months after the filing of the one transcript in California, is to file there his direction for an appeal, or the United States are precluded from ever prosecuting an appeal. It may be, and frequently will occur in the remote districts of California, when the transcript is filed, there being no limitation when the other shall be sent here, that the Attorney General will not have time to examine and determine whether the interest of the United States would require an appeal or not, before the six months have expired. The amendment can be very easily modified so as to make the limitation for the appeal within six months from the period when the Attorney General shall receive the transcript.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PRATT. The Attorney General is to determine whether the United States shall appeal or not. He must receive the transcript, must have time to examine it amidst the multifarious business in which he is engaged, and then have time to send back to California and file an appeal there. Under the amendment as it stands, the United States are not protected. My object is to protect them.

Mr. BAYARD. I would suggest to the Senator from Maryland, that his object will be accomplished by amending the amendment in the following clause:

"And if the decision shall be against the United States, it shall be the duty of the Attorney General within a like period, to cause a notice to be filed with the clerk aforesaid, that the appeal will be prosecuted by the United States," by striking out "a like period," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "six months after receiving said transcript."

Mr. PRATT. That will do. I move to amend the amendment in that manner.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to move to amend the bill by inserting under the head of marine hospitals the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a suitable site in Portland, State of Maine, or in such a place in the immediate vicinity thereof, as he shall deem proper, and cause to be erected thereon, under his direction, a marine hospital for the relief of sick and disabled seamen; and for that purpose the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I only desire to say that a bill providing for that object received the unanimous vote of the Senate, but has not passed the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 25, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved. The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union House bill No. 223, to provide for the better protection of passengers on board of steam and other vessels.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

Mr. ROBBINS. If it does not come out of the morning hour, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. It will depend upon the order of the House whether the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. DUNCAN. I object. I think at this stage of the session we have no time for personal explanations. The public press is open to gentlemen for such purposes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If I cannot get unanimous consent, I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to suspend the rules during the pendency of the morning hour.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Then I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] to withdraw his objection.

Mr. DUNCAN. I cannot. I have opposed from the beginning of the session all political speeches, and all personal explanations.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Connecticut cannot proceed.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMERS.

The House then resumed the consideration of House bill No. 223, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes."

Mr. HALL. I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following amendment: After the following paragraph in the bill, viz:

"And shall also satisfy themselves that the safety-valves are of suitable dimensions, sufficient in number, well arranged, and in good working order, (one of which may, if necessary in the opinion of the inspectors, to secure safety, be taken wholly from the control of all persons engaged in navigating such vessel,)"

insert—

And in such case they shall cause a steam gauge, exhibiting the test pressure of the boiler, the working pressure allowed by the inspectors, and the actual pressure used while the boat is running, to be placed in a conspicuous place, so that it can easily be seen and examined; said gauge to be heated by the inspector and kept out of the control of those having the management of the boat, and near a good and sufficient light, to be kept burning at all times between sunset and sunrise.

This amendment, I believe, is one of the most important provisions in the bill, if the safety of passengers is the primary object with the House. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and he agrees with me that the House ought unanimously to receive the amendment, as the best means of protecting the lives of passengers.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object to the reception of the amendment.

Mr. MEADE. I think if the gentleman from Ohio will examine the amendment, he will not object.

Mr. EDGERTON. I have amendments which I believe, and others believe, it is important should be adopted. They were cut off by the previous question, and I had not the opportunity of saying a word in support of them. I therefore mean to object to every amendment which may be offered, unless I can have an equal chance with others.

Mr. MEADE. The amendments to which the gentleman alludes were before the Committee on Commerce. I think if the gentleman will examine this amendment he will not object to it.

Mr. EDGERTON. I insist upon my objection.

The House then considered the amendments of the Committee on Commerce, the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth clauses of section nine. The amendments of the committee, striking out the parts in brackets, thus [ ], and inserting the parts in italics, were agreed to, viz:

"Fourth. That when the inspection in detail is completed, and the inspectors approve of the vessel and her equipment throughout, they shall make and subscribe a certificate to the collector of the district, substantially as follows:

State of _____, District of _____ Application having been made in writing by _____ to the subscribers, inspectors for said district, to examine the steamer _____ of _____, whereof _____ are owners, and _____ is master; we having performed that service, now, on this _____ day of _____, A. D. _____, do certify, that she was built in the year _____, is in all respects staunch, seaworthy, and in good condition for navigation, having suitable means of escape in case of accident from the main to the upper deck; that she is provided with (here insert the number of state-rooms, the number of berths therein, the number of other permanent berths for cabin passengers, the number of berths for deck or other classes of passengers, the number of passengers of each class for whom she has suitable accommodations, and in case of steamers sailing to or from any European port or to or from any port on the Atlantic or the Pacific, a distance of one thousand miles or upwards, the number of each whom she is permitted to carry, and in case of a steamer sailing to any other port, a distance of five hundred miles or upwards, the number of deck passengers she is permitted to carry; also, the number of boilers, and the form, dimensions, and material of which each boiler is made, the thickness of the metal and when made—after this act takes effect, and of iron, whether they are such in all respects as the act requires, whether each boiler has been tried by hydrostatic test, the amount of pressure to the square inch in pounds applied to it, whether the amount allowed as the maximum working power was determined by the rule prescribed by this act, if not, the reason for a departure from it; also, the number of safety-valves required, their capacity, the load prescribed for each valve, how many are left in the control of the persons navigating the vessel, [how many, if any, are] whether one is withdrawn and the manner of securing [them] it against interference—also, the number and dimensions of supply pipes, and whether they and the other means provided are sufficient at all times and all circumstances when in good order to keep the water up four inches at least above the top of the flue; also the number and dimensions of the steam-pipes; the number and kind of engines, the dimensions of their cylinders; the number and capacity of the forcing-pumps, and how worked; the number and kind of gauge-cocks, water and steam gauges, where situate and how secured; also the manner of using alloyed metals and the pressure at which they are known by the inspectors to fuse; the equipments for the extinguishment of fires, including hose, fire-buckets, and axes; the provisions for saving life in case of accident, including boats, life-preservers, and substitutes therefor, where kept, and all other provisions made on board for the security of the lives of passengers.) And we further certify, that the equipment of the vessel throughout, including pipes, pumps, and other means to keep the water up to the points aforesaid, hose, boats, life-preservers, and other things, is in conformity to the provisions of law; and that we declare it to be our deliberate conviction, founded upon the inspection which we have made, that the vessel may be employed as a steamer upon the waters named in the application, without peril to life [or property] from any imperfection of form, materials, workmanship, or arrangement of the several parts, or from age or use. And we further certify, that said vessel is to run within the following limits, to wit: from _____ to _____ and back, touching at intermediate places.

"Fifth. Upon the application of the master or owner of any steamer employed [only in the navigation of rivers] in the carriage of passengers, for a license to carry gunpowder, oil of turpentine, oil of vitriol, camphine, or other explosive burning fluids and materials which ignite by friction, or either of them, the inspectors shall examine such vessel; and if they find that she is provided with chests or safes composed of metal, or entirely lined therewith, or one or more apartments thoroughly lined with metal at a secure distance from any fire, they may grant a certificate to that effect, authorizing such vessel to carry as freight any of the articles aforesaid, those of each description to be secured in such chest, safe, or apartment containing no other article, and carried at a distance from any fire to be specified in the certificate: Provided, That any such certificate may be revoked or annulled at any time by the inspectors, upon proof that either of the said articles have been carried on board said vessel, at a place or in a manner not authorized by such certificate, or that any of the provisions of this act in relation thereto have been violated.

"Sixth. The said inspectors shall keep a regular record of certificates of inspections of vessels, their boilers, engines, and machinery, whether of approval or disapproval, and when recorded, the original shall be delivered to the collector of the district; they shall keep a like record of certificates, authorizing gunpowder, oil of turpentine, oil of vitriol, camphine, or other explosive burning fluids and materials which ignite by friction, or either of them, to be carried as freight, by any such vessel, and when recorded deliver the originals to said collector; they shall keep a like record of all licenses to pilots and engineers, and all revocations thereof, and shall, from time to time, report to the superioring inspector of their respective districts, in writing, their decisions on all applications for such licenses, or proceedings for the revocation thereof, and all testimony received by them in such proceedings.

"Seventh. The inspectors shall appoint and classify all engineers and pilots, and determine how many are necessary for each steamer, except ferry-boats, and of what classes."

"Eighth. The inspectors shall license and classify all engineers and pilots of steamers carrying passengers."

"Eighth. Whenever any person, claiming to be qualified to perform the duty of engineer upon steamers carrying passengers, shall apply for a certificate, the Board of Inspectors shall examine the applicant, and the proofs which he produces in support of his claim; and if, upon full consideration, they are satisfied that his character, habits of life, knowledge and experience in the duties of an engineer, are all such as to authorize the belief that the applicant is a suitable and safe person to be intrusted with the powers and duties of such a station, they shall give him a certificate to that effect for one year, signed by them, in which certificate they shall state the time of the examination, and shall assign the appointee to the appropriate class of engineers."

The next amendment of the committee was read—strike out from section nine as follows, viz:

"Ninth. Whenever any person, claiming to be a skillful pilot, shall offer himself for an appointment, the said board shall make diligent inquiry as to his character and merits; and if satisfied that he possesses the requisite skill, and is trustworthy and faithful, they shall give him a certificate to that effect, authorizing him to be a pilot within the limits prescribed in the certificate; but any such engineer or pilot may be removed upon proof of negligence, unskillfulness, inattention to the duties of the station, or any misconduct, which, in the judgment of the board, tends to disqualify him; and, moreover, all appointments and removals shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, by the collector, for his approbation or disapprobation: Provided, however, If, in cases of refusal to license engineers or pilots, and in cases of removal by the local board of inspectors, any engineer or pilot deeming himself wronged by such refusal or such removal, may, on application within thirty days to a supervising inspector, have his case examined anew by such a supervising inspector, upon producing a certified copy of the reasons assigned by the local board for their doings in the premises, and such supervising inspector may, if he sees good reasons therefor, overrule the decision of such local board of inspectors; and like proceedings upon the same conditions may be had by the master or owner of any vessel, for which the said local board refuses, upon inspection, to give a certificate of approval"—and insert as follows, viz:

"Ninth. Whenever any person, claiming to be a skillful pilot for any such vessel shall offer himself for a license, the said board shall make diligent inquiry as to his character and merits; and if satisfied that he possesses the requisite skill, and is trustworthy and faithful, they shall give him a certificate to that effect, licensing him for one year to be a pilot of any such vessel within the limits prescribed in the certificate; but the license of any such engineer or pilot may be revoked upon proof of negligence, unskillfulness, or inattention to the duties of the station: Provided, however, If, in cases of refusal to license engineers or pilots, and in cases of the revocation of any license by the local board of inspectors, any engineer or pilot deeming himself wronged by such refusal or revocation, may, within thirty days after notice thereof, on application to a supervising inspector, have his case examined anew by such supervising inspector, upon producing a certified copy of the reasons assigned by the local board for their doings in the premises; and such supervising inspector may revoke the decision of such local board of inspectors, and license such pilot or engineer; and like proceedings, upon the same conditions, may be had by the master or owner of any such vessel, or of any steamboat boiler, for which the said local board shall have refused, upon inspection, to give a certificate of approval, or shall have notified such master or owner of any repairs necessary after such certificate has been granted."

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments of the Committee on Commerce, striking from clauses eleven, thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen of section nine, the words inclosed in brackets, thus [ ], and inserting the words in italics, were read and agreed to, viz:

"Eleventh. In addition to the [semi] annual inspection it shall be the duty of said board to examine seasonably, steamers arriving and departing, so often as to enable them to detect any neglect to comply with the requirements of law, and also any defects or imperfections becoming apparent after the inspection aforesaid, and tending to render the navigation of the vessel unsafe, which service may be performed by one of the board; and if he shall discover an omission to comply with the law, or that repairs have become necessary to make the vessel safe, he shall at once notify the master, stating in the notice what is required; and if the master deems the requirement unreasonable or unnecessary, he may take the opinion of the board thereon, [which shall be final]; and if dissatisfied with the decision of such board, may apply for a re-examination of the case to the supervising inspector as is hereinbefore provided; and if he shall refuse or neglect to comply with [their] requirement of the local board, and shall, contrary thereto, and while the same remains uncorrected by the supervising inspector, employ the vessel by navigating her; [she shall be liable to the same penalties as if she had been run without a license] the master and owner shall be liable for any damage to the passengers and their baggage which shall occur from any defects so as aforesaid stated in said notice, which shall be in writing, and all inspections and orders shall be promptly made by the inspectors; and where it can be safely done in their judgment, they shall permit repairs to be made where those interested can most conveniently do [it] them; and no inspectors of one district shall modify or annul the doings of the inspectors of another district in regard to repairs, unless there is a change in the state of things demanding more repairs than were thought necessary when the order was made; nor shall the inspectors of one district appoint a person coming from another, if such person has been rejected for unfitness or want of qualifications.

"Thirteenth. The said board of inspectors shall have power to summon before them witnesses, [and to examine them,] and to compel their attendance by the same process as in courts of law; and after reasonable time given to the alleged delinquent of the time and place of investigation to examine said witnesses under oath, touching the performance of their duties, by engineers and pilots of any such vessel; and if it shall appear satisfactorily that any such engineer or pilot is incompetent, or that life [or property] has been placed in peril by reason of such incompetency, or by negligence or misconduct on the part of any such person, the board shall immediately suspend [him] or revoke his license, and report their doings to the chief officer of the customs; and the said chief officer of the customs shall pay out of the revenues herein provided such sums to any witness so summoned under the provisions of this act, for his actual travel and attendance, as shall be officially certified by an inspector hearing the case, upon the back of the summons, not exceeding the rates allowed to a witness for travel and attendance in the circuit and district courts of the United States.

"Fourteenth. That the said board shall report promptly all their doings to the chief officer of the customs, as well as all omissions or refusals to comply with the provisions of law, on the part of any owner or master of [a] any such vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam, carrying passengers."

"Fifteenth. That it shall at all times be the duty of all engineers and pilots [appointed] licensed under this act, and all mates, to assist the inspectors in the examination of [the] any such vessels to which any such engineer, mate, or pilot belongs, and to point out all defects and imperfections in the hull or apparatus for steaming, and also to make known to them, at the earliest opportunity, all accidents occasioning serious injury to the vessel or her equipment, whereby life [or property] may be in danger, and in default thereof, the license of any such engineer or pilot shall be [dismissed from the service] revoked."

The next amendments of the Committee on Commerce, striking out the following sections and parts of sections inclosed in brackets, thus [ ], and inserting the words in italics, were severally considered and agreed to, viz:

"[Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That in each of the districts of Savannah in Georgia, Charleston in South Carolina, Norfolk in Virginia, Baltimore in Maryland, Philadelphia in Pennsylvania, New York in New York, New London in Connecticut, Boston in Massachusetts, Portland in Maine, and San Francisco in California, there shall be two inspectors, one possessing the requisite qualifications, as herein provided, in ship building and the uses of steam in navigation, the other in engineering, and in the construction and utilities of the apparatus for steaming, who shall exercise all the powers herein conferred, except that of appointing pilots for said districts.]

"Sec. [11.] 10. And be it further enacted, That in those cases where the number of passengers is limited by the inspector's certificate it shall not be lawful to take on board of any steamer a greater number of passengers than is certified by the inspectors in the certificate; and the master and owners, or either of them, shall be liable to any person suing for the same, to forfeit the amount of passage money and ten dollars for each passenger beyond the number allowed. And moreover, in all cases of an express, or implied undertaking to transport passengers, or to supply them with food and lodging from place to place, and suitable provision is not made of a full and adequate supply of good and wholesome food and water, and of suitable lodging for all such passengers, or where barges or other craft impeding the progress are taken in tow, for a distance [not] exceeding five hundred miles, without previous and reasonable notice to such passengers, in all such cases the owners and the vessel shall be liable to refund all the money paid for the passage, and to pay also the damage sustained by such default or delay: Provided, however, That if in any such case a satisfactory bond is given to the marshal for the benefit of the plaintiff, to secure the satisfaction of such judgment as he may recover, the vessel shall be released.

"Sec. [14.] 13. And be it further enacted, That hereafter all boilers of steamboats made of iron shall be constructed of plates which have been [inspected, approved, and marked] stamped according to the provisions of this act.

"[Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That the inspectors of boilers within the several collection districts herein named shall also be the inspectors of boiler iron within their respective districts, and perform the duties required by this act, and shall also be the inspectors for that purpose in districts where there are no such inspectors provided for by this act.]

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out the following section, viz:

"Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of such inspectors to ascertain the quality of the material of which boiler plates are made, and to satisfy themselves, by any suitable means, whether the mode of manufacturing has been such as to produce iron equal to the best and most reliable quality made with charcoal, such as in their judgment may be used for generating steam power without hazard to life or property; and no plate of iron shall be approved which is made of unsuitable material, or of which the manufacture is imperfect, or is not such as to give confidence in its strength, or which is less than one fourth of an inch in thickness, for a boiler of forty-two inches in diameter, and in that proportion for boilers of greater or less diameters, or which is made of any but wrought iron, of a quality equal to the best quality made with charcoal."

and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of such inspectors to ascertain the quality of the material of which the boiler plates of any such boiler so submitted to their inspection are made; and to satisfy themselves, by any suitable means, whether the mode of manufacturing has been such as to produce iron equal to good iron made with charcoal, such as, in their judgment, may be used for generating steam power without hazard to life; and no such boiler shall be approved which is made of unsuitable material, or of which the manufacture is imperfect, or is not, in their opinion, of suitable strength, or whose plates are less than one fourth of an inch in thickness, for a high-pressure boiler of forty two inches in diameter, and in that proportion of strength according to the maximum of working pressure allowed for high-pressure boilers of greater or less diameter, or which is made of any but wrought iron of a quality equal to good iron made with charcoal.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out the following section:

"Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That all plates approved shall be distinctly and permanently marked in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and, if practicable, in such place or places that the marks shall be left visible after the plates are worked into boilers; and all plates rejected shall have a permanent mark put upon them showing their condemnation, and the manufacturer shall also stamp his name upon each plate made by him; and for the inspection aforesaid, there shall be paid to the inspector aforesaid, five cents for each plate inspected, to be accounted for and paid over to the collector or other chief officer of the customs as revenue belonging to the United States."

and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That all plates of boiler iron shall be distinctly and permanently stamped in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and, if practicable, in such place or places that the mark shall be left visible after the plates are worked into boilers; with the name of the manufacturer, the quality of the iron, and whether or not hammered, and the place where the same is manufactured."

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce, striking out from the following sections the words in brackets, thus [ ], and inserting the words in italics, were severally considered, and agreed to, viz:

"Sec. [18] 16. And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful to use in such vessel for generating steam for power, a boiler or steam-pipe connecting the boilers made after the passage of this act, of any iron unless it has been [inspected] stamped by the manufacturer as herein provided; and if any person shall make for use in any such vessel a boiler of iron not so [inspected] stamped intended to generate steam for power, he shall, for any such offense, forfeit $500, to be recovered in an action of debt by any person suing for the same; and any person using, or causing to be used, in any such vessel, such a boiler to generate steam for power, shall forfeit a like sum for each offense.

"Sec. [19] 17. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall counterfeit the marks [prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for inspected] and stamps required by this act or shall falsely stamp any boiler iron, and be convicted thereof, he shall be fined not exceeding $500, and imprisoned not exceeding two years; and if any person, or persons, shall stamp or mark plates with the name or marks of another, with intent to mislead, deceive, or defraud; such person, or persons, shall be liable to any one injured thereby for all damage occasioned by such fraud or deception.

"Sec. [20] 18. And be it further enacted, That in order to carry this act fully into execution, the President of the United States shall, with the advice of the Senate, appoint nine supervising inspectors, who shall be selected for their knowledge, skill, and experience, in the use of steam for navigation, and who are competent judges not only of the character of vessels, but of all parts of the machinery employed in steaming, who shall assemble together at such places as they may agree upon once in each year, at least, for joint consultation and the establishment of rules and regulations for their own conduct and that of the several boards of inspectors within the districts, and also to assign to each of the said nine inspectors the limits of territory within which he shall perform his duties; and the said supervising inspectors shall each be paid for his services after the rate of $1,500 a year, and in addition thereto his actual reasonable traveling expenses incurred in the necessary performance of his duty when away from the principal port in his district, and certified and sworn to by him under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized to pay such salaries, and also such traveling expenses, and the actual reasonable expenses both to them and other inspectors of transporting from place to place the instruments used in inspections, [when satisfied therewith, out of the revenues arising from this act; and also to pay to the inspectors of boiler iron, for the inspection, in addition to their salary, after the rate of two dollars for each entire day's service in that employment; and moreover each inspector shall keep a true account of the number of plates inspected by him, designating how many are approved, how many disapproved, by whom manufactured, and shall make a full return thereof, under oath, to the chief officer of the customs for the district, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October, in each year, to be by such chief officer forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury,] which expenses shall be proved to his satisfaction.

"Sec. [21] 19. And be it further enacted, That the supervising inspectors shall watch over all parts of the territory assigned them, shall visit, confer with, and examine into the doings of the several boards of inspectors, and shall, whenever they think it expedient, visit such vessels licensed, and examine into their condition, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the provisions of this act have been observed and complied with, both by the board of inspectors and the master and owners; and it shall be the duty of all masters, engineers, and pilots of such vessels, to answer all reasonable inquiries; and to give all the information in their power, in regard to any such vessel so visited, and her machinery for steaming, and the manner of managing both.

"Sec. [22] 20. And be it further enacted, That whenever a supervising inspector ascertains to his satisfaction that the master, engineer, pilot, or owners of any such vessel fail to perform their duties according to the provisions of this act, he shall report the facts in writing to the board in the district where the vessel belongs, and, if need be, cause the negligent or offending parties to be prosecuted; and if he has good reason to believe there has been, through negligence, or from any other cause, a failure of the board who inspected the vessel to do its duty, he shall report the facts in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause immediate investigation into the truth of the complaint, and if he deems the cause sufficient shall remove the delinquent.

"Sec. [23] 21. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of such supervising inspectors to see that the said several boards within their respective collection districts execute their duties faithfully, promptly, and, as far as possible, uniformly, in all places, by following out the provisions of this act, according to the true intent and meaning thereof; and they shall, as far as practicable, by their established rules, harmonize differences of opinion when they exist in different boards, [and promote, as far as possible, the observance, in the construction of boats and of the machinery for steaming, of a just proportion between all the parts.]

"Sec. [24] 22. And be it further enacted, That the said supervising inspectors shall also visit collection districts in which there are no boards of inspectors, if there be any, where steamers are owned or employed, and each one shall have full power to inspect any such steamer or boiler of each steamer in any such district, or in any other district where, from distance or other cause, it is inconvenient to resort to the local board, and to grant certificates of approval, according to the provisions of this act, and to do and perform in such districts [destitute of local inspectors] all the duties imposed upon boards in the districts where they exist, [including the inspection of boiler iron:] Provided, That no supervising or other inspector shall be deemed competent to inspect in any case where he is directly or indirectly personally interested, or is associated in business with any person who is so interested, but in all such cases the duty shall be performed by disinterested inspectors, and inspection made in violation of this rule shall be void and of no effect.

"Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That the boards of inspectors within the collection districts, if the press of business be so urgent that the inspector of boiler iron cannot perform them, or if, from sickness or other cause, it is out of his power to devote his personal service to the business, may, upon such emergencies, appoint a deputy to discharge the duty temporarily, until the inspector is able to resume his personal inspection; and the supervising inspector may do the like, in districts where there is no board, upon the happening of a like necessity. But before any such supervisor or temporary inspector enters upon his duties, he shall be sworn to the faithful discharge thereof."

"Sec. [26] 23. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each of the collectors or other chief officers of the customs for the districts aforesaid, except San Francisco, to make known, without delay, to the collectors of all the said districts, except San Francisco, the names of all persons [appointed] licensed as engineers or pilots for such vessels, and the names of all persons from whom, upon application, [appointments] licenses have been withheld, and the names of all [who have been removed] whose licenses have been revoked or suspended, and also the names of all such vessels which neglect or refuse to make such repairs as may be ordered under the provisions of this act, and the names of all for which license has been, on application, refused.

"Sec. [30] 27. And be it further enacted, That if any such vessel carrying passengers, having a license and certificate, as required by this act, shall be navigated without having her hull, accommodations, boilers, engines, machinery, and their appurtenances, and all equipments, in all things conformable to such certificate, the master or commander by whom she shall be so navigated, having knowledge of such defect, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding two months, or both: Provided, That such master or commander shall not be liable for loss or deficiency occasioned by the dangers of navigation, if such loss or deficiency shall be supplied as soon as practicable."

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce proposed to strike out the following section, viz:

"Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That when from darkness, fog, or other cause, the pilot on watch shall be of opinion that the navigation is unsafe, or if from accident to, or derangement of the machinery of the boat, the engineer on watch shall be of opinion that the further navigation of the vessel is unsafe, the vessel shall be brought to anchor or moored as soon as it prudently can be done; and no person in command shall be justified in pursuing a voyage after being admonished by either of the officers named that it would be unsafe from the causes assigned, but shall be answerable for any damage which may arise from so pursuing the voyage."

and to insert in lieu thereof the following, viz:

"Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That on any such steamers navigating rivers only, when from darkness, fog, or other cause, the pilot on watch shall be of opinion that the navigation is unsafe, or from accident to, or derangement of the machinery of the boat, the engineer on watch shall be of opinion that the further navigation of the vessel is unsafe, the vessel shall be brought to anchor, or moored, as soon as it prudently can be done: Provided, That if the person in command shall, after being so admonished by either of such officers, elect to pursue such voyage, he may do the same; but in such case both he and the owners of such steamer shall be answerable for all damages which shall arise to the person of any passenger and his baggage from said causes in so pursuing the voyage, and no degree of care or diligence shall in such case be held to justify or excuse the person in command or said owners."

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The following amendments of the Committee on Commerce, proposing to strike out the parts of sections in [ ], and to insert the parts in italics, were severally considered and agreed to, viz:

"[Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That when steamers are about to meet each other in the night, in narrow channels, or in fog, it shall be the duty of the pilot of the descending boat to keep the channel and stop his engine, and suffer the boat to float with only steam sufficient to give her steerage, until the following signals are given and answered, and a space properly cleared:

"It shall be the duty of the pilot of the ascending boat, as soon as the other shall be in sight and hearing, to sound his bell once, if he shall wish to pass to his right; and it shall be the duty of the pilot of the descending boat to answer the same by one stroke of the bell; if not answered, the pilot of the ascending boat shall strike his bell again and again at short intervals, until heard by the pilot of the other boat. But if the pilot of the ascending boat should wish to pass to the left-hand side, he shall strike his bell twice; and it shall be the duty of the pilot of the descending boat to answer the same by two strokes of his bell, and both boats shall be steered accordingly. The first call may be made by the pilot of either boat, and it shall be the duty of the pilot of the other to answer as aforesaid; but if the first call cannot be complied with with safety, a negative answer shall be given, by ringing the bell five or six times in quick succession, after which the call shall be reversed.

"When boats shall be near meeting in a channel or place too narrow to pass each other with safety, the one that may first be in the channel shall have a right to it, except in the rapids of the Mississippi, and the other shall give way. If, however, two boats are about to enter such channel or place at the same time, and in all cases in the rapids aforesaid, the ascending boat shall give way.

"Should the pilot of either boat fail to make or to answer the signals required, or should a signal be answered wrongfully, both boats shall be immediately stopped, and, if requisite, backed so as to prevent collision.

"It shall not be lawful for an ascending boat to cross a channel (unless in compliance with the foregoing signals clearly made and answered) within possible striking distance by a descending boat. These]

"Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the supervising inspectors to establish such rules and regulations to be observed by all such vessels in passing each other, as they shall from time to time deem necessary for safety, two printed copies of which rules and regulations, signed by said inspectors, shall be furnished to each of such vessels, and shall at all times be kept up in conspicuous places on such vessels. Which rules shall be observed both night and day. Should any pilot, engineer, or master of any such vessel, neglect or willfully refuse to observe the foregoing regulations, any delinquent so neglecting or refusing, shall be liable to a penalty of $30, and to all damage done to any [person or persons] passenger in his person or baggage by such neglect or refusal; and no such vessel shall be justified in coming into collision with another, if it can be avoided.

"Sec. [33] 30. And be it further enacted, That whenever damage is sustained by any [person, in his property or person,] passenger or his baggage, from explosion, fire, collision, or other cause, the master and the owners of such vessel, or either of them, and the vessel, shall be liable to each and every person so injured to the full amount of damage, if it happens through any neglect to comply with the provisions of law herein prescribed, or through known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus or of the hull; and any person sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness, negligence, or willful misconduct of an engineer or pilot, or their neglect or refusal to obey the provisions of law herein prescribed as to navigating such steamers, may sue such engineer or pilot for and recover damages for any such injury caused as aforesaid by any such engineer or pilot.

"Sec. [34] 31. And be it further enacted, That before issuing the annual license to [a] any such steamer [employed in the coasting trade,] the collector or other chief officer of the customs for the port or district, shall demand and receive from the owner or owners of the steamer, as a compensation for the inspections and examinations made for the year, the following sums, in addition to the fees for issuing enrollment and licenses, now allowed by law, according to the tonnage of the vessel, to wit: for each vessel of a thousand tons and over, $35; for each of five hundred tons and over, but not less than one thousand tons, $30; and for each under five hundred tons and over one hundred and twenty-five tons, $25; and for each under one hundred and twenty-five tons, $20, at the time of obtaining registry, and once in each year thereafter, pay according to the rate of tonnage before mentioned, the sum of money herein fixed. And each engineer and pilot licensed as herein provided, shall pay for [each] the first certificate granted by any inspector or inspectors to such inspector or inspectors [to] the sum of five dollars, and for each subsequent certificate one dollar, to be accounted for and paid over to the collector or other chief officer of the customs, [five dollars; and] the sums derived from all the sources above specified shall be quarterly accounted for and paid over to the United States in the same manner as other revenue.

"[Sec. 39. And be it further enacted, That every master or commander of a steamer shall provide himself with at least ten copies of this act, and keep the same on board his vessel; and if he neglects or refuses so to do, or shall refuse to exhibit a copy of the same to any passenger who shall ask it, he shall forfeit twenty dollars.]

"Sec. 36. And be it further enacted, That every master or commander of any such steamer, shall keep on board of such steamer, at least two copies of this act to be furnished to him by the Secretary of the Treasury; and if the master or commander neglects or refuses so to do, or shall unreasonably refuse to exhibit a copy of the same to any passenger who shall ask it, he shall forfeit twenty dollars.

"Sec. [41] 38. And be it further enacted, That all engineers and pilots of any such vessel shall, before entering upon their duties, make solemn oath before one of the inspectors herein provided for, to be recorded with the certificate; that he will faithfully and honestly, according to his best skill and judgment, perform all the duties required of him by this act, without concealment or reservation; and if any such engineer, pilot, or any witness summoned under this act as a witness, shall, when under examination on oath, knowingly and intentionally falsify the truth, such person shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, if convicted, be punished accordingly.

"Sec. [45] 42. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not apply to public vessels of the United States, or vessels of other countries, nor to steamers used as ferry-boats, tug boats, or towing-boats, nor to steamers not exceeding one hundred and fifty tons burden, and used in whole or part for navigating canals. The inspection and certificate required by this act, shall in all cases of ocean steamers constructed under contract with the United States, for the purpose, if desired, of being converted into war-steamers, be made by a chief engineer of the Navy to be detailed for that service by the Secretary of the Navy, and he shall report both to said Secretary and the supervising inspector of the district, when he shall make every inspection."

The last amendment of the Committee on Commerce was read. It proposes to strike out the following, viz:

"Sec. 46. And be it further enacted, That all parts of this act shall be in force on the first day of November next, except the requirements to have pumps and hose to extinguish fires, and life-boats, which shall take effect on the first day of January next;"

and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 43. And be it further enacted, That all such parts of this act as authorizes the appointment and qualification of inspectors, and the licensing of engineers and pilots, upon the passage thereof, and that all other parts of this act shall go into effect at the times and places as follows: in the districts of New Orleans, St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Wheeling, Pittsburgh, Nashville, Mobile, and Galveston, on the first day of January next, and in all other districts on the first day of March next."

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendments that have been read by the Clerk.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The following is proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BOWNE], as a substitute for the bill:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert—

Sec. 1. That whenever, by the total or partial destruction by fire, or by the explosion of steam of any vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam, or by collision, or any other cause, human life or lives are lost, for each life so lost, the owner or owners of such vessel shall be liable to pay the sum of $1,000, which shall be sued for and collected in the name of the United States by the district attorney of the district in which such destruction of life shall occur, or from which district (the case of a river steamer or vessel, propelled in whole or in part by steam, and running on a river or rivers, or parts of either, whenever the State nearest adjoining the place where such loss of life shall occur, shall fall to prove jurisdiction over such place; and also, in the case of a sea or lake-going vessel, propelled in whole or in part by steam,) the said vessel shall have started on the trip during which such loss of life shall occur, and when collected shall be paid into the treasury of the State in whose waters such destruction of life shall take place; or, in event of any State failing to prove jurisdiction over such water, shall be paid into the treasury of the State from which said vessel shall have started on the trip during which such loss of life shall occur—said moneys to be appropriated in such manner and to such uses and purposes as said State shall direct. And in default of payment or collection of the liability herein imposed, said owner or owners shall each be liable to imprisonment for a term not less than one year, nor more than ten years, to be imposed by the court in which judgment shall have been rendered, upon the return of an execution or executions against said owner or owners unsatisfied in whole or in part.

Sec. 2. Whenever human life or lives are lost in the manner described, or from the causes stated in the above section, the captain, pilot, and engineer of the vessel, by the partial or total destruction of which such life or lives are lost, shall each be liable to a fine of $1,000, which fine shall be sued for, collected, and appropriated in the same manner as is provided in section one, for the collection and disposition of the liabilities therein imposed; and in default of payment of said fine, said captain, pilot, and engineer, shall each be liable to imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, nor more than ten years, to be imposed as provided in section one.

Sec. 3. Whenever human life or lives shall be lost in the manner described, or from the causes stated in section one, the finding of a verdict to that effect by a coroner's jury, legally empaneled, in any one case of life so lost, shall be good and sufficient evidence to authorize and require the commencement of suits for the liabilities and fines imposed by this act.

Sec. 4. Whenever human life or lives are lost by the breaking of any ferry-dock, or any part of such dock, the owner or owners of such dock shall be liable to a fine of $1,000 for each life so lost—said fine shall be sued for, collected, and appropriated in the same manner as is provided in section one for the collection of the liability therein imposed, and in default of payment of such fine, the owner or owners of such ferry-dock shall each be liable to imprisonment for the term and in the manner specified in section one of this act.

Mr. BOWNE. I ask the indulgence of the House to make a short explanation of that amendment.

Mr. ST. MARTIN. I object.

Mr. BOWNE. I trust objection will not be made to my explanation, as gentlemen were allowed on yesterday the same privilege.

The objection was insisted upon.

The question was taken upon the substitute; and it was rejected.

The amendments were then ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time; and, having been engrossed, the bill was read the third time.

The question recurred, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I desire at the present juncture to say, in justification of the Committee on Commerce, which has labored upon this bill very zealously for months past, that they do not consider it to be a perfect one.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would inquire of the Speaker whether this discussion is in order?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the chairman of the committee has an hour to speak upon the bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I will not detain the House more than five minutes. It is due to the committee and the country, that something should be said in reference to the precise condition of the bill which we are about to pass. I was stating, when interrupted, that the committee, after full and free consultation with gentlemen of great scientific and practical skill in matters pertaining to steamboat navigation, both on the eastern and the western waters, and a thorough investigation of the provisions of the bill, and proposing, as will be perceived, over one hundred and fifty amendments, after it has gone through the examination and full discussion it had in the Senate, do not pretend to say now, that the bill is perfect. They think, however, that it is improved by the amendments which they have put upon it, and they confidently recommend its passage as the commencement of a more perfect and efficient system than we have at present, for the preservation of the lives of passengers on steamboats. I will only say further—as I am informed that the time for the consideration of the bill this morning has nearly elapsed—that the strongest argument I can offer for this bill, is the fact, that whilst, by the various processes of legislation it has been working its way through Congress, seven hundred human beings have been sent into eternity by the very collisions and accidents which we guard against, and hope to prevent by the passage of this bill. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. BOWNE demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill; but they were not ordered.

Mr. ORR. For the purpose of putting myself right, as we cannot get the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill, I move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. ORR. If I can get the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill, I will withdraw my motion.

[Cries of "Consent!" "Consent!"]

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the yeas and nays be ordered on the passage of the bill?

There was no objection, and they were ordered.

The question was then put upon the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 147, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bennett, Bigglehaus, Bissell, Bowie, John B. So the bill was passed.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills; which severally received the signature of the Speaker:

S. No. 454. An act for the relief of Joseph Morton Plummer and Mary Reynolds Plummer;

H. R. No. 258. An act to reduce and define the boundary of the military reserve at St. Peter's river, in the Territory of Minnesota; and

S. No. 540. An act to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota.

MAJOR JOHN MOORE WHITE.

The SPEAKER. The question now pending is upon the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. STRATTON], to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up Senate bill for the relief of John Moore White.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the floor for a personal explanation. The unpleasant difficulty, occurring on yesterday, in debate in this House, between Messrs. WHITE, of Kentucky, and POLK, of Tennessee, was referred to Mr. GREY, of Kentucky, and myself. It is my pleasant duty to state that the difference between those gentlemen arose and existed in misapprehension, and that it has been honorably and satisfactorily adjusted.

Mr. GREY. Mr. Speaker, having been associated with my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] in negotiating an amicable adjustment between my colleague [Mr. WHITE] and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. POLK.] I take great pleasure in expressing my concurrence in the statement just made by that gentleman, that all those unpleasant differences have been settled in a manner alike honorable and satisfactory to both those honorable gentlemen, and which, I am sure, will meet the entire approbation of every friend of each of them.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending, of a privileged character, which must be put to the House. It is a motion made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STRATTON] to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up Senate bill for the relief of John Moore White.

Mr. STRATTON. I hope the House will allow the rules to be suspended.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STRATTON] will allow this bill to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House I will withdraw my objection. The bill was referred to me for examination at the last Congress, and I know something about it; and I think that the House ought to know something about it before it is passed.

Mr. STRATTON. I will say that this bill has been reported upon favorably by the Senate. I have shown the report to every member of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and they have authorized me to say that they are willing to support the bill.

The question being on Mr. STRATTON's motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. COBB demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MOLONY, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 29.

So the rules were suspended.

The bill was then read the first and second time by its title.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole House. I have but a few words to say upon this subject, and merely to show the House why I felt it my duty to object to taking up the bill at this time. There is, perhaps, no one now here but myself who knows anything about this bill. It was referred, at the first session of the last Congress, to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, of which I was then a member. The bill was examined, and reported upon by me to the committee. The venerable gentleman (Judge White) who is the beneficiary of this bill, soon afterwards visited Washington, and I had one or two conversations with him. I have not the least hesitation in saying, that his destitution, and his bland and gentlemanly manners made an impression upon me, and my sympathies were warmly enlisted in his behalf. In the conversations I had with him, I thought he was satisfied himself that his application was founded in mistake. He asked permission to withdraw his papers. I, myself, urged that this permission should be given, that he might, if possible, strengthen his case, though the House will presently see that the case, from its very nature, was not susceptible of being supported by any testimony he could procure. However, the papers were withdrawn, and, somewhat to my surprise, I observed that they were this year presented in the Senate, and a report made upon them from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

I will briefly state the character of this petition. The statements in the bill and report are altogether erroneous. Major White, the father of the petitioner, never was a major in the revolutionary Army, and the respectable petitioner does not allege that he was ever a major in the American Army. On the contrary, he states, in his petition, that his father was connected with the revolutionary Army, but in what capacity he does not exactly know. I examined the question with very great care, for I would not have made an adverse report upon such a case unless I had been perfectly well assured of the grounds upon which I ought to act. Major White, the father of the petitioner, was an Irishman by birth—a gallant officer, or rather a gallant man—for he was a merchant, and not an officer. He was a man of great popularity in his day, and from his handsome person, and pleasing manners, won the sobriquet of Beau White. He was the volunteer aid of General Sullivan at the battle of Germantown, and was killed in that battle.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the gentleman whether he asserts that he was the aid of General Sullivan at the battle of Germantown?

Mr. MILLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRICE. Does not that entitle him to the distinction of a major?

Mr. MILLSON. He was, of course, only acting as a staff officer. We have never gone so far as to provide, by any general law, pensions to the children of those who died or served in the revolutionary war. Congress has granted pensions to the widows of revolutionary officers and soldiers—

Mr. SKELTON. Are not the children of those who died in the revolutionary war entitled to all the pay which their parents would have received?

Mr. MILLSON. The children would be entitled to draw the pay to which their parent was entitled, and which he had not drawn up to the time of his death. I will now refer to the legislation of Congress for the relief of those who were connected with revolutionary officers and soldiers. I say that we have never gone further than to grant pensions to the widows, but the children of those who served in the revolutionary war have never been entitled to anything at all. Most of us are descended from those who served in the revolutionary war; and if a claim were allowed on behalf of children for the services of their ancestors, our Treasury would soon be depleted. We have never gone further than to grant pensions to the widows of revolutionary officers and soldiers, and only to those who were married before the year 1800. Those widows of revolutionary officers and soldiers who were married since the year 1800, are now entitled to no bounty or relief from the Government of the United States. The resolution of Congress under which this appropriation is attempted to be made or justified, applies only to "military officers commissioned by Congress." It never applied to staff officers—it never applied to surgeons—it never applied to chaplains—it never applied to any description of officers but to commissioned military officers. But again, Major White, as he is called—and we all know that an officer of the staff receives the honorary title of major—was killed in the year 1777, at the battle of Germantown. If he had been a military officer, and commissioned by Congress, his heirs would have been entitled to nothing. There is as great an error of law as there is a mistake of fact in the bill of the Senate. On the 15th of May, 1778, the Continental Congress adopted a resolution granting seven years' half pay to "all military officers commissioned by Congress, who now are or hereafter may be in the service of the United States, and shall continue therein during the war to the end of the war." Sometime in August, 1780, this resolution was extended to the widows and orphan children of "those officers who have died, or shall hereafter die in the service;" and the Legislatures of the States were recommended to make provision for paying the same on account of the United States.

As early as the year 1792, just sixty years ago, the heirs of Captain Shubrick, a gallant officer from South Carolina, who died, or was killed before the 15th of May, 1778, petitioned Congress, with many others similarly situated, for the seven years' half pay. The question was then deliberately and carefully considered by Congress. It was referred to General Knox, then Secretary of War, for his report. He made a report to the Senate, and that body struck out of the bill, which had impropiously passed the House of Representatives, the name of every officer who had died before the 15th of May, 1778, upon the ground that the benefits of the resolution of 1780 were only to be extended to those widows and orphan children whose husbands or fathers had been promised relief under the resolution of 1778. Undoubtedly, this was the correct construction. It can hardly admit of any other.

About ten or twelve years ago, the attempt was repeated to extend the benefits of this resolution to the heirs of that class of officers who died before the 15th of May, 1778. The petition was presented to the House of Representatives, and it was deemed sufficiently important to invoke the consideration of the Judiciary Committee. The question referred by the resolution of the House, was whether the widows and children of those officers who died prior to the 15th of May, 1778, were entitled to the benefits of that provision. A report was made by Mr. Barnard, of New York, then the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in this House, expressing the confident and unwavering opinion of the committee that the resolution was never intended to apply to any such class of officers, and that it had no further retrospective operation than to embrace such as had died between the 15th of May, 1778, and August, 1780. I have, in the discharge of my duties upon the committee, made similar reports. I have made reports of that character at the present session of Congress; and at the last session, I made a report in the case of the heirs of James Conway, presented by my colleague, [Mr. AVERETT,] denying the relief claimed there upon precisely similar grounds.

The House will therefore perceive, for I will not detain them further, that there is a glaring mistake, both of fact and law. Major White was never a military officer commissioned by Congress, and was never a major in the revolutionary army. His respectable son, who was at one time, I think, chief justice of the State of New Jersey, does not allege in his petition that his father was a major in the revolutionary Army, but only says that he was connected with the revolutionary Army; and if he had been a major in the revolutionary Army, the law, as I have stated and shown to the House, does not justify the allowance of seven years' half pay to the widow and children of that class of officers who died before the 15th of May, 1778.

In conclusion, I will say, that it is, at all times, exceedingly repugnant to my feelings to interpose objections to the relief asked by those who are, doubtless, anxiously expecting the bounties they solicit from Congress; and nothing but the consideration that the House might be misled, and perhaps be induced to vote as they would not if they correctly understood the facts of the case, constrained me on yesterday to object to the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, to take this bill from the table. I should be individually very well satisfied if the House should grant this relief to the petitioner; and if, after this explanation, they shall determine to do so, as a mere matter of gratuity and bounty, while it is not consistent with my views of public duty to give such a vote, yet, I assure the House that no gentleman here—not even the honorable gentleman who is the immediate representative of Judge White—could be personally more gratified at the relief extended to him in his old age and necessity, than I should be. But that we shall be establishing a dangerous principle, and one entirely at variance with our system, I cannot doubt. In this country, there is no hereditary title, either to honors, or the rewards of merit and service. Under our republican Constitution, the service rendered by one man is not transmissible to his descendants, so as to entitle them to bounties and rewards, when they have themselves rendered no public service.

Mr. STRATTON. My honorable friend from Virginia has stated to the House his knowledge of the claim when it was before the committee. I hold in my hand the report of D. Newell, formerly known as a member of the preceding Congress, presented on the 8th February, 1848, which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk then read the report, as follows:

"The committee to whom was referred the petition of J. M. White beg leave respectfully to report—

"That John Moore White, the petitioner, is the only surviving son and heir of Major John White, who was an officer in the American Army during the revolutionary war; that Major White was an Irish gentleman who, prior to the war, settled in the United States, and was a merchant in the city of Philadelphia; that about the year 1765 or 1766 he married a Miss Moore, of the county of Cumberland, in the State of New Jersey, who died in 1770, leaving three sons, of whom the petitioner is the youngest. After the death of his wife he returned to Europe, and was there at the time of the declaration of our independence. Very soon after that event, he returned to this country and joined the American Army; that Major John White was on the 4th day of October, 1777, acting as one of the aids of Major General John Sullivan at the battle of Germantown, and there received a mortal wound by a shot from Chew's house, whilst he was attempting to set fire to the house, with a view to dislodge the British troops who had taken shelter therein; that he survived but a few days, and died in the neighborhood of the battle-field. There is before the committee the certificate of an old lady—whose character for veracity is vouched for by some of the most respectable gentlemen of the State of New Jersey—who states that she saw Major White after the battle of Germantown, wounded, and that he died a few days after in consequence of his wound. This is also substantiated by the testimony of a soldier who was in that battle, and deposes to this fact. Additional testimony to this end may be found in the letter of Major General Sullivan, published in Washington's Letters, by Sparks, page 466; Thatcher's Military Journal, pages 149 and 143; in General Wilkinson's Annals of Philadelphia, volume 2; also, in several affidavits now in the possession of the committee.

"That the petitioner is the son of Major White is clearly shown by an abundance of the most respectable testimony, the authors of which are well known by reputation to the writer of this report; also, by the evidence of the daughter of a chaplain in the revolutionary Army, who had frequently heard her father converse with the petitioner about his father's untimely end at the battle of Germantown. A transcript from the family book, now in the possession of the petitioner, proves him to be the son of Major White; in which book is also recorded, as follows: 'John White, merchant, of Philadelphia, was killed by the British, at the battle of Germantown, October 4, 1777, while fighting for the liberties of America. He was aged about forty-six years.'

"That the petitioner is the only surviving heir of Major White, is shown by abundant testimony. That neither he, nor any of the other heirs of Major White, whilst living, received any compensation, is apparent from the fact that Major White died in the early stage of the war, and that application has never been made, until this time, for the payment of the claim. This is further proved by a letter from the Third Auditor of the Treasury, (Mr. Hagner,) stating that no payment has ever been made to his heirs.

"The writer of this report begs leave further to state, that the petitioner was attorney general to the State of New Jersey, and subsequently, for many years, an associate justice of the supreme court of that State; that he is a gentleman of great moral and intellectual worth; that in consequence of a disease of his eyes he was obliged to relinquish his professional business. The disease has gradually increased until he has now become entirely blind. He did not, until driven to do so by necessity, petition Congress for his rights, feeling a strong and natural disinclination to be the recipient of a bounty so long as he was able to sustain himself by his own exertions. This will account for the unusual delay in presenting his just and unquestionable claim. He is now seventy eight years of age, and if relief come to him at all, it must come soon, or he will be beyond the reach of oftentimes but tardy justice."

Mr. BROWN, of New Jersey. With the permission of the gentleman I will say a few words. I have given some examination to this case, and have not arrived at the same conclusion as the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] I feel obliged to him, however, for the courteous terms in which he has spoken of the petitioner, Judge White, of New Jersey. I feel that the spotless character he has sustained during a long life, and his present necessity and misfortune, (a state of total blindness,) justify gentlemen in extending to him not only words of courtesy, but those of sympathy. The objections taken by the gentleman from Virginia are two. The first is, that Major White, the father of the petitioner, was not commissioned by Congress; and I admit, sir, that there is no evidence that he was so commissioned. But the very reason why this case is presented here is, that it does not come precisely within the resolution of the 15th May, 1778. Petitioners come here for relief because their cases substantially are within the general laws passed by Congress on this subject, but are not technically and literally within such laws. Now, sir, Major White may not have been commissioned by Congress as a major in the Revolutionary Army. He was commissioned, if at all, by one of the agents of the Congress—by one of the generals of the Army, and the probability is that he received his commission from General Sullivan, upon whose staff he was serving when killed. There is no doubt at all from the evidence, that he was in the service from the commencement of the war up to the time of his death at the battle of Germantown. There is evidence here that he stated on one occasion, that he preferred sleeping on a hard floor to a bed, because he was accustomed to camp life. There is evidence also here, as remarked by the gentleman from Virginia, that from his elegant and officer-like appearance, he had acquired in the army the sobriquet of Beau White. That he was gallant and distinguished in the service, is stated by General Sullivan in a letter which he wrote immediately after the battle of Germantown. In that letter the General states that in that conflict he had lost General Nash, of South Carolina, and his aids Major Sherbourne and Major White, whose acts of distinguished bravery, he said, would entitle them to the gratitude of their country. Now, sir, whether Major White was commissioned or not by Congress, I submit to this House whether, having been a gallant officer and served in the manner specified, and having met the approbation of his brother officers in the Army and his General, he does not come substantially within the meaning of the resolution of Congress which was intended to give to all of these officers seven years' half pay.

Mr. MILLSON. Will my friend allow me to say a word here? It is only this, that attempts to extend the provisions of the resolution of 1778 and 1780 were made even before the adoption of the present Constitution; and it was deliberately resolved by the Congress in these words: "That half-pay cannot be allowed to any officer, or to any class or denomination of officers to whom it has not been expressly promised."

Mr. BROWN. I believe, sir, we are now in the Congress of the United States, one branch of which has already acted upon this very question; and I am now speaking to the question whether this branch of the Congress ought not to unite in extending relief to those who have performed all the service required by those resolutions, although not commissioned by Congress—in this case, to a man who fell after performing acts of distinguished bravery in the service of his country. I contend, sir, that these resolutions ought to be so extended. Upon that point I trust that the House will have no difficulty.

But, sir, I understand the gentleman from Virginia to contend that if Major White had been commissioned by Congress, he was still not entitled to relief under these resolutions, and that it has been so decided by Congress heretofore. If that be so, I trust it will never prove to be so in future. Why, by the very terms of these resolutions, if he had been commissioned by Congress a major in the Army of the United States, he would have been entitled to receive at the Pension Office, without applying here, these seven years' half pay. It is true that he was not embraced in the resolution of the 15th May, 1778, because that applies only to those officers who served during the war. But the second resolution, passed on the 24th August, 1780, was intended to meet the very case, and to extend the resolution of 1778 to other cases; and by that resolution the provisions of the resolution of 1778 were expressly extended to all officers who might thereafter die, or who had theretofore died. Now, it is said by the gentleman from Virginia that a different construction has been given to these two resolutions; that they have been held not to apply to any person who died before the passage of the first resolution, because no promise had been made to such person. Well, sir, I say that is an arbitrary construction—it is contrary to the literal meaning of the words contained in the second resolution. The widows and children of all those officers who shall have died, or who may hereafter die, are to be entitled, under these resolutions, to this bounty. These are the express terms of the second resolution.

Mr. MILLSON. My friend has not quoted correctly the terms of the laws. The terms are, that the benefits of the act of the 15th May shall be extended to those who have heretofore died.

Mr. BROWN. Here is the resolution:

"Resolved, That the resolution of the 15th of May, 1778, granting half pay for seven years to the officers of the Army who should continue in the service to the end of the war, be extended to the widows of those officers who have died, or shall hereafter die in the service; to commence from the time of such officer's death, and to continue for the term of seven years; or, if there be no widow, or in case of her death or intermarriage, the said half pay be given to the orphan children of the officer aforesaid, if he shall have left any, and that it be recommended to the respective States to which such officer belong, to make provision for paying the same on account of the United States, that the restricting clauses in the resolution of May 15th, 1778, granting half pay to the officers for seven years, expressed in these words, viz: 'And not hold any office of profit under these States, or any of them,' be, and is hereby repealed."

The benefits of the act of 1778 are extended by this second resolution to the widows and children of those who had died. Now, Major White had died before the passage of the first resolution, and it would seem that he had died too early; that he had entered the service too promptly; and that he was at the battle of Germantown, and fell there too soon in an act of distinguished bravery, and, therefore, his children are to be excluded from the benefits of these resolutions by this technical construction. I say it is a construction not only to the dishonor of the Congress of the United States, but contrary to what would be the construction of any enlightened court.

I submit to this House, that this is a meritorious case, and that an act ought to be passed granting relief to this venerable old man, distinguished in his prime, but now driven by misfortune to be a petitioner. I move to suspend the rule which requires all bills making appropriations to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Has not that rule been suspended already?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The rule was suspended for the purpose of taking up the bill only.

The question now being upon Mr. Brown's motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. COBB demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MOLONY and CURTIS were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 32.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rule was suspended.

The question recurred upon the motion to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. AVERETT. Is it in order to move an amendment to that bill?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the motion to commit. The motion to commit is immediately before the House.

Mr. AVERETT. It was remarked by my friend and colleague, [Mr. MILLSON,] a short time ago, that a petition coming from my district stood upon the same grounds, and depended upon the same principles, as the bill now before the House. I have not the papers in relation to that case now before me, and I do not mean to detain the House with any attempt to give an account of my recollection of the case. My recollection, in short, is, that it is a petition of an officer of the Revolution, whose petition has been favorably reported upon once and again, but which has failed between the two Houses; and as well as I can recollect—and if I am wrong my colleague will correct me—there never has been an adverse report upon it until the one to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, and which was made by himself. My purpose in rising at this time is, to ask the House, if this bill is to be taken into consideration, that the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's table shall be added to it; and if it be decided favorably upon, or acted upon at all, that the representatives of Lieutenant Conway, whose claim stands upon the same ground as this bill, shall be participants in the benefits of it.

Mr. MILLSON. Will the gentleman allow me to have read the concluding remarks of the Committee on the Judiciary, in 1842, upon this legal question?

Mr. AVERETT. Certainly, sir.

Mr. STUART. What report is that?

Mr. MILLSON. It is the report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STUART. On this bill?

Mr. MILLSON. No; but on the principles involved in the bill.

The Clerk then read the extract, as follows:

"In conclusion, the committee, in answer to the resolution of the House, by which the House has directed them to report their opinion on the legal question in this case, express a decided, unwavering, and clear conviction, on their part, after due consideration, on the grounds stated in this report, that it was not the intention of Congress, by the resolution of the 24th of August, 1780, to extend the grant of half pay for seven years to the widows or orphan children of officers who died in the service before the 15th of May, 1778; and that the language of that resolution, when taken in connection with the resolution of the 15th of May, 1778, does not fairly warrant such a construction."

Mr. AVERETT. Do I understand the Chair to decide that no amendment is in order?

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion to commit the bill. An amendment is therefore not in order at this time.

Mr. AVERETT. My particular purpose in addressing the Chair was to call the attention of the House to the remark which fell from my colleague, [Mr. MILLSON,] who stated that the petition of the representatives of James Conway stood upon the same ground as this petition, and to ask the House if they mean to act on this case, to act at the same time upon that.

Mr. STUART. I think that for the last hour we have understood this question at least as well as we shall understand it to-day; and I therefore move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole House, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. AVERETT. Is an amendment to the bill now in order?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is pending, which cuts off all amendments. By unanimous consent the amendment can be received.

Mr. STRATTON. I object.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. STUART moved the previous question on the passage of the bill. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. LETCHER called for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. McMULLIN moved to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then passed.

CANAL AROUND THE FALLS OF ST. MARY.

Mr. STUART. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 28, "granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public lands for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of St. Mary."

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment, that I may ask the permission of the House to report a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, that it may be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill can be received and referred.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. What bill is it?

Mr. BISSELL. It is a bill for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Hetzel. I simply wish to report it from the Committee on Military Affairs, that it may be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

There being no objection, the bill was received and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KING, of New York. I move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was referred. I do not wish to press the motion now, but I desire that it shall be entered.

The question then recurred upon the motion made by Mr. STUART to suspend the rules to take up Senate bill No. 28.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and PARKER of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 49.

Mr. STUART demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The question was again taken, and there were—yeas 123, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Conger, Cottman, Collum, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Duncan, Edgerton, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Hall, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Martin, McKie, McLanahan, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Murray, Newton, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schermernhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Wilcox, and Wildrick—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bennett, Bragg, Brooks, Caldwell, Chastain, Cobb, Colcock, John G. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, A. Johnson, Letcher, Mason, McMullin, McQueen, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Orr, Outlaw, Powell, Ross, Savage, Smith, Thaddeus Stevens, Venable, Wallace, Alexander White, and Woodward—44.

So the rules were suspended, and the bill was taken up.

Mr. STUART. I can explain the bill in a very few moments. I ask that it may be read.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. STUART. I do not propose to detain the House five minutes in reference to the bill. The subject itself is one of such magnitude that it has attracted the attention of every member of this House, and of the whole country. It is a great work, and one entirely national in its character. It steers perfectly clear of all constitutional questions and objections, because the Government of the United States owns the ground, and has entire jurisdiction over the whole tract of country through which the canal will pass. There is, therefore, no constitutional question involved. The delegation from Michigan would have been pleased, if we could have obtained a money appropriation with which to construct this canal. That question was, however, thoroughly tested in the Senate, and was voted down. I say the delegation from Michigan, not because we are more interested in the construction of this work than any other portion of the country. We are not as much interested as Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, or any of the Western States.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me for a moment—

Mr. STUART. For a moment.

Mr. STANTON. I merely wish to state, that I have had in my possession, for the last six months, a variety of memorials and petitions from Chambers of Commerce, and from the State Legislatures of Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio, in favor of the construction of this canal. I have also a report from the Committee on Roads and Canals in favor of the bill; all of which I have been endeavoring to report back to the House for a long time, but have not had any opportunity of doing so.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to state one fact in this connection. It is this: I have now in my possession, I suppose, as many as forty petitions from various sources, in favor of the Government depositing with the States the fourth installment under the act of 1837.

Mr. STUART. I cannot yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STANTON. The Committee on Roads and Canals have long since reported to this House a bill for accomplishing this very object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire whether it is the object of the gentleman to present the papers to which he refers?

Mr. STANTON. It is not. I merely desire to state that I have them in my possession. The Committee on Roads and Canals reported a bill for an appropriation of $400,000, for the construction of this canal. I have no doubt the money ought to be appropriated.

Mr. STUART. I do not yield longer to the gentleman from Ohio. I cannot consent to detain the House at all upon this subject. I should have finished my remarks in a few minutes. I will merely say, that Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania have given a legislative expression in favor of the construction of this canal.

[A message was here received from the Senate announcing the passage, by that body, of the river and harbor bill with sundry amendments.]

Mr. STUART, (continuing.) I should like to give my views to the House and the country, upon this subject; but, at this period of the session, I am not willing to occupy the time of the House for that purpose. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question, in order to allow me to ask him two or three questions.

Mr. STUART. I will hear the gentleman's questions.

Mr. ORR. I wish to inquire of the gentleman, in the first place, what is the length of the canal; and, in the next place, whether there has been any estimate, that the cost of its construction would be more than $400,000?

Mr. STUART. The length of this canal is about three quarters of a mile. The excavation, as I understand it, is mostly through a rock. The estimate of the engineers is about $450,000.

Mr. ORR. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan another question. I understood him that the estimate for the construction of this canal is about $450,000. I think that is the amount. It was before the Committee on Public Lands, and that is my recollection. But this bill proposes to give 750,000 acres of the public land, which, at $1 25 an acre, would amount to near a million of dollars. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan, if he has any further information going to show that the cost of this canal is likely to go up from $450,000 to $1,000,000? and, if not, why this increase is made?

Mr. STUART. I will answer the gentleman in a word. I do not believe the canal will cost more than the amount of the estimate. This question, as I stated, was presented in the Senate in a form of a grant of money for the construction of the canal. That proposition, however, after full discussion, was refused by a very decided vote, and the Senate agreed to put in the amount of land which is indicated in the bill; so that in any contingency the land should bring the money necessary to insure the construction of the canal. There is no danger of the land being wasted; for, in case there is more than enough to construct the work, it reverts back to the United States. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I ask my colleague to withdraw the demand for the previous question, to allow me to submit a few remarks.

Mr. STUART. I will withdraw in favor of my colleague, if he will renew it.

Mr. CONGER. I will renew it. I do not rise for the purpose of detaining the House with a speech at this time, upon this subject. I am happy to perceive this subject is as well understood by the other members of the House as it is by us who are more immediately interested. It will be recollected that at an early part of the session, I, myself, by leave, introduced a bill for the construction of this same work. That bill provided for an appropriation of money; and it was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which it was referred. It went to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and has never been reached. But as there is a very decided indication in the other branch of the National Legislature that an appropriation of money can never be obtained for that purpose, perhaps a grant of land would be better than nothing.

I have devoted some time to the investigation of this question, and have even taken the pains to prepare a speech upon the subject, in which the statistics necessary for the full information of the House were embraced. With the leave of the House, hereafter I may publish the speech I have prepared. I will not detain the House further at present.

Mr. STUART. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the bill do lie upon the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MEADE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] demanded the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] demanded it.

Mr. MEADE. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his demand.

Mr. STUART. I cannot.

Mr. MEADE. Then I hope it will be voted down. I know nothing about the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered upon the motion to lay upon the table.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ORR. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw the demand for the previous question in order to allow me to offer an amendment to reduce the amount to 500,000.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STUART. I cannot withdraw the demand.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and, according to order, it was read the third time.

Mr. MEADE. Is it in order to move to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the bill having been ordered to a third reading.

Mr. STUART. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. MEADE. Is the question upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is the question before the House.

Mr. MEADE. I understand the question to be upon a third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has already been read a third time.

Mr. MEADE. Then I submit that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] had not the floor to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan was regularly upon the floor.

Mr. MEADE. I rose and was recognized by the Chair. While I was upon the floor the gentleman from Michigan rose and demanded the previous question. I submit that the gentleman had no right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances the gentleman from Michigan was regularly entitled to the floor, and had the right to call for the previous question.

Mr. MEADE. Then the question is upon the passage of the bill. I now ask the Chair if it is in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated to the gentleman from Virginia once, and he now states again, that no motion is in order now, and has not been at any time since the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MEADE. I call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The yeas and nays were then ordered upon the passage of the bill.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bennett, Bibbians, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Conger, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Hall, Harper, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Martin, McLanahan, McNair, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Murray, Newton, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Souder, David L. Seymour, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Wells, and Wilcox—115.

NAVS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bocock, Bragg, Caldwell, Chapman, Chastain, Clingan, Cobb, John G. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hebard, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, Letcher, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Milson, Morehead, Murphy, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Powell, Ross, Savage, Sutherland, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Alexander White, and Woodward—48.

So the bill passed.

MR. STUART. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the vote by which the bill passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

MR. DUNCAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up and disposing of the light-house bill. I presume it will take but a few moments to dispose of it.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. VENABLE in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The bill before the committee for its consideration is House bill No. 312, making appropriation for light-houses, &c., and the pending question is upon the amendment offered on yesterday by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.] The Clerk will read the amendment, if it is desired by the House.

MR. HENN. It is not necessary to read the amendment to-day. It is very long, and is understood by the House.

MR. HAVEN. I desire to inquire if the first vote is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS?]

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] in which he proposed to strike out the first paragraph; but after discussion he withdrew it. The question now is upon the additional sections offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.]

MR. BROOKS. I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment, and I move to strike out the first section.

I am quite sure, notwithstanding the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] that the establishment of a Light-House Board, or a Light-House Bureau, is an establishment of a new branch of the Government, laying the foundation for, and involving in the end large expenditures. The gentleman, I have no doubt, has introduced his proposition without any additional salaries, or any appropriation, leaving the persons who now hold positions, to the discharge of their duties really impressed with the idea that such a new department of the Government involves no additional expenditures. But it is quite obvious, Mr. Chairman, that we never have established a bureau or a board in this Government without also increasing largely, at the same time, the expenditures of the Government. I need not instance the Census Board. I need not instance other boards, which, with however small beginnings they are made, soon require increased expenditures for room-rent, for clerk hire, for stationery, and not least, but last of all, they send annually to the two Houses of Congress large estimates upon which Congress is bound to act, and which Congress does act with a full hand.

However small, therefore, may be the beginning of expenditures for this Light-House Board, I see nothing but the beginning of like large expenditures which exist in France, in similar institutions there, like large expenditures to those which exist in many other parts of Europe, where, under salaried officers, such an organization exists. A bureau once created, must be maintained, for it cannot exist on air; and experience shows us that Army and Navy gentlemen, or gentlemen of high scientific attainments, are not over-fond of any such impalpable food.

Now, sir, we have gone on for forty or fifty years under the existing system, and gone on pretty well; and while I admit, that from the growth of our country, and the march of science, it is necessary to add some new vigor to that system, yet it is not at all necessary, in my estimation, to revolutionize the system, to lay the axe at the root of the tree, to withdraw the custody of this branch of our expenditures from the Auditor's department, where it has been so long, and in the main, so well placed, and submit it to the operation of the Topographical Bureau, the Engineer Board, the Navy Commissioners, or to the Coast Survey, but rather let us rest content improving a system which has worked sufficiently well as it is.

Now, while I am upon this topic, Mr. Chairman, I will say that we have begun something like an experiment, which the gentleman from Maryland has proposed, upon the coast of the Pacific. The whole light-house concern upon the Pacific is withdrawn from the Auditor in the State Department, under the control of the Treasurer, and is to be transferred to scientific gentlemen, who will make their examinations, their surveys, and their expenditures, and who now have, by the agency of the Treasury, a lieutenant of the Navy, in France examining French lights and French light-houses. When this system is worked out, on the Pacific, and we know what the expenditures are, we shall be able to compare the operations of the new plan upon the Pacific, with the old plan upon the Atlantic, and be the better able to judge of expenditures.

It may be surprising to some gentlemen, that I, a representative of a large commercial interest in this country, should be opposed to this increased expenditure. My object is this, and this only—not to awaken and arouse the agricultural and planting interest of the country, by overlarge expenditures of the light-house system, and bring down that interest upon the commercial interest of this country in a loud demand for tonnage duties for lights, such as exists throughout Europe, I believe, and are in Russia and France. I see the germ of a mighty and magnificent expenditure in the proposition before us, and I wish now to nip it in the bud, to save my constituents from the costly and aggravating light-house dues of our father land.

MR. EVANS. All approaches to reform have been distasteful to persons who wish to remain upon the old plan. Such is the case, I fear, with my friend from New York, [Mr. BROOKS.] He is like too many other persons in the country who adhere to error because they dislike to apply the knife. Why all this talk about increasing expenditures? Where is the proposition to make an expenditure of even one single cent? Where is the proposition to withdraw from the Treasury Department this matter? Nowhere. On the contrary, the whole control of the light-house system, by my amendment, is still left with the Secretary of the Treasury, and is in no manner withdrawn from him.

Why, sir, the gentleman adverts to the Census Bureau as a source of large expenditure. Was there any provision in the law creating the Census Board, that it should be carried on without expense, or that there should be no salaries for clerks, &c.? There is such a provision here. Then, sir, he talks about increased room-rent, and salaries for clerks. Is there not an express provision here that there shall be no additional salaries, and no additional room? Now, sir, we have been too long going on with a wasteful expenditure, and it is time that when we have officers in employ, and receiving salaries, we should assign duties to them for which they are peculiarly fitted.

Sir, it is in vain to withstand this question. I have examined it too long and too well not to know that it has its foundation based upon truth, and it must prevail in this country. Sooner or later the time will come I trust, and it has now come, when this House will pass a law like that, providing against expenditures, and leading to efficiency as well as economy.

Well, sir, the gentleman has been pleased to remark upon the very great expense of the light-house system of France. I do not think the gentleman has paid such attention to that matter as he usually does to questions in this House, because if he had, he would not have said what he has. I have examined it with great care, and I assert upon my responsibility as a Representative—and I defy anybody in the country, in this House or out of it, in debate here, or in controversy carried on elsewhere, to disprove what I assert—that is, that foreign improvements have made a system of lighting much less expensive and vastly more efficient than that which we have employed. My amendment does not prescribe any particular method, or that any particular manner of lighting shall be used, but that is left to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I know that practical men, opticians, chemists, and those acquainted with the subject, will no longer adhere to antiquated ways, but will betake themselves to the path of reform and economy. I am confident of it, but I ask for the purchase of no particular article, and prescribe no particular method of illumination.

Sir, this great reform was commenced long ago; it was advocated by Mr. Walker in 1846, and to which he applied all the vigor of an investigating and active mind, but unfortunately his attention was withdrawn from it by the Mexican war, which sprung up at the time.

MR. BROOKS. I withdraw my amendment, and move to strike out the second section of the amendment.

I have great respect for the scientific information and studies of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.] The speeches which he has made this session upon various questions, from the knowledge he then displayed, entitle his remarks to the highest consideration in this House; but he cannot expect all of us, with our various occupations, to be as well versed in these matters as he assures us he is. Upon his own information, and his own study, without any coordinate action here or elsewhere, save the Light-House Board, and against the remonstrance of the Committee on Commerce here, and Committee on Commerce elsewhere, who have had this light-house report before them, for their consideration, he asks us, at this late period of the session, to enter into a discussion of the difficult science of optics, and to make ourselves acquainted with those hard words he uses, of "dioptric" and "catoptric" lights, or, if these were not hard enough, the harder adjectives yet of "diacatoptric" and "catadeptric," as applied to lights. [Laughter.] Sir, these are hard words which it is difficult for us to mouth, or master at any time, impossible now, in the pressing exigencies of the public service about us. To use the language of the science he has led us into, this is not the hour propitious for any "photometric" experiment. If the gentleman had been able to convince the Committee on Commerce, or any other committee of this House, of the utility of his experiment, he would have brought his proposition before us for our consideration and attention, with a weight of authority which would have deserved our attention, at this period of the session. But he has done nothing of the sort, but upon his own motion he comes here to renew a contest which existed in this Hall ten years ago, led on by a then member of Congress from Indiana, [Mr. PROFFIT,] making like charges and like declarations against the existing system, and against the Fifth Auditor, Mr. Pleasonton, with no more reason now, I apprehend, than did that gentleman then. Congress did not support him or the movement at that time, and the country has not responded to it since, but has gone on ten years more under that administration with no great danger or peril that I am aware of, from any information I can get.

Now, I will say to the gentleman that there is danger in advancing too fast, as well as in advancing too slow. The wisest course is in the silent improving of the existing system, in enlarging and invigorating it, but not in revolutionizing it, as he proposes.

There is no reason either, in my opinion, for the personal remarks—perhaps I use too strong an expression in using the word personal—but I do not believe there is any good reason for the remarks which the gentleman has made against the administration of the Fifth Auditor, Mr. Pleasanton. He is an old man—seventy years of age—a man undoubtedly not possessing all the vigor and energy of youth, but nevertheless, all the advantages of practice and experience. He has been educated in the duties of his office by a training of thirty-two years, and such an experience from the infancy of the system up to the present time is often worth much more than the presumption of youth or the crude experiments of affected science.

Mr. EVANS. I do not want to prolong this debate. I will not longer than is necessary to answer the objection the gentleman makes. He states that I have not the coöperation of the Committee on Commerce, when a majority of it is in favor of my amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. I appeal to the gentlemen of the committee.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Do I understand the gentleman from Maryland to state that the majority of the Committee on Commerce are for the change in the light-house establishment proposed in his amendment?

Mr. EVANS. So I understand.

Mr. SEYMOUR. The gentleman, I think, is very much mistaken.

Mr. EVANS. I do not think I am.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think there is a gentleman on the committee in favor of it except the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DUNCAN.]

Mr. EVANS. I do not know anything about that. Let the gentleman answer for himself. I have been informed that a majority of the committee were in its favor.

Mr. DUNCAN. I do not think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] is authorized to say that the majority of the Committee on Commerce is in favor of his proposition. Owing to the great press of the ordinary business of the House they have not been afforded time to fully consider it. I did say to the gentleman, however, that, in my opinion, if the committee had had time to thoroughly consider it, and did so, that it would meet with the approval of a majority of them.

Mr. EVANS. Very well. I will take that statement, that if the committee had considered the subject a majority of them would have been in favor of the amendment I have submitted. The committee is too intelligent to do otherwise. Well, sir, the gentleman comes in here with an elaborate string of terms, dioptrics, catoptrics, and a great many more which I did not use, though I might have done so. There is not one of these terms in the bill; nor is there any advice about the dioptric or reflector systems. I will leave it to the common sense of the committee whether it is now quite fair, after a subject has been for ten years before Congress, from time to time, for a gentleman to get up and ask us to delay a little longer—to put it off another session. The documents published upon this subject are more voluminous than those published upon any other single subject, and gentlemen might have informed themselves with regard to this proposition upon which the scientific world have not a doubt. I defy those upon the opposite side to name a single scientific or practical man in the world who is opposed to it. Why, sir, all of the maritime countries of Europe have adopted the dioptric system, though I do not say anything about that system in my amendment. The gentleman quotes the maxim festina lente, which is a very good one; but when there is an ulcer on the body-politic the sooner it is cut away the better. I do not know that that maxim is always to prevail. When the Collins line of steamers was before the House I advocated the proposition appropriating to it $858,000. I did not then hear anything about festina lente. In that case money was to be taken from the Treasury to a large amount; but when I come forward to save money—to introduce a real reform—men suddenly become alarmed, and refer to the Committee on Commerce, who acknowledge that they have not examined the subject.

In regard to the gentleman from Indiana, who a few years ago enlisted himself in support of this system, and spoke, and ably spoke, upon it, I have to say that it has been lately the part of the bureau to assail him personally. The bureau gets down from its seat, and walks into the Halls of Congress to denounce the motives of men. I hope the committee will frown upon anything like that. The gentleman from New York got his information from the very document in which the gentleman from Indiana is assailed. The time for reform has arrived, and the gentleman does not represent his constituents if he resists it. I do not mean it in any offensive sense. They have come up here by the hundreds and thousands, and demanded it. I do not ask that the system shall be taken from the Secretary of the Treasury, but only an efficient superintendence of it. The traveling expenses to the officers proposed to be sent to inspect the various lights, will not be half the amount you now pay to your collectors. I hope the debate may end here.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw my amendment, and move to strike out the second section. I rise only to say that I have been a member of Congress for three years now, representing what I believe to be the largest commercial constituency upon the continent of America; and such as have an interest in these lights far beyond any other people, and yet I have not had the first letter from any of my constituents complaining against the administration of the Fifth Auditor.

Mr. EVANS. The only good Fresnel light owned by this Government, is placed right at the mouth of the New York harbor.

Mr. BROOKS. My constituents' interests, sir, are not limited by any narrow view of New York harbor. They are afloat in Texas, in Louisiana, all along our southern coast, and in every one of its harbors. They are the world over—upon the Atlantic, upon the Pacific, in California, and in Oregon. There is not a light-house anywhere in which my constituents are not deeply interested. There burns not a luminary that does not shine upon a New York ship some time or another.

Mr. DUNCAN. I rise simply to state that I will not consume the time allotted to me by the rules. I ask that the question may be taken on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague stated that the Committee on Commerce had not examined this question at all. Now, sir, we had not any particular information from scientific men, because we thought this was a practical question. With regard to the American system of lights, I have a certificate dated May, 1843, long after the Fresnel system had been adopted. It reads as follows:

Statement of ship-masters and mariners in relation to the lights in New York district, &c.

NEW YORK, May, 1843.

The undersigned, ship-masters and mariners, sailing out of the port of New York, or from time to time entering and departing from the port of New York, take pleasure in certifying that, at the present time, and for two years past, the lights in the light-houses and light-ships on the coast, and in the approaches to the harbor of New York, have exhibited an appearance of steadiness, uniformity, and brilliancy, very satisfactory to the interests of navigation, and superior to the experience of former years.

We consider the efficiency of the lights and the management of the light-houses in the district of New York, for two years past, and at the present time, to be worthy of the commendation of the shipping interest.

I suppose it is a practical settlement of the question, if navigators are satisfied. Those engaged in commerce are to judge of the efficiency or inefficiency of the lights. I do not care what scientific men say, if the system be satisfactory to the great navigating interests of the country, and carried on as economically as it is now. I am for bringing matters of science to bear upon other questions. We have ample opportunity to employ all of our scientific men in other departments of the Government. Why, as was well said by the gentleman from New York, if officers of the Army and Navy are to be employed upon business of this description, what is to become of either department in time of war? Are these men, at that juncture, to be withdrawn from this particular service, and placed on board of your vessels-of-war, or in their position in the Army? And if so, what becomes of the light-house system? I, as an humble member of the Committee on Commerce, have examined this subject; and if I had time, I could show, by a reference to the papers before me, that we have no means of ascertaining at present the expense of this Fresnel system. In France there are different orders and descriptions of lenses, varying greatly in the degree of light, as well as cost. The committee will find, by adopting the proposition, as was well said by my colleague on the committee, that they are building up a system which, probably, may cost millions. The expenditures upon the little coast of France we know are very heavy, although we have no full information as to the precise amount. And we are called upon, at this late day of the session, to take up this system, and set aside all now existing. I hope it will not be done. Let the matter be examined; let us know the expense.

Mr. EVANS. I am sincerely sorry for two things. First, that my colleague is opposed to reform, and in the next place, that he evidently has not read the report of the Light-House Board. For the certificate he has read, I have hundreds drawn in the strongest possible language against the whole affair. I pledge my veracity upon the statement. The statement he read was dated in 1843, and the Fresnel refractor was placed at New York harbor in 1841. The gentleman's statement in regard to the expense of the light-house system in France is erroneous from the beginning to the end. He has read the report of the Fifth Auditor. If I had time to analyze that report, I could show to the satisfaction of everybody very great errors in it. The Fifth Auditor is mistaken with regard to the expense of the Fresnel lights. He has compared sixty-six of the first order of lights of England with all our lights, large and small, as to their expense. I am somewhat surprised that so intelligent a gentleman as my colleague, representing a commercial community who desire these improvements, should have received these false impressions. There is not a word about lenses in my amendment. That matter is left with the Secretary of the Treasury. He can say whether he shall adopt the dioptric or reflector lights. I know that the Fresnel is the best system; but I do not introduce a provision for their adoption, for fear of exciting distrust in the minds of gentlemen. It is the cheapest system. A third order lens will give more light than nine or ten of our reflectors. A reflector requires renewal, whilst a lens never wears out.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman know that the officers he wants appointed have adopted it?

Mr. EVANS. I do not want any particular officers appointed. I am satisfied intelligent gentlemen all over the world, when they know that a lens does not wear out and that a reflector does, and requires renewal; that a lens burns only one lamp, whilst a reflector burns from one to thirty, and that a refractor only illumines what is in front of it, whilst a refractor illuminates the whole horizon, will advocate the adoption of the Fresnel system. I do not know or care anything about who is to be appointed on this board. All I ask is, an efficient superintendency of the light-houses in the country. If the committee reject the proposition now, it will come up and be adopted some other time. You cannot prevent it. Our present lights are inefficient.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I do not propose to detain the committee but for a moment. I expressed my opinion against the reform contemplated by the gentleman at the present time, on yesterday. I gave my reasons then with regard to the character of that reform. Now, I wish to say to this committee, that although the present Committee on Commerce have not been able to report upon this difficult and complex question, involving grave matters in science and in practice, yet a former committee of this House investigated the subject in full, and reported upon it. Their report I hold in my hand. It is an able one. It was made in 1842, and went over the very ground which was traveled over by the gentleman from Maryland in his argument on yesterday. It gives the name of all of our works, and specified the amounts of expenditures made upon them. I have not time to read them, but I will say, that so far as construction is concerned, the American light-houses are more cheaply constructed than either the French or English, and are as good in the average as those are.

Mr. EVANS. Why do you ask $110,000 to repair them?

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. A particular case may be cited, but that does not establish a general rule. I have a report here made to this House in 1842, from the Committee on Commerce, and that is the result which they come to with regard to light-houses. In respect to the great expenditure talked of by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] in carrying on the light-houses, they examined that subject, and they examined it, also, in reference to these Fresnel lights, to see whether there could be any saving made by adopting them; and they say that there would be no economy in adopting those lights. They show that the average expenditure in sustaining the light-house system, as compared between this country, France, and England, is in every instance in our favor. They even take a stronger case—the case of light-houses owned by private corporations or individuals in Great Britain, of which there are many, and which would be managed, if any could be, to make money out of at the cheapest expenditure; and they show that our public light-houses, managed extravagantly, as the gentleman says they are, are cheaper than the foreign. Now, when we take this fact, in connection with the facts stated by hundreds of practical navigators, that they are supplied with good lights upon our coast, I submit to the committee that there is no necessity for this radical change. There is no report made in favor of this measure, coming from practical men, but only an effort spasmodically made on the part of certain parties to create another bureau, to overshadow the Government here, and to be a tax upon the public Treasury. I trust that this committee will rely upon practical experience, demonstrated and confirmed, as it has been, by a respectable committee of this House, rather than sustain any visionary proposition at this late period of the session.

Mr. DUNCAN. I did not intend to make another remark upon this subject; and I should not, but for the very strong ground taken by my respected colleague upon the committee, [Mr. SEYMOUR.] The report to which he alludes was made at a period before we had that experience, light, and knowledge upon the subject which we now have. I think that the statements he makes in relation to the cost of English light-houses, as compared with the cost of our light-houses, are erroneous in this, that there are many charges, such as pensions to persons employed, and the charge of reconstruction, which are included in the cost of English light-houses which are not included in the cost of our light-houses. I repent the assertion, if the subject is fairly examined, the positions which I took the other day upon this subject are correct. The great mass of evidence of men competent to decide upon this subject is, that our lights are not what they might be, and not what they ought to be; that they are susceptible of improvement, and that their management is not so systematic as it might be under a board constituted in the manner now proposed. I have no wish to protract this debate. The subject is before the House.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] has introduced an old report here, and unfortunately he has skipped over a later report made in the Senate, in which all the facts were brought out, and in which they recommend precisely what I have recommended here. It was made in the year 1838, and there were several reports afterwards.

Mr. SEYMOUR. If the gentleman will permit me, I say that I alluded to a report made by the Committee on Commerce to this House in 1842.

Mr. EVANS. But the gentleman skipped an elaborate report made here, in which there is not one single thing incorrect. I will tell you how this thing stands. Upon the one side is Mr. Pleasonton and the gentleman, and upon the other side is the rest of the world. That is the way the matter stands precisely.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MEADE. It seems to me that there is one amendment which ought to be made to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] whether it be adopted or not. I perceive that, in the first or second clause, it provides for the appointment of two civilians to constitute a portion of the Light-House Board. Now, as this is a mere experiment, offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] the policy of which probably no five men in the House can decide upon with reference to his own knowledge upon the subject—

Mr. CARTTER. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] offer an amendment?

Mr. MEADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTTER. I should like to hear it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEADE. I move to strike out the word "civilian" where it occurs. I was about to state that I have attended very strictly to the discussion, professing to understand nothing about the subject, with a view of being enlightened. It is utterly impossible for me, or any other man in my situation—and I say that there are nineteen twentieths in my situation—to judge of the policy of this amendment, except by reference to the confidence which I may have in the statement of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] and that of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR,] and of those who sustain the gentleman from New York. Well, that being the case, without saying that the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] ought not to be adopted, without saying that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] is right, yet ignorant of the facts myself, it seems to me to be wise policy, before any important change is made in the old system, which has worked well, that the proposed change should be referred to some competent jurisdiction like a committee in this House, either a standing or select committee, which shall gather all the facts upon the subject, and report to this House after a thorough investigation. I have the utmost confidence in the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] and in his learning upon the subject; but while I see gentlemen, entitled to equal confidence, differing in opinion from me upon this subject, I cannot, under any circumstances, vote for an amendment infringing an entire new system upon the old one, and effecting an entire change.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman that he is mistaken. These boards exist in all the maritime countries of Europe—England, France, Ireland, Belgium, Scotland, Sardinia, Denmark, Prussia, &c. They are formed in the same way, and have civilians in the board. The word "civilians" ought not to be stricken out, because I desire the best scientific men of the country to be placed upon such a board for their talents, and as a check upon the other officers. In England they are found to be placed upon it without pay, and seek for the appointment, and the most able and scientific men consider it an honor to be appointed as the civilians upon the board. We have the opinions of hundreds of shipmasters, speaking in the strongest terms of the system of Europe, as better than our system, not the men of 1842, but the men of 1852, sailing out of all the harbors. One captain, who has made two hundred and eight voyages across the Atlantic, and who is acquainted with all the systems of Europe, says the same thing. The civilians upon these boards serve without pay. I cannot believe that our men are less patriotic than they are in Europe. The civilians appointed upon this board ought to be the best scientific men we have.

Mr. WALSH. I thought my colleague said that the light-houses in Europe were in the hands of corporations.

Mr. EVANS. So they are in England.

Mr. WALSH. Have they these men of science?

Mr. EVANS. Unquestionably.

The question was then taken on Mr. MEADE's amendment, and it was rejected.

The question then recurring on Mr. EVANS's amendment to the original bill,

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and MESSRS. CHANDLER and ASHLE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 45.

So the amendment of Mr. EVANS was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. After lines one hundred and nine and one hundred and ten, which read as follows: "For four spar-buoys in the harbor of New Bedford, $300," I offer the following:

For a light-vessel to be moored off Minot's Ledge until the proposed light-house upon said ledge be completed, $1,600.

I ask leave to offer this out of order. If the House will just hear me for a moment—

Mr. HOUSTON. We have other business, and if we are to go back, I want Jones's fog-bells stricken out. I object to going back upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to entertain the point of order.

Mr. DUNCAN. Can I not offer it as a separate section?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman can offer it in the House as an amendment when we get into the House, before he calls the previous question, as he will have the floor.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Provided, The expenses incurred by the Topographical Bureau and Coast Survey for the location of these beacons, buoys, and lights, shall not be paid out of the light house fund for actual labor and material.

The whole object of the bill as it now stands amended throughout is, to change and transfer the administration of your light-house system from the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, who has administered it for thirty-two years, to the Coast Survey, Topographical Corps, and a new board to be called the Light-House Board. I must confess, I was surprised to see so large a majority sanction such an innovation, solely upon the recommendation—

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment, but is reviewing the action of the House upon another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair to determine as yet what line of argument the gentleman is to take.

Mr. BROOKS. There has been a great deal of prejudice created against the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury. Now, I do not see any reason why a man who received his office from Jefferson, who was transferred here with this Government from Philadelphia, and who has held his office for some fifty years through all Administrations, should, in his old age, have taken from him the administration of his department, and have it transferred in this way to a new-formed Topographical Bureau, or to the Coast Survey, or to some yet unknown board, to be called the Light-House Board or Bureau. His administration of this light-house department, with occasional errors, to which all men have been subject, has been as fair, as upright, as creditable, as successful as was ever the administration of a like department. I venture to predict here, in the face of my commercial constituents, and in the face of the whole commerce of the country, that if this system which has been projected and planned here, is carried out, the great body of the people of the country, when they see the expenditures of the light-house system swollen to $1,000,000, as the expenditure of the Coast Survey are now being swollen—half a million is the expenditure now—I predict that the agricultural and interior interests will rise up and demand that a tax shall be laid upon tonnage, that every ship which comes within the range of a light shall pay a tax to that light.

Mr. EVANS. I supposed that this thing was at the end. I was in hopes that we had done with it, and certainly I have no desire to weary the committee by any further discussion on the subject. But the gentleman from New York says that the expenses of this light-house department will amount up to $1,000,000 a year. Does he not know that last year the expenses were $1,000,000 and that they are three quarters of a million this year?

Sir, the Fifth Auditor is always being brought in here. I did not bring in his name. I wish to cast no reflection whatever upon him; and I say now, that if the most efficient man in the world was put down in a bureau here, he could not manage our light-houses. It is impossible he can do it. I wish to make no reflections whatever upon Mr. Pleasonton. I do not know under whose Administration he was appointed; but I do know that he was not appointed to take charge of this subject. The law imposes this duty upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is principally by rules and regulations, made by the Department, that it gets to the Fifth Auditor. He is, I believe, made to audit the accounts of the State Department, and the Census, and perhaps has other duties; and by a policy foreign to the policy of our country, he not only audits the accounts of the State Department, but he also, I am informed, audits his own accounts. I do not say that they are not fairly audited, for they are. But, sir, Mr. Pleasonton cannot live forever.

A MEMBER. He does not audit his own accounts.

Mr. EVANS. I understand, that by a courtesy, they are sent over to another Bureau; but I have heard that, by another courtesy, they are not examined there as other accounts are. [Laughter.] I repeat, that I do not mean to cast any reflection upon Mr. Pleasonton; but I do not think he is the proper man to manage our light-house system.

The question was then taken on Mr. Brooks's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. I find that I cannot well offer the amendment, to which I alluded a few minutes since, in the House, and I am sure I shall be permitted to offer it now, when the committee hear me explain what it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw my objection, as there may be some difficulty about offering it in the House.

Mr. DUNCAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line one hundred and ten.

For a light-vessel to be moored off Minot's Ledge, until the proposed light-house on said ledge be completed, $1,600.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Is that amendment in order at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio as objecting to it?

Mr. STANTON. Yes, sir, I do object to it.

Mr. EVANS. It is too late to object now. The amendment has been received and read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the objection comes too late.

Mr. DUNCAN. I would state, in vindication of the course of the committee, that the first intimation of this application was handed to me since I took my seat here this morning; and that it is based upon a very large memorial from merchants and underwriters of Boston, and the collector of that port. I will state further, that when the light-house at this point was carried away, the merchants, at their own expense, employed a steam vessel, with lights upon it, at an expense of $300 a day. The light placed there now is wholly inefficient.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. If we go into the House now, we are not likely to come back into committee to-night; and I would therefore like for the committee to lay aside this bill to be reported to the House, and take up the fortification bill.

Mr. CARTTER. I object now, and move that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I ask the committee, if they will not do that, as there is considerable opposition—

Mr. CARTTER. Is discussion in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not strictly in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was appealing to the gentleman from Ohio, to see if he would not agree to what I propose. The fortification bill contains but a small amount, and if there is a majority against it, I am willing to take it into the House and let it be disposed of there.

Mr. CARTTER. I hope that bill never will be taken up, and I insist upon my motion.

Mr. STROTHER. I desire, if it is in order, to move to take up, not the fortification bill, but a bill which stands at the head of the Calendar, for the relief of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company. Its consideration will consume but a very short time. The question involved in it is one of infinite importance, not only to the section of country which I immediately represent, but to a large extent of country lying behind it, and it is entitled to consideration. If the bill is to be passed at all, it must be passed now, or the works upon that road will have to be stopped.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to know whether this is the bill that involves the question of a loan or advance by the State of Virginia to the Federal Government, at a very early period?

Mr. STROTHER. It is the same bill.

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a question of order, and my question of order is this, that discussion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CARTTER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STROTHER] was upon the floor moving to take up bill No. 49. He gave way to a question from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SACKETT.]

Mr. CARTTER. Had not I previously moved that the committee rise and report the light-house bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that motion to be withdrawn. The gentleman from Ohio entered into conversation with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] who appealed to him to withdraw his motion. His reply was: "I hope the fortification bill never will be taken up." The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Mr. DUNCAN. I had not resigned my right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that discussion was in order, and that the request was properly made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. STROTHER.]

Mr. CARTTER demanded tellers on the appeal; which were ordered; and Messrs. CARTTER and ALLISON were appointed.

Mr. STUART. If the Chair will allow me to say a few words, I think I can set this matter right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STUART. By the order of the House, the committee must rise and report the bill. They cannot take up any other bill. We can go into committee again, and the gentleman from Virginia can submit his motion. But now we must, by the express order of the House, rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not reconsider its decision. If the committee choose to reverse it, let them do it.

Mr. WASHBURN. What has become of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DUNCAN] that the committee rise and report the bill? It has never been withdrawn or disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I want to know how this matter came in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make no reply to any question until the appeal is disposed of.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 65; no quorum voting.

[Loud shouts of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. STANLY. I hope there will be no objection to a recount. There is evidently a quorum present.

[Loud cries of "Object!" and "Call the roll!"]

Mr. CARTTER. If the gentleman from Virginia does not intend to continue his speech out of order, I will withdraw the appeal.

[Cries of "Object!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal cannot be withdrawn. The roll must be called.

The roll was then called, and one hundred and forty-five members having answered to their names the committee rose and reported the names of the absentees.

A quorum being now present, the committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CARTTER. With a view of facilitating business, I withdraw the appeal, and move that the committee rise and report the light-house bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. VENABLE) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 312, "making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," and had instructed him to report back the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled the following bill, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker, viz: An act to create an additional land office in the Territory of Minnesota.

The question now being upon concurring in the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the light-house bill,

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I move that the bill be laid upon the table, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. STANTON's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn, and upon that motion I ask for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. McMULLIN's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The amendments to the light-house bill will be read by the Clerk, and all disposed of by one vote, as usual, if it is the wish of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I want the yeas and nays upon the last amendment—that offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS]—and if it be determined to press the vote to-night upon so important a proposition, I shall demand a separate vote upon each amendment.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, except the last one, were severally concurred in.

The question recurred on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] inserted in a previous part of this day's proceedings.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Have the yeas and nays been called for upon that amendment?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOKS. I move that the House do now adjourn, in order that we may have a vote upon this amendment in the morning upon a full House. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BROOKS then demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS of Alabama, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 78.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were then ordered upon the amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BROOKS. In order that we may have a full vote upon the amendment, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and upon a division 51 rose in the affirmative.

Mr. BROOKS demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. BROOKS then demanded tellers on the yeas and nays; but they were refused.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. BROOKS. I do not think there is a quorum present. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, the previous question having been ordered.

Tellers were demanded on the motion to adjourn, and they were ordered; and Messrs. BRECKINRIDGE and GAYLORD were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 74.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BROOKS. Did a quorum vote?

Mr. EVANS. Did the gentleman himself vote?

The SPEAKER. There was not a quorum voting.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Without a quorum we can do nothing, except a call of the House.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY. Without a quorum, can we entertain that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the House that as the previous question has been ordered, a motion for a call of the House is not in order under an express rule. The House has refused to adjourn. Upon a division of the House, no quorum voted; hence, under the rules, strictly speaking, no motion is in order. The Chair, under the circumstances, has a right to ascertain whether a quorum be present, and for that purpose he will count the House.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No 148.

The Speaker then counted the House, and reported that there were 140 members present, and consequently a quorum.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. I submitted a motion to lay the bill upon the table, and the Speaker now states that the question is upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists upon that motion, it is in order.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MASON. Is it in order to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BROOKS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to know if it is in order for a gentleman to submit two motions to adjourn successively, and then embarrass the House by factious proceedings?

Mr. GOODENOW. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] has delayed the House for half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] will recollect that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] made a motion to lay the bill upon the table, and the yeas and nays were called upon it, and upon that a division of the House has been had.

If the House would only preserve better order, we should be able to understand what is going on, but that is impossible amid the present confusion.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask the Chair if I have not a right to call for a division?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman has not, unless he demands it at the proper time. The Chair has announced the result, but he hopes the gentleman will be indulged to call for a division.

[Cries of "Too late!" "Too late!"]

Mr. BROOKS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to state my point of order.

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to state his point of order, but he must confine himself strictly to it.

Mr. BROOKS. I called loudly for a division upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may have announced the vote unusually quick, but the gentleman did not call for a division until after the announcement was made.

Mr. BROOKS. Several gentlemen around me heard me call for a division. I do not wish to be factious, but I desire a full House upon so important a vote.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. BROOKS. The point of order—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. STUART. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to confine the gentleman to the statement of the point of order, under the rule.

Mr. BROOKS. The point of order is, that I called in time, both for a division and for tellers, upon the question of adjournment. The Chair has decided against me, and from that decision I appeal.

The SPEAKER. That is a fair statement of the question.

Mr. HENN. I would inquire if the gentleman rose in his seat and made the call?

Mr. CARTTER. No, he did not.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. STUART. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BROOKS demanded tellers upon the motion; which were not ordered.

Mr. BROOKS. I now move that the House adjourn, and upon that I call for a division first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House adjourn while an appeal is pending, on which, if the Chair was decided against, the House would be compelled to adjourn. The Chair will entertain the motion to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and there were, upon a division—ayes 39, noes 86. Before the result was announced,

Mr. BROOKS called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays; and there were—yeas 44, noes 81, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocock, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Colcock, John G. So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is apparent that we can do nothing now. There are twenty-five amendments to be acted upon, and it is in the power of the House to call the yeas and nays upon every one of them. I move this House adjourn.

Mr. DUNCAN. There is only one amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there, Mr. Speaker, but one amendment?

The SPEAKER. Only one.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I have been egregiously misinformed. I withdraw the motion. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the bill upon the table; and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the amendment; and there were—yeas 70, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Barrere, Bennett, Bibbhaus, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, George H. Brown, E. Carington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Carter, Chandler, Chastain, Conger, George T. Davis, Dimmick, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Faulkner, Ficklin, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Howard, John W. NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bocock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Brown, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Colcock, J. G. Seymour, Skelton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Walsh, Wells, and Wildrick—50.

So the amendment was agreed to. Pending the call,

Mr. PHELPS said: I have paired off upon this question with my colleague, Mr. MILLER. He is in favor of the amendment, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 36, noes 75.

Mr. STUART asked for tellers upon the motion to adjourn; which were ordered; and Messrs. BRECKINRIDGE and ROBBINS were appointed.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If we now adjourn, what becomes of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It will be before the House after the expiration of the morning hour, to-morrow.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 18.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 26, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

A message was received from the Senate at the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the House entitled "An act to provide for the execution of the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the receiving of reports from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. CARTTER, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Patents be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John G. Ramsey, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MAIL FROM NEW ORLEANS TO VERA CRUZ.

Mr. PENN, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back to the House, without amendment, Senate bill No. 191, entitled "An act to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back in steam vessels."

Mr. ST. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of expressing the hope that the House will so far indulge me as to take up this bill now, and put it upon its passage. It is not likely to meet with any opposition, and its consideration, therefore, will not consume more than five minutes of the time of this House.

Sir, I trust I shall be pardoned for pressing the passage of this bill. It is a measure of deep and vital importance not only to the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and to the whole Mississippi valley, but to the commerce of the whole country; for it is as much the interest of the North and the East to throw open the best market in the world for their manufactures as it is that of the South and the West to seek in return for their agricultural products the bullion extracted from the wealthy mines of Mexico. It is a strange fact, sir, that we have now less intercourse with Mexico—a Republic in our immediate vicinity—than we have with the Empire of China. And what has been the consequence of this carelessness on our part? Why, sir, our commerce with Mexico, which, in 1835, amounted, according to the returns of the Secretary of the Treasury, to nearly $20,000,000, in exports and imports, is now reduced to less than $3,000,000. The immense trade of that country has been diverted from its natural channel, and is now completely monopolized by Great Britain. Besides, sir, looking at this question in a moral point of view, is it not our wish as well as it is our interest to cultivate and strengthen, by frequent intercourse, those kind and friendly relations which ought always to exist between the two Republics? Is it not a moral obligation on our part to spread over the whole American continent republican ideas and republican institutions, and to teach our neighbors by the force of our example how to enjoy the blessings of a free and republican Government?

Sir, this measure is one of so deep importance to the whole country; it is one so national in its character, that I trust it will meet with no opposition upon this floor. It was urgently recommended by the President, in his last annual message; it has the sanction of the Postmaster General; it was unanimously recommended by the committee which reported the bill to the Senate, and passed that body without a dissenting voice. I hope, sir, that it will be received with the same favor by this House. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, you will perceive that by this bill not a dollar is to be appropriated out of the Treasury to build those steamers. The bill simply authorizes the Postmaster General to contract, for a sum not exceeding $100,000, for the transportation of the mails, tri-monthly, between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. The construction of the steamers in which the mails will be carried will remain entirely in the charge of the contractors, who are only required to furnish vessels of eight hundred tons burden. The mail matter to be transported in these steamers will, I dare say, more than repay the amount to be expended by the Government, especially when we take into consideration that this is to be the first link of that great and rapid chain of communication between our Atlantic and Pacific possessions. Sir, it is not my purpose on this occasion to appeal to sectional feelings in behalf of a measure which, I confess, is of vital importance to the whole West, and especially to the State which I have the honor in part to represent; were I to do so, I would not only do violence to my own feelings, but I would misrepresent the wishes and disregard the instructions of those who have honored me with a seat upon this floor. Louisiana is a Union-loving State; and whenever the word nationality is pronounced upon this floor, it finds an echo in the heart of every one of her citizens. Her Representatives have never stopped to inquire whether this or that particular locality was to be benefited, whenever an appropriation has been asked for a work of a national character. But candor will compel me to say, that while millions of dollars have been appropriated, and that, too, with the unanimous vote of our delegation, for the exclusive benefit of ports on the Atlantic coast, not a solitary dollar has ever been spent in appropriations of this character for New Orleans, the great emporium of the Southwest—a port which furnishes nearly one half of the exports of this country, and distributes yearly over that vast area between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, over $60,000,000 of imports.

Mr. PENN. Mr. Speaker, this Senate bill, which is of importance to Louisiana and the whole Union, is simple and economical in its provisions, and free from the objections made by some members of this body, because it does not require the Government to advance the money for the construction of these steamers. It only authorizes the Postmaster General to make a contract with the lowest bidder for carrying the mails three times a month from New Orleans to Vera Cruz. It limits the term of the contract to five, instead of ten years, which is only one half the usual term allowed for steam service on the Atlantic. It also insures the employment of steam vessels of a good class, both for the accommodation of passengers and the wants of commerce. To make the House aware of the great importance the Government attaches to the establishment of a mail service between the ports to which I have alluded, allow me to read the following report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the Senate, in which are contained extracts from the annual message of the President and the report of the Secretary of the Navy:

"That the act of March 3, 1845, providing for the transportation of the United States mails between the United States and foreign countries, had clearly in contemplation, that a line would be established between the points embraced in the proposals submitted by the memorialist. The eighth section of that act specially directs 'the making of contracts for the transportation of the mail from place to place, in the United States, in steamboats, by sea, and on the Gulf of Mexico, and on the Mississippi river up to the city of New Orleans.' This part of the act, being deemed obscure, has to this day remained a dead letter, and the consequence has been an almost entire suspension of all regular intercourse with our sister Republic. The subject, however, has at different times been pressed on the consideration of Congress. The Secretary of the Navy, in his report of 1848, remarks as follows:

"As a more interesting part of the system, [alluding to the system created by the act just quoted,] I recommend that authority be given to contract for the transportation of the mail between New Orleans and Vera Cruz, in steamships convertible into war steamers. It will tend, by promoting social and commercial intercourse, to consolidate friendship between the United States and Mexico, and invite her rich products of specie to our cities. It will add, too, to the mails on all the connecting lines, increase the postal profits, and make available for public defense an additional number of war steamers."

"Referring to the same subject, the President of the United States, in his annual message of that year, said:

"I recommend to your favorable consideration the establishment of the proposed line of steamers between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. It promises the most happy results, in cementing friendship between the two Republics, and extending reciprocal benefits to the trade and manufactures of both."

"Our commercial relations with Mexico have, within these few years past, so decreased that our exports to that country, which in 1835 were $9,029,221, had fallen in 1850 to $2,412,827; and our imports, which in 1835 amounted to $8,343,181, were reduced in 1850 to $1,560,166."

"Such is the deplorable state of our trade at this day with Mexico. It is mainly attributable to a want of speedy and reliable means of communication between the two countries, and must, if permitted to prevail much longer, so alienate them from each other that they will soon become more strangers than if they were separated by boundless seas and impassable continents. Yet one cannot but be struck with the many and important advantages which the establishment of a line of communication, placing the two countries in closer contact, would confer on both. While the intercourse thereby created might awaken our neighbors to a consciousness of the inexhaustible resources by which they are surrounded, and of their ability, by proper application and industry, to turn them to the improvement of their physical, social, and political condition, it would tend also to foster and strengthen those kind and friendly relations which it should be our wish, which it is certainly our interest, to cultivate and extend. It would divert from England to our shores a great proportion of the millions of silver which we are at present so much in need of, secure to us an ample supply of dye-stuffs and other commodities, enlarge our commercial marine, and increase our freights and tonnage."

"Prompted by these considerations, and being of opinion that the proposals made by the memorialist are liberal and would secure, if attempted, a speedy realization of the object sought to be attained, the committee recommend to the favorable action of the Senate the accompanying bill."

The following is the opinion expressed by the Postmaster General in his last annual message to Congress:

"The attention of this Department having been directed to the subject of postal communication between the United States and Mexico, it has ascertained that satisfactory propositions can probably be obtained for a line of mail steamers from New Orleans, by way of Tampico, to Vera Cruz."

"The establishment of such a line would no doubt greatly facilitate and increase the postal intercourse between the two countries, and in that regard alone is worthy of the consideration of Congress. But it would also, it is believed, be productive of great political and commercial advantages; would abate national antipathies and prejudices; promote and increase friendly views and relations between the people of the two countries, and unite more closely by mutual benefits the two great Republics of the western hemisphere. For the reasons thus briefly adverted to, I respectfully advise that the establishment of a line of mail steamers to Vera Cruz be recommended to Congress. An examination of the Treasury tables of exports and imports to and from Mexico for the last ten years will, it is believed, show the importance of such a line to the interests of the whole country—especially to that large portion of it situated on the Mississippi and its tributaries—and justify defraying from the Treasury the expense of its establishment."

It will be perceived that the Secretary of the Navy deems the matter of so much importance that he recommends war steamers on the plan of the contracts with those on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; but the friends of this bill, to insure its speedy passage, have framed its provisions with a view to economy, and with such safeguards as were deemed proper to be thrown around it. In conclusion, I will ask that the bill be read through.

The Clerk then read the bill through.

Mr. PENN. I now move that the bill be put upon its passage, and upon that motion call the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading.

Mr. AVERETT. Is a motion to lay the bill upon the table in order?

THE SPEAKER. It is, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. AVERETT. I then submit that motion, and demand the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay upon the table, and it was disagreed to.

The bill was then read a third time, and, under the operation of the previous question, passed.

Mr. St. MARTIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

WILMINGTON AND MANCHESTER RAILROAD.

Mr. PENN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report back, without amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 447, entitled "An act for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company." The bill simply gives to this company the indulgence to withhold the payment of duty upon their imported iron, for four years, from the Government, for which time legal interest is to be paid. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McQUEEN. I trust my friend will allow me to make a few remarks.

Mr. PENN. As my friend comes from the district through which the road is to pass, I withdraw the call for the previous question, on the condition that he will renew it.

Mr. McQUEEN. I promise the gentleman to renew it.

Mr. COBB. I would ask the consent of the gentleman to allow me to submit an amendment to the bill.

Consent was not given.

Mr. McQUEEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose, at this late period of the session, to detain the House with a discussion at length upon the merits of this bill. I shall, however, as the greater portion of the road to which the bill applies runs through my district, explain its object; and I proceed to do so with the confident belief that when it shall be well understood, there will not be found ten members in this House in opposition to it. The indulgence asked is for a company who are constructing a link of railroad as a continuation of that which now extends as far as Wilmington in North Carolina, over which the great southern mail from the North to New Orleans is now carried, which link avoids one of the most difficult and dangerous lines of navigation upon this continent. Two years ago, an act was passed by Congress, at the instigation of my friend from the Wilmington district of North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] granting an indulgence similar to the one proposed by this bill for the road extending as far as Wilmington. Between that bill and the present there is the distinguishing difference that that bill provided for the payment of no interest by the company, who were to give bonds for the faithful payment of the duty, whilst this one provides for the payment of every dollar of interest, to be, together with the duty upon the iron, secured by bonds, which are to be approved by the judges of the district courts of North and South Carolina, and made satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury. There is also a condition in this act that the money arising from the carriage of the great mail from the South to the East over this road shall be retained in the Treasury, and as it accrues, be discounted with the Post Office Department for the satisfaction of the bonds. This link runs through the level pine forests in North and South Carolina, and is being constructed by the planters of that country, who have mainly worked out their stock in the grading of the road. Gentlemen ask why the company constructing this road come here and ask this small matter? Every one acquainted with the planting interests knows very well the great importance of this indulgence in the payment of the duty upon iron, so that planters who can realize upon their crops but once a year, can measure their payments to suit the season of the year at which they can sell and realize the proceeds of their crops. I assert, indeed, without fear of contradiction, that there is no road in the United States of more importance to every portion of the Confederacy than this one.

The mail is now carried with great facility from New Orleans to Maine upon steamboats and railroads, with the exception of this gap, and about thirty miles in the State of Georgia. The navigation from Wilmington to Charleston is so difficult that there is no part of the route from this to New Orleans where so many disappointments unavoidably occur as on this particular portion. The company now get $75,000 a year for the transportation of the mail from Weldon to Charleston. The act which was passed for the benefit of the Wilmington road two years ago, made a similar provision to this in regard to discounting moneys with the Department; and I have been authorized to say that every dollar which has been suspended for the benefit of the Wilmington road, has been paid by the transportation of the mail as it has fallen due. When we look a little into the history of the law in regard to railroad iron, I flatter myself that gentlemen will not be disposed here to oppose this bill; because I assert the fact that there has never been the first dollar granted in the way of favors by the legislation of this Government to the planters of South or North Carolina, unless it be by the little indulgence given to the Wilmington Railroad Company two years ago, while the main arteries of northern communication were all constructed during the existence of laws which entirely repealed duty upon railroad iron. In 1832, the duties upon railroad iron were repealed. In 1836, the duties which had been paid to Kentucky and Ohio railroads were refunded to them, upon the ground that they were to be made equal with those having the benefits of the law passed in April, 1832.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that the railroad companies who made their roads while that law was in existence, paid nearly double the price which railroad iron now costs?

Mr. McQUEEN. I am not able to answer the question as to the precise amount of the prices of iron, but I tell the gentleman this, that although iron may have cost more than now, it will always diminish in price as a greater number of men engage in its manufacture; but that does not justify, in my opinion, an act imposing a duty of thirty per cent. upon the cotton-planters of the South, for the benefit of the iron manufacturers of the North, when they have been obliged, often, to sell their cotton for less than half the price they formerly got for it. The duty was refunded, in 1838, to the New York and Harlem Railroad Company—actually paid out of the Treasury, by special act of Congress. In the same year, the duty was refunded to the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad Company, and by the same act the duty on fastenings and spikes, even, was repealed, and the duty on them formerly paid by the Georgia Railroad Company refunded. In 1839 the duty was refunded to the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad Company. In 1842 all iron for railroads was allowed to be imported free of duty, until March, 1843, and then a duty imposed upon it, and in this interval, all the roads which were built, as I maintain, (except one which was built in South Carolina, for which the company never asked a refunding of the duty,) were allowed to have their iron free of duty. In 1838, an act was passed allowing C. Day & Co. to import steamships, even, free of duty. These are facts, comprising the history of the legislation of the country upon railroad iron, as will appear upon the statute-books of Congress. We do not ask, in this instance, one dollar out of the Treasury; we do not propose here to procure legislation by which we shall put one farthing in our pockets. I presume not a man of the planters, who are interested in this railroad, have had, directly or indirectly, a dollar out of the Treasury. I will go further, and express the opinion that not a man in my Congressional district has ever had a dollar of money in his pocket out of the Treasury, as a bonus. We know this Government for its taxes. We have not asked for its bounties, nor do I ask for its moneys or its lands. I am asked, what is the length of the road? It is one hundred and sixty miles long, and about sixty miles of it are already built and the cars running upon it, and it is rapidly progressing towards completion, at both ends. I have been asked this summer, by gentlemen connected with the Post Office Department, how soon we will fill up the gap, so that they can put the great southern mail upon this route, in order to avoid the dangerous and uncertain sea navigation, by which it is subject to constant failures.

I am told by the honorable gentleman [Mr. PENN] who reported this bill from the committee, that, for several years, while he was connected with the post office at New Orleans, he was well satisfied that nine failures out of ten, which occurred in the great southern mail, resulted on account of the uncertainty of the sea, to be remedied by this road. There is no part of the Confederacy which I do not believe to be somewhat interested in this bill. It is the direct route for the southern people who go East and North in the summer. It is the direct route upon which the northern and southern mail will be carried.

It is a road as indispensable for northern commercial interests as it is for southern—and it is a road which will be as much used by the traveler from the North, as from the South. It is to supply a link in a chain of travel now so difficult and hazardous, that I have had more inquiries made of me by travelers as to the prospect of its completion, than of any other road within my knowledge. I can assert that the stock in this road has been largely taken by planters, who have worked out already the greater part of their subscriptions, and there is consequently no speculation in it; for every dollar of the stock is bona fide taken. So soon as the mail shall have been put upon it, the payment of the duty will commence by this act, and as the Wilmington Company now get $75,000 a year for its transportation to Charleston, I have no doubt myself, by the time the indulgence has passed, every dollar of the duty will have been paid by mail services. I will say to my Democratic friends of Pennsylvania, that they need not vote against this bill on account of any injury their iron manufacturers will sustain from its passage, because after an effort to purchase the iron from them, it has been bought in Belgium, and is now bonded at the ports of Wilmington and Charleston, and no deleterious effects can result to their constituents. The bill has passed the Senate without opposition, and is reported with the unanimous approbation of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have asked no other favor at the hands of this Congress. I feel a proper interest in this bill for the planters whom I represent, and who, as I have said, have never had and never asked, a dollar from the Treasury; nor do they in this request, in view of former legislation of Congress, but a simple act of justice. It can result in no detriment to the Government, because, we are told daily, there are fifteen or sixteen millions of dollars surplus in the Treasury.

I am asked what will be the aggregate amount of the duty on this road. As nearly as I can inform the House, I presume it will not exceed $100,000; had I been able to have gotten this bill before the House at the first of the session, it might have amounted to $150,000.

From information derived from the president of the road, I believe, and he confidently hopes, the mail may be put on it during the ensuing winter, such is the rapidity with which it is being built.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I will ask my friend at what point the Wilmington and Manchester road will intersect the Columbia and Charleston road?

Mr. McQUEEN. It will intersect at a point (Manchester) on the Camden road, about forty miles above Branchville, which is on the Charleston and Hamburg railroad, and about half way between the two latter places.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Then it will connect directly with Charleston?

Mr. McQUEEN. Yes, sir; and without the difficulty encountered by those who navigate that coast at the mouth of Cape Fear river, at which they often have to wait for tide water in order to get over the bar; and it is believed will forward the great southern mail some seven hours earlier than it can be done by steamboat.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I should like to ask my friend from the Petersburg district a question, Where the Southside road intersects the main southern line?

Mr. MEADE. It is a communication directly from Norfolk to Weldon. By this, communication, if I understand it, will be directly from Weldon to Charleston.

Mr. MOREHEAD. If I understand you correctly, there is a direct communication by railroad from Norfolk, Virginia, to Weldon, in North Carolina. When the route proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. McQUEEN,] and under consideration, is completed, that connection will continue directly on to Charleston.

Mr. McQUEEN. To New Orleans; making an unbroken chain of railroad to Montgomery, Alabama, except thirty miles in Georgia yet to be completed. I move the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw the demand for the previous question, to enable me to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

Provided, further, That the provisions of this bill be, and are hereby extended to the Memphis and Charleston, and the Selma and Gunter's Landing Railroad companies, running through the States of Alabama and Mississippi and Tennessee.

Mr. McQUEEN. I cannot withdraw it. My objection to the amendment is, that if it is adopted the bill will have to go back to the Senate, and may thus be defeated.

Mr. DANIEL. As I happened to be absent the other day when the action of the House was had upon the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad bill, I ask my friend from South Carolina to withdraw the demand for the previous question, that I may offer it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. McQUEEN. It is very unpleasant to me to have to refuse my friend from North Carolina, for whom I have the utmost respect; but as the morning hour has nearly expired, I must decline to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

[Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back, as correctly enrolled, the following bills, which, thereupon, severally received the signature of the Speaker, viz:

An act granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public lands, for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of St. Mary, in said State;

An act for the relief of John Moore White; and

An act to provide for executing the public printing and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes.]

The question now being upon seconding the demand for the previous question,

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE moved that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays, and I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. McQUEEN. Will it be competent for me, at this period, to withdraw the demand for the previous question, and make a motion to commit the bill?

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay the bill upon the table takes precedence of such a motion.

Tellers were ordered on the yeas and nays; and Messrs. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and MOLONY were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported only 25 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. Howe's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question recurring upon the demand for the previous question, it was put, and the previous question received a second.

The main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. McQUEEN demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. VENABLE called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill; and they were ordered.

[Here a message was received from the Senate of the United States by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, announcing that the Senate had passed sundry bills and joint resolutions.]

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 102, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bissell, Bock, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. So the bill was passed.

Mr. McQUEEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the light-house appropriation bill is the business first before the House. A motion was made yesterday to reconsider the vote by which the fourteenth amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. That is the question now before the House.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the purport of that amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS,] establishing a board of light-house commissioners.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BUELL. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

A MEMBER. Oh, no. It was read twice yesterday.

Mr. BUELL. I have not heard it yet.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again read.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman from New York to move that the amendment be read.

Mr. BUELL. I understand that it is lengthy, and therefore I will not insist on the reading, although I have not heard the amendment.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative; so the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time.

The question now being, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. DUNCAN moved the previous question. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, called for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative; so the bill was passed.

Mr. DUNCAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire the House to go into committee this morning, and dispose of the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill. Those amendments have been discussed here once, and if there is no objection, I wish to offer the usual resolution to close the debate in one hour after we go into committee.

Mr. FREEMAN. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the honorable gentleman from Alabama to withdraw that motion, to allow me to report back a bill for the relief of the widows and orphan children of certain officers and seamen of the United States brig Washington, who were lost overboard in a hurricane. It is a Senate bill. I have been ordered to report it by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it has been in my hands for a long time. It will not take ten minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot give way, for I am very anxious to get through with the appropriation bills.

Mr. DUNCAN. I wish to inquire what has become of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, to close the debate on the Senate's amendments to the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. Objection is made to closing the debate until we go into committee and consider the amendments. I shall move very shortly that the committee rise, with a view of limiting debate.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, [Mr. DISNEY, in the chair.]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to take up the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. H. said: Mr. Chairman, I am too unwell to occupy much time this morning, but even if I were not I would not do so. There are some three or four important amendments made by the Senate to this bill, to which I would direct a few moments attention.

The first amendment made to this bill by the Senate is to insert a provision on page five of the original bill, which I will read:

"At the end of line twelve insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to examine the reservation claims of the Choctaws, known as the Bay Indians, and of those Choctaws in whose cases the scrip awarded by the late Board of Commissioners has not been issued; and where he shall find that such Indians are clearly entitled to land under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, and under the several acts heretofore passed in relation to such claims, he is hereby authorized to extend to such claimants the provisions applicable to such claims in the acts of the 23d August, 1842, and of the 3d March, 1845.

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriations heretofore made for removing the Choctaw Indians from Mississippi as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

There are two classes embraced in this amendment—one of them contains about sixty-five or seventy cases, and the other probably a little under forty. About one hundred cases are embraced in the amendment. In 1830, a treaty was made with the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, and in that treaty the Indians have signified their disposition, or intention rather, to remain in the country; and were entitled, under the provisions of that treaty, to certain portions of land upon which they lived. That treaty has been fulfilled, it is said, with the exception of these cases, embracing about one hundred. The Committee of Ways and Means, in its examination of this amendment, learned from the Department—the papers I have with me in my drawer—that one branch of these cases consists of sixty or seventy claims of persons whose cases were not in the second application acted upon by the commissioners. The commissioners who were appointed by the Government to go out to Mississippi and award to each of the reservees, who had signified their intention under the provisions of the treaty to remain there, their reservations, in the first instance decided against these sixty-seven cases. But, at the expiration of the time of existence of the Board of Commissioners, the applicants in these cases, some if not all of them, renewed their testimony. That renewed testimony was submitted to the Board of Commissioners, and, I believe, in this instance, but two days before the expiration of the board; and the commissioners report that, under the press of business at that time, they could not act upon the claims. The Committee of Ways and Means were of opinion, and so instructed me to recommend to the House, that the provisions of this treaty having been kept open so long, and having been opened so much, and these things having been adjudicated adversely to the claimants once, and their additional testimony only filed two days before the expiration of the existence of the board, that it was inexpedient to reopen the provisions of that treaty again. I believe I have stated fully the points bearing upon this branch of the case, and in a very short and succinct manner.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to read to the committee what the report of that commission was.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have myself the report of the commissioners, and I have stated precisely what was contained in it. The Indians embraced in the class to which I have directed a moment's attention, were decided against upon point of fact. It was said, and indeed the Indians admitted it, that they had left Mississippi; but they alleged that they had left under a compulsion on the part of their agents, and others, who had influence over them. The case was submitted to the commissioners, therefore, upon a point of fact, and the commissioners, in the first instance, decided the fact against the applicants. The applicants then renewed their testimony, and it has never been decided upon.

I am satisfied that the gentleman from Mississiippi will agree with me that these are the facts of the case.

Mr. FREEMAN. They left their own ground—the ceded territory—but not the State of Mississippi, under a misapprehension of their rights, and under compulsion.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is what I have said.

Mr. FREEMAN. You said that they left the State of Mississippi.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that they left the State.

Mr. FREEMAN. Well, sir, that is not an important point, I suppose; but I hope the committee will listen to me for one moment, because I am certain that this House has no desire to do injustice to any part of the Indians heretofore existing in the State of Mississippi. The treaty with those Indians has certainly been of great benefit to the nation, and it is no part of the policy of this Government to do injustice to the small remnant now seeking their rights at the hands of this House. The Indian commission, which went out to Mississippi—it may not be remembered by all, but it will be by some—had great difficulties among themselves, and some of these commissioners were finally removed, and others appointed in their places. For a long period of time, while that commission was in session, it was wholly impossible, for the quarrels existing between the commissioners, for anybody to do business before them. Finally, when the time to which they were limited in the examination of these cases expired, there was still this class of cases pending before them. The testimony had all been taken. The Indians themselves had gone to the expense of proving their claim.

That testimony was all before the commissioners. But for want of time, in consequence of the statute limiting those commissioners to a particular period, they were unable to adjudicate upon all the evidence which was before them. That evidence is now on file in the Department of the Secretary of the Interior; and all that we ask is, that the Indians shall have that hearing before the Secretary of the Interior, which they were entitled to have before the commissioners. That is all we ask of this House. The Senate has inserted an amendment for that purpose in this bill, and I put it to every man here whether he will vote against the amendment for the purpose of doing justice to this small class of Indians. What is the argument which the Committee of Ways and Means bring forward against this amendment? Why, they say the commission was in existence so long that we have concluded not to reopen the matter again. Is not that an argumentative and christian answer to the appeal of the poor Indian for his homestead! I hope this House will turn a deaf ear to an argument of that character, and I trust they will now listen to the words of the commissioners themselves, which I propose to read.

Extract from the final report of the commissioners, of the 16th of June, 1845, to the President of the United States:

"Sixty-seven (67) cases of other Choctaws, claimants from the Bay of St. Louis, in Hancock and Harrison counties, in the State of Mississippi, and known as the 'Bay Indian claimants,' are also herewith transmitted to the War Department, unadjudicated by the commissioners. These claims received a special notice by the undersigned in their report to the President of the 18th of last December, already referred to, the substance of which special notice was, that these 'Bay Indians' had, by their admission, left the ceded country within five years from the date of the treaty; that they alleged and endeavored to prove this departure was compulsory on their part; that their agents agreed to file special evidence in these cases, with an understanding on their part, as well as on the part of the commissioners, and so expressed in their report aforesaid; that no judgment could, under the circumstances, be rendered; and that they should be reported to the President for such action as he should deem best for the assuring of ultimate justice to them, and this recommendation was so expressed in their report.

"Since then, and within the last few days, additional testimony has been filed with this board in relation to these claims; and one of the agents, E. B. W. Kirksey, Esq., of Mississippi, here representing them, applied through their counsel, A. B. Meek, Esq., of Alabama, and Henry J. Martin, Esq., of Mississippi, for the definite and final adjudication of the board upon them. From the late period at which the application was made and argued, (there remaining of the time but two days of the legal existence of the board for the investigation of the regularity of these claims,) and the decision of the important question of fact, as to the compulsory or voluntary abandonment of their country by the claimants, the commissioners decided, that in the pressure of other business, equally claiming their regard, there was not sufficient time for a rightful and just final determination of these claims, and as, in their former report, they are again respectfully referred to the President for such remedial action as he may deem expedient and just towards them."

The additional testimony above referred to was taken under a commission from the board, on interrogatories filed by the attorney of these claimants and cross-interrogatories filed by the Board, and the motion demanding definite action was made as soon as that testimony was returned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is the official evidence. Here is the confession of the Government. The only question on which these claims are to be repudiated and rejected is, whether or not these Indians left the ceded territory before the time prescribed by the treaty, by compulsion or voluntarily. The evidence is, that they left by compulsion. Now, I ask every humane man in this House, does it make any difference in honor or justice at what time they left? I ask any gentleman whether, because these Indians, ignorant as we know them to be, have left the grounds which they were entitled to, according to the admission of this Government, before the time prescribed, it follows that we ought to swindle them out of the small tracts of land which are justly due to them? Is that the persuasive argument that is to be put up here by the Committee of Ways and Means? Are those the ways and means by which this Government is to do justice to a race of friendly Indians, whose misfortunes are their only faults? I hope to hear no argument of that nature addressed to the conscience of this House; and, sir, what is the question of the administration of justice to the Indians, but one of conscience? We have wrested from them all the power which they ever possessed. They are but orphans in our charge; and here, when they have been at the expense of taking all the evidence necessary to sustain their claim—when they simply come before you, and ask that the Secretary of the Interior shall pass upon their claim the same judgment which would be willingly granted to any white citizen of the United States—when the American Senate, considering these things, have put this amendment in the bill—the Committee of Ways and Means have graciously taken the matter into consideration, and concluded that they could not allow the investigation to go on, for fear a little more land would be allowed to the poor Indians.

Sir, this is a policy which I trust this House will not consent to. Let the Indian be heard. Who will condemn him without reading his testimony?

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot yield to my friend from Mississippi any longer, as I do not desire to consume much of the time of the committee. The gentleman has read an extract from the report of the commissioners, and I flatter myself that the committee has seen that it establishes precisely the state of facts that I presented. It is acknowledged that the Indians left the ceded country before the five years had expired, and for that reason have forfeited any right that they might otherwise have been entitled to. They have attempted to establish the fact, by proof, that their departure was not voluntary. Well, if they had established that fact, if they had satisfied the Board of Commissioners that such was the fact, as a matter of course that board would have decided in their favor; but, on account of the fact that the proof did not make out that case, their claim was decided against.

Mr. FREEMAN. The commissioners do not say that. They say that they had not time to decide upon the testimony.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will just hold still, I will come to that part directly. I said before, that the commissioners say they had not time, but upon the first investigation of this case, I state that the commissioners did not report in favor of these claims. I understand, from reading the report of these commissioners themselves, that such is the case. If not, why did they not report in favor of the Indians? If the proof was made out by the parties, why did not the commissioners report in favor of the claim? The conclusion is, that the proof did not make out the case, and the gentleman cannot escape that conclusion. The commissioners decided in the first instance against this claim.

Mr. FREEMAN. The commissioners state themselves, in their report, that they made a point against the Indians that they had left their grounds too early. What was the policy of that treaty?

It was to drive them away from the State of Mississippi. I state the fact that that technical point was made against them, and the Indians had no right to anticipate that it would be made when it was made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where do the commissioners state that?

Mr. FREEMAN. They state in their own report, that they made that point by which the Indians were taken by surprise, and the moment they had an opportunity to rebut that presumption they offered testimony, and all they now ask is, a judgment upon that testimony.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not know that the commissioners had stated that they had made a technical point which had taken the Indians by surprise.

Mr. FREEMAN. I have stated what the point made was, and any lawyer can see that it was a technical one.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would not, if I could, present an improper view of this to the House. I would not do it if I could. I am not here to advocate or defeat the claim of the Indians. I am here to present the facts of the case, as I understand them, for the consideration of the House, and if I present them improperly, or if the inferences I make from the facts be improper, the House can correct them. I have no feeling in defeating the Indians at all. None whatever. I repeat, as I stated before, that as I understand the reading of that report, the question of fact presented to the Board of Commissioners was, whether the Indians had failed to bring themselves within the provisions of the treaty by remaining on the ceded territory for a longer time than was required by the articles of the treaty. Because that fact was not established and proved, the Board of Commissioners decided the case against them. Well, they go on then to say, that an argument of counsel was made before the Board of Commissioners two days before the expiration of its existence in favor of this claim, and then it was that they decided, that from the press of other business they could not decide upon this claim at that time. So that the renewed testimony, the additional proof, has never been decided upon by the Board of Commissioners.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is policy, or desirable for this House or Congress to reopen all these cases, why, then, let them do so; but it occurs to me that there ought to be an end to these investigations somewhere. If, however, it is the pleasure of Congress to reopen these cases, let another board be created to pass upon them, and not take the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or the Secretary of the Interior, who, as a matter of course, I presume, would be controlled by the head of the Indian Bureau, who has already decided in favor of most of them.

Mr. FREEMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has already decided in favor of these claims?

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that he has recommended some of them.

Mr. FREEMAN. I hope the House will hear that remark, that the proper Departments of the Government have decided in favor of these claims.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not here to conceal any part of the case, and I have no desire to do so. I am here to present the facts of the matter without concealment.

The other branch of the amendment is this: There were thirty-seven cases, which were adjudicated by the Board of Commissioners, and adjudicated favorably. The Board of Commissioners passed upon the testimony in pursuance of law, and reported the whole case, with the testimony, to the head of the Indian Office here. The reason why the land scrip is not issued in pursuance with this award—for the award was favorable in all these thirty-seven cases—is, that, in pursuance of the revisory power which existed in the head of the Indian Office in this city, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs overruled the decision of the Board of Commissioners upon the ground that the cases were not made out.

Now, there is the whole case presented to this committee. I have not a particle of feeling in relation to the matter. If I have any feeling at all, it is in favor of the Indians. If I knew that this or any other appropriation claimed by the Indians went into the pockets of the Indians alone, I would never resist a claim which was even doubtful. I would not resist a claim, although I thought there was a doubt if that claim was likely to be applied for the benefit of the Indians themselves. My whole sympathies and feelings are for these Indians.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask my friend from Alabama if he does not know that there is a law now in existence, which was passed as a section of the deficiency bill, providing that all moneys which are due to the Indians shall not go to anybody else than the Indians to whom they may be due? Does he not know that that is the case?

Mr. HOUSTON. That provision was passed in the deficiency bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the law, then. Now, I ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is just, fair, or right to throw out the imputation that the Indians alone do not get the money, but that the agents get it—and we thus justify ourselves for refusing to allow a just claim of these Indians? I say it is unkind to throw out such an imputation.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman did not understand the effect of my remarks, or he would not have intimated that I had thrown out any imputation to prevent these Indians from getting their just dues. I said—as every gentleman who heard me will bear witness—that my feelings were with these Indians, and that if I were satisfied the money would go for the benefit of the Indians, I would not resist any appropriation they were seeking for, if there was a doubt about the justice of that appropriation. I was not endeavoring to prejudice this case, or any other case.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I want to discuss this question presently. I desire now, however, to say to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] that from the colloquy between him and my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] the impression was doubtless produced upon the minds of those who were listening, that these Indians were seeking a compensation in money and not in land.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, nobody believes that.

Mr. BROWN. Well, it sounded very much like it over here.

Mr. HOUSTON. I had read the amendment in which it is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon the testimony now on file, and if he believes the cases are fairly made out, within the law, he shall issue scrip in cases where it has not already been awarded. That is what they ask for. I will have the amendment again read, if it is necessary; but I apprehend it is not. I take it for granted that my friend from Mississippi is mistaken.

Mr. BROWN here made a remark, which was not heard by the Reporter.

Mr. HOUSTON continued. The proposition is to give them land scrip according to the provisions of the law of 1842 and 1845.

The second branch of this amendment embraces a claim which has been examined by the other members of the committee more particularly than by myself, and being rather indispensed, I prefer to pass over it, with the hope that it will be explained by the other members of the committee.

The fourth amendment is one in which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] is concerned. It is one which has been substituted for one adopted by the House, at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana. As it is a long one, I will not ask to have it read, but will merely state the substance of it. Under three treaties between the Eel River Indians and the Government of the United States, they were entitled to about $1,100 a year; but for twelve or fourteen years, or thereabouts, they have not drawn the money, for the reason, as I understand it, that the Government of the United States had lost sight of this tribe. After examination, it was ascertained that the moneys due to the Eel River Indians had been paid over to the Miami nation. It was ascertained that it had been paid to the wrong tribe. Within the last two or three years, my friend from Indiana was appointed to investigate into that matter, and he reports that there are some sixteen Eel River Indians still in existence, and therefore it becomes the duty of the Government not only to pay to these Indians the annuities to which they are now entitled, but one amendment or provision to the bill, inserted at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana, that the money which had been erroneously paid to the Miami Indians, should be taken out of the annuities of that tribe and refunded to the Eel River Indians, who were really entitled to it. The Senate have stricken out this provision, and have inserted an amendment of this sort: That the Government of the United States shall pay to the Eel River Indians, $15,000—which is about $1,200 more than they are entitled to—out of the Treasury of the United States, and to allow the Miami Indians what has been erroneously paid to them; and that the Eel River Indians shall, in consideration of these $15,000, relinquish to the Government of the United States all claim for further annuities.

There were two points presented in this provision of the bill as it went from the House. The Indian Office was really to take from the annuities of the Miami Indians an amount sufficient to reimburse the Eel River Indians for the annuities which have been erroneously paid to the Miamies. That is one point. In the Senate's amendment, they propose to let the Miamies keep what they have got, and that the Government of the United States shall pay to the Eel River Indians what has been wrongfully paid to the Miamies. The other point is this: In this provision in the original bill there was nothing to provide for stopping the annuities of the Eel River Indians. But the Senate proposed in their amendment that in consideration of $15,000 no more annuities should be given to that tribe hereafter. Now, in examining the question, the Committee of Ways and Means came to the conclusion to recommend a concurrence in that amendment. They have two or three reasons for coming to that conclusion, which I will briefly give. They were these: The tribe of Eel River Indians have dwindled down till there are but sixteen left. Indeed, one Senator stated in debate that two of these have since died, which would reduce the number to fourteen.

Mr. FITCH. There are still sixteen left.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well. The gentleman from Indiana says there are sixteen still in existence. The Senate have taken the ground, and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence, that when a tribe of Indians have become reduced by death or otherwise so as to leave a mere handful—so as to leave so small a number that if the Government were acting with them originally, they would not treat with them as a nation, but as Indians, generally and distinctly—then it is competent for the Government to refuse to treat with them further as a nation, and to stop all further annuities, or to stipulate for further annuities with them as individuals. I presume it will hardly be denied by any one that the Government of the United States ought not to continue to pay annuities to tribes of Indians as tribes when they have been cut down to half a dozen, or to fifteen or twenty. It seems to me that is a point where these annuities should cease. But they should not be made to cease until the Indian shall have had some sort of notice of the intention of the Government.

If terms could be made, I believe myself that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] had better be retained in the bill; but I fear there will be a difficulty upon the part of these Miami Indians in carrying out this provision. It may be difficult to make them understand why we take annually from their annuities, a sum sufficient to refund to the Eel River Indians the amount which has erroneously been paid to them.

Mr. FITCH. The Miami Indians knew they were getting other people's money.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend from Indiana says they knew well enough that they were getting other people's money. If they did, they ought to be made to pay it back. These are the facts of the case. I submit them to the committee, and they can take such action upon them as they may think proper.

Another amendment which the Senate have made to this bill, is to strike out a provision inserted by the House of $221,000, for the Menomonee Indians, and to insert a provision appropriating $25,000 for their removal to some point the Government may select. The Committee of Ways and Means, upon an examination of the whole question, have instructed me to report to the House a recommendation that they concur in the action of the Senate, and for various reasons, one or two of which I will now allude to. In the first place, the claim of the Menomonee Indians was substantially, as I understand, founded upon two grounds; first, that the commissioners who treated with them, defrauded them; and second, that there was a mistake in the treaty, as to the amount of land; and because of that mistake, the treaty ought to be reopened, and they compensated for the amount of land they had transferred.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. I desire to ask my colleague whether it is proposed to remove these Indians to a portion of the country almost entirely destitute of game? I think this a matter which should be considered before the House act upon the question. I am credibly informed by officers who have lately come from that portion of country, that we propose to put these Indians upon land, where they have not even the last recourse of the poor Indian—the taking of game for their support—and I think our whole legislation is wrong upon this subject.

Mr. HOUSTON. My colleague, if he will notice my remarks, will discover, that I have not yet reached the amendment to which he alludes, and to which he directed his remarks.

This case, as I before remarked, depends, so far as I understand it, upon two grounds. The one is, that the commissioners who treated with them had practiced a fraud upon them. That ground is not, I think, sustainable from the proof. I have looked into the case pretty extensively, and I am satisfied that while that allegation is made, and to a very limited extent, sustained by some proof, yet the preponderance of proper testimony, in my view of the case, is decidedly in favor of the hypothesis that the commissioners who treated acted fairly with them, and committed no fraud.

And even, Mr. Chairman, supposing the commissioners did commit a fraud, is this the proper way, the proper time to investigate that subject, while we have under consideration an appropriation bill? Ought not that subject to be brought up in a manner in which it can be investigated, and when those who are disposed to establish the fact that the commissioners did, or, on the contrary, those who are disposed to prove that the commissioners did not commit a fraud, may each have the opportunity of fully investigating the subject, and presenting it to Congress and to the country? But I presume that ground will be abandoned.

Then the only ground is, that more land was obtained by the Government than the Indians supposed they were transferring. I think, Mr. Chairman, that very probably is the case. But admit for a moment, if you please, that the Government of the United States did get more land than was in the eye of the Indians, or in the eye of the Government, at the time of the transaction, the treaty itself conveys all the lands which the Indians owned there. The proposition is now made that we shall reopen that treaty, for the reason that they were not advised of the number of acres of land they had, and because the Government of the United States got more land for the same consideration than they supposed they were getting, and that, therefore, it becomes necessary to go over the matter again.

Now, I lay down this position for the consideration of the committee, and to which I desire their attention—that if we establish that as a good ground for opening our Indian treaties, we have probably not one treaty that would hold against the same sort of argument. The most of our Indian treaties are made in an irregular, and, to some extent, a loose manner. The country is not usually surveyed, and it is not the case that we ascertain the precise number of acres, as is the case where individuals are treating with each other. We do not so treat with them.

There is another objection which has been urged with great force in the Senate of the United States against this appropriation; and it is, that the Indians are not now in a condition to receive this money, and that if it were put into their hands while they are now upon lands to which they are not entitled, and upon which they have no right to remain except as tenants at will, it would all be taken from them by the white persons who trade amongst them, in one way or another.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, (interrupting.) My colleague has not yet answered the question which I wish this House to consider—that is, what is the kind of land which is given to these Indians? That is the question I want considered, as a matter of justice. We have the power over these Indians, and we know we have the power, and we ought to give them land upon which they can get a subsistence.

Mr. HOUSTON. The proposition, as I was going on to remark, that the Senate has submitted, is, that we shall appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of removing these Indians to some point they may select as agreeable to themselves, as their homes upon the public lands of the United States, where they may be subsisted until they can commence drawing their annuity. And then the whole tenor of the argument of the Senators was, that while they were willing to make a donation under the circumstances, and at this period of the existence of the tribe, if it was thought advisable, yet that it ought not to be upon the ground of mistake in the treaty.

The next amendment, and the only remaining one that I shall address myself to now, is one striking out from the bill as it went from this House, a provision appropriating some $60,000 to the Shawnee Indians.

That appropriation is claimed by the Indians upon the ground, that under the treaty of 1831 the Government of the United States had bound itself to give them 100,000 acres of land. They allege that the land has not been set apart to them. The facts, as I understand them, are these: I believe it is admitted that the Shawnee Indians of Missouri, and the Shawnees of Ohio, are parts of the same tribe. The policy of the Government of the United States was, as I understand it, that these two branches of the same tribe should be again consolidated and amalgamated, that they might be reunited and live in harmony together.

In 1825, the Government of the United States treated with the Missouri Shawnees, by which the Government obtained from them their tract of land in Missouri, which was twenty-five miles square, and in lieu of that land the Government stipulated with that part of the tribe, as follows:

"It is hereby agreed by the contracting parties that, in consideration of the cession aforesaid, the United States do hereby agree to give to the Shawnee tribe of Indians, within the State of Missouri, for themselves, and for those of the same nation now residing in Ohio, who hereafter may emigrate to the west of the Mississippi, a tract of land equal to fifty miles square, situated in the State of Missouri," &c.

In 1831, the Government held a treaty with the Ohio Shawnees, in which it stipulated, in consideration of the cessions made by that treaty, to lay off one hundred thousand acres of land, and give to the Ohio Shawnees a patent in fee-simple for it, within the fifty miles square that had been agreed to be given to the Missouri Shawnees, in connection with the Ohio Shawnees, for them to have so long as they remained a nation and thought fit to live upon it; provided so much good land could be had within the fifty miles square to make one hundred thousand acres. If they could not get it within the fifty miles square, they were to get it from lands contiguous to it, or from any other unappropriated and unoccupied Indian lands belonging to the United States.

The question here presented is this: the Ohio Shawnees claim that, by the treaty of 1825, the Government of the United States parted with their title to the fifty miles square, upon which it located the Missouri Shawnees. They contend that the Government conveyed to the Missouri Shawnees and to the Ohio Shawnees jointly the fifty miles square, and therefore that this stipulation in the treaty of 1831, by which we agreed to give them one hundred thousand acres of the fifty miles square was not a consideration for the cession they made, as the Government of the United States had parted with the whole title to the fifty miles square.

I disagree, Mr. Chairman, with gentlemen who take that view of the case. I construe the treaty of 1825 in this way: The Government of the United States, in pursuance of this admitted policy of reuniting the entire tribe of Shawnee Indians, and in pursuance of the request of the Indians themselves, determined to put them upon the fifty miles square, which it had agreed to lay off, and did lay off, for the Indians.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, (interrupting.) I desire to ask my colleague a question. This is an important matter to men who are disposed to do justice. I wish to ask my colleague what kind of land to which he wishes to send these Indians? I wish that question answered and considered by this House, because we are now doing great injustice to these poor miserable remnants of humanity.

Mr. HOUSTON. I regret that I am interrupted in this improper manner in these disconnected remarks I am submitting to the committee. I was going on to state what I regarded to be the true construction of the treaty of 1825. It was this: that in pursuance of the policy of the Government, which the Indians themselves had requested to be pursued, the Government of the United States determined to locate both branches of the Shawnee tribe of Indians in the same region of country, and thus reunite them. Hence, we find in the treaty of 1825 that the United States agreed to give fifty miles square of land to the Missouri Shawnees, and to those of Ohio who might afterwards emigrate to it. The Government did not part with the entire fifty miles square, but it was in the nature of a reservation on the part of the Government to locate within that particular country both bands of the Shawnee tribe. I construed then that treaty as not parting with the right absolutely on the part of the Government, but as in pursuance of its policy. It is admitted that the intention was to locate both branches of the tribe there, and that in the treaty of 1825 the right was reserved to locate the Ohio Shawnees there, in the event they were willing to emigrate. I will not say that it reserved the right to any particular character of country, or any particular 100,000 acres of country. That is a matter left to be decided by the committee. The Missouri Indians were removed in 1826-'28, and in 1832 the Ohio Shawnees were removed to the same place. There was no application, or at least there are contradictory statements upon that subject. I understand recently that a statement has been made in a petition or paper of some sort, before the Senate, that the Ohio Shawnees applied to the Government to lay off 100,000 acres of land, previous to 1844. The gentleman who has the management of this case—and I speak of him with all proper respect as a gentleman of intelligence, and who understands this matter thoroughly—in his presentation of the case says, that in 1844 application was made for a title, and that the then Indian Department decided they were not entitled to a patent, or would not give them a separate patent. That was issued, and the Indians are now living upon it. They have been there some twenty years, and if in 1844 the first application was made, it was some twelve years before they ever applied to have 100,000 acres set apart for themselves. Now, as I said before, if these Indians desire to have their 100,000 acres set apart, I believe the Government has the right to comply with their wish under these treaties and give a patent for the land. If it has not, the treaties provide that they shall have it contiguous, and there are vacant Indian lands contiguous. If, however, the contiguous Indian lands are not fit to locate these Indians upon, the treaty provides that they shall be located upon any of the Indian lands of the United States. I have no conclusive proof before me satisfactory as to the character of the land that is contiguous to the fifty miles square. If I were satisfied that the land was unsuitable, I should be unwilling to locate them upon it. I would be opposed to forcing the Indians to take land that would not afford them a subsistence. Under these circumstances the Committee of Ways and Means of this House have also recommended a concurrence in that amendment of the Senate. This is all I have to say at present.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Chairman, I intend to briefly discuss a few of the amendments of the Senate to the bill now under consideration. As I do not trouble the committee often, and then usually on business before them, I ask their attention on the present occasion, because it is rather embarrassing to speak to inattentive ears. I desire to convince them of the correctness of my views upon these amendments, or, at least, if they be not correct, I cannot ask, nor do I desire their support. If they be correct, I am certain the committee will thank me for convincing them of that fact, so that they may not do injustice by voting without a proper understanding of the whole facts of the case. I shall first address myself to the Eel River amendment. It will be recollected by members of the last Congress, and I will briefly repeat, for the benefit of those who were not then members, that when the appropriation in the regular Indian bill for the payment of the annuities of the Eel River Indians came up, I questioned the existence of such a tribe, and expressed my reasons for believing in their non-existence. A few years previous to that I had known nearly all of them in my professional capacity, but they had disappeared from my eye. I supposed that they had amalgamated with some other band, or that a feud which existed between them and another band, had resulted in the death of the Eel Rivers, as I knew it had in the death of their chief. I then moved, and it was adopted, the insertion of a proviso into the Eel River appropriation, that the money should not be paid unless the existence of that band was previously ascertained, and then to that band, and that band only; for I was convinced that the money was paid somewhere, and wrongfully, as I found the appropriation made regularly year after year. In accordance with that proviso, the Department took steps to ascertain whether such a band was in existence. The result of that investigation was, that that band, although diminished in number—there only surviving sixteen individuals—was yet in existence as a distinct and independent band of Indians upon their own land, recognizing among themselves their own social laws, and having no intercourse with any other band, and very little with the surrounding whites. Their number, though so small, was considerable compared with their strength when we last treated with them. The band within the knowledge of the whites was always small.

In the first treaty—that of 1795—by which we obligated ourselves to pay them forever a portion of this annuity, they were represented by only one man, who was their chief; and they then numbered not far from one hundred individuals. In the second treaty of 1805, by which we obligated ourselves to pay them another portion of this annuity, they were represented by only three individuals, and they then mustered less than one hundred in all—scarcely fifty. In 1809, when at the last treaty we promised to pay them the last portion of this annuity, and forever without any restriction as to their number, they were represented by three individuals; and then they only numbered about fifty persons. Of that fifty we purchased a territory as valuable as any other portion of my State—a territory from which the records of the Land Office will show we have derived more than these annuities will probably ever amount to. In consequence of the provision I have alluded to, the annuity for two years past, has been retained in the Treasury; but after the Department became convinced of the fact that the band was still in existence, I moved the amendment to this bill which was stricken out by the Senate. The amendment, as will be recollected, provided that the moneys previously paid to the Miamies proper by mistake—and it had been thus paid for ten or twelve years instead of to the Eel Rivers—should be refunded to the Eel Rivers. The Eel Rivers remonstrated, as the files of the Department will show, against the payment of their money to the Miamies; but that remonstrance was not attended to. The money was thus diverted with the knowledge of the Miamies. They are mostly intelligent men, and knew they were receiving the money of others. It was in accordance with the views of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the amendment, which the Senate have stricken out, was inserted, providing that the moneys heretofore erroneously paid to the Miamies should be refunded out of their annuities. What just ground of objection is there against taking it from those to whom it was erroneously paid to pay those who were entitled to it? The Miami nation number but few. There are some four or five hundred, or less, in the tribe, and they received $37,000 annually, some $10,000 or $11,000 belonging to the Eel Rivers having been paid them besides.

The Senate amendment proposes to pay the Eel Rivers what is due to them, but only upon the condition that they will first bind themselves to release the United States from any further obligation to pay these annuities. The Senate propose to hire these Indians, with their own money, to relinquish the rights they hold under treaty stipulations, and which we have solemnly guaranteed them forever. Is this a proper specimen of United States magnanimity—of Senatorial justice? They propose to pay the Indians $15,000, acknowledged to be due without any condition, but only on the condition that the latter release us from the payment of further sums equally as justly due by treaty. Doubtless this committee wish to see justice done. If the House of Representatives shall insert a provision in their own amendment that at a certain time the payment of this annuity shall cease because this band of Indians is reduced in number, I will urge no strenuous objection; but my hand shall pen no such amendment, nor would a sense of justice permit me to give it my support. If the committee wish to do it, they can; but let them not say to the Indians that they shall receive nothing of what is due them unless they obligate themselves to relieve this Government from any further claim. Rather let there be inserted a provision that within three or four years the payment of their annuities shall cease. These Indians will then have fair warning of the injustice intended them, and their necessities not made available to compel their consent to our violation of treaties.

Another exceptionable part of the Senate amendment is this: By the investigation which ascertained the existence of this tribe, it was found that two women of the Eel River band had intermarried with Miamies, and moved west of the Missouri, and were the mothers of children—three in all.

They have thus by intermarriage and by adoption become Miamies, and draw their annuity as such. By the Senate amendment they would become the recipients of a portion of the Eel River annuities, thus giving double pay to them—once as Miamies, and once as Eel Rivers. I do not propose to consume the time of the committee in reading the treaties by which we obligated ourselves to pay these annuities. It is sufficient to say that the treaties are in the usual form, and obligate the United States for a valuable consideration; the receipt of which is acknowledged to pay the Eel River Indians a certain amount of money, the aggregate by the three treaties, amounting to $11,000 per annum, and that this money has been illegally paid to the Miamies. We propose to refund for benefit of the Eel Rivers the money thus wrongfully paid, from the Miami annuities, in such manner as shall not distress the latter, and in sums at the discretion of the Department. I know no good reason why the money should be paid out of the United States Treasury without reimbursement from the Miamies. If there is such reason, the Department knows, and will act upon it under the discretion permitted by the amendment. I was very glad to hear the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. Houston] say that he believed my amendment was a just one so far as the Government was concerned, and his sole objection for coinciding with the amendment of the Senate was that the payment of the money out of the Miami annuities might create dissatisfaction on their part. I have already remarked that the men of the latter nation were intelligent. They must have known they were receiving money which did not belong to them, and they cannot expect otherwise than that they will be asked to repay it. At all events, any hardship which may result to them, or any dissatisfaction which may be entertained by them, can be obviated under the discretion left the Department by the amendment. I trust, therefore, that the committee and House will insist upon our amendment. It is more just to the United States, and it is the only shape in which an amendment can be adopted to do justice to the Eel Rivers, and the other Indians concerned.

I pass next to another amendment, which was introduced by myself, from the Indian Committee, and adopted at my suggestion, but which the Senate committee have stricken out, and to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] alluded during his remarks. I mean the amendment appropriating $221,000 to the Menomonees, for additional compensation for land purchased of them. I do not propose to go back and repeat the discussion previously had upon this subject. I take it for granted that those who listened then know precisely the facts and circumstances attending upon the treaty. It is sufficient to repeat the fact known to the House, and admitted in the Senate by almost every individual who spoke upon the subject, that we purchased of the Menomonees 5,000,000 acres of valuable land, and paid them for but 3,000,000 acres. It is sufficient to repeat, that they were wronged out of several hundred thousand acres of land. Whether it was done through error or purposely is immaterial to the issue. The fact is still the same, that they were paid for only a certain number of acres, and induced to part with at least 2,000,000 acres for which they were not paid. The main facts, I say, are admitted in the Senate debate. Nearly every Senator who spoke upon the amendment admitted that a wrong was perpetrated upon the Indians, and that they ought to be compensated for it. Although they struck out the House amendment, they admitted the justice of the claim by inserting in lieu of it a provision appropriating $25,000 for the temporary removal of the Indians from the country they now occupy. This was not a gratuity, but a part of what the Senate thought to be due them as the difference between the price paid and the price due for their land. We are under no obligation, by treaty or otherwise, except as humanity may dictate, to give them one cent to defray the expenses of their removal; but, on the contrary, they are, by treaty, to remove themselves at their own expense. Yet the Senate inserted that provision of $25,000 for that purpose, and thereby they recognized the justice of this claim.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the arguments adduced against this House amendment. I shall not be deterred from urging what I believe and ascertain to be true, because of any clamor which may be created against it by side-issues. A clamor was raised against this claim, and several reasons urged against it in the Senate, most of which have been refuted by the action of the body to which they were presented. One reason was, that a portion of the money might be paid to an attorney, who had been prosecuting the claim before the Department. Even if so, it does not invalidate the claim. The chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate [Mr. Huxten] said frankly—and he is a frank and open-hearted man upon all occasions—that there was no attempt to conceal the attorney's interest; that the papers were all fair and honorable, and no undue influence used with the Indians. The papers were all made out with the knowledge of the Department and sanctioned by it. They were made out to enable the attorney to prosecute the claim before the Department. He did not bring the claim here; he has nothing to do with its presentation here. It was sent here by the Department, and that fact alone, if a further provision in this bill did not do it, if a provision in the deficiency bill did not do it, would have estopped him from receiving his fees, unless after the money came into the hands of the Indians they chose to pay him. I candidly acknowledge that I believe they would pay him a reasonable fee, for they are an honest people,—I am sorry to say, more honest than some of those who are thought to be, and ought to be, their guardians. Now, grant that the attorney was to receive a part of this money, what of that? We must all admit—the Senate has admitted by its $25,000 amendment—we have admitted by our votes, that unless it had been for the presentation of this claim, a wrong would have been perpetrated upon the Indians by the Government. We may thank the attorney, then, for bringing the subject to the notice of the Government, for if it had not been for his charge of the matter, the Department would have permitted the matter to rest where it was, and we should have remained ignorant or careless of the wrong we had perpetrated. We will not listen to the Indians in person, no matter how strong their appeals, or how just their claim, and thus compel them to employ an attorney; then make his employment the ground for refusing them justice.

But this objection of the attorney's interest is done away with, as I have already said, by a provision in the deficiency bill. And further, the provisions of this bill, the provisions in the very amendment as it was adopted by the House, would prevent payment to the attorney, as to any man or men other than to whom the President thought was just and proper. Yet certain representatives, I will not say at which end of the Capitol, assume that they are better guardians of the Indians, better know their wants and understand their interests than that officer who, by our laws, is made their chief guardian, and who can readily command all the information desirable in our intercourse with them. The amendment, as it was adopted in the House, expressly provides that the money shall be paid under the direction of the President only in such sums and at such times as he thinks the interests and wants of the Indians might require. Here, then, was sufficient protection for the Indians, all that can be asked or desired for them. He supervises the report of very bureau. Finding that a provision of law was left to be executed specially by himself, he would of course see that it was justly executed, and would not permit wrong to be done the Indians. He would be far less liable to do them injustice than we are, because having access to all the information in relation to them, he would take care to inform himself of their wants and interests. That we do not know.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to one source of clamor against this amendment. It was gravely announced to the Senate—and I desire the attention of the whole committee to this matter, as the character of one of its members is involved—that a certain member of the legislative department of the Government, who had once held a high office in Wisconsin, was interested in this claim. If this was true, it would have invalidated the claim, and doomed to political infamy the member thus accused. The Senate—and I speak in no ill feeling toward that body, for I have a high respect for its members individually, and for most of its action—have permitted what I am confident this House would never permit, if any Representative chose to rise in his seat and arraign the integrity of a member of the Senate. Every man would at once spring to his feet and demand the name of the individual. Every member would say that stigma should not rest upon the character of the Senators from his State. The Senate did not do this. The integrity and honor of a member of the House was permitted to be questioned, and no one man arose and asked, who is he?—leaving the imputation to go abroad resting upon the character of every and any one who has happened to hold office in Wisconsin or Iowa, for these two States were once one Territory. It is true that Senators understood the allusion. They understood that one of the Representatives from Wisconsin was meant. Well, grant that. Who knew it out of the Senate? Let that go forth, and the next question is, which one of these members was meant? It was the duty of the individual making the charge to designate the member. It was not done. We are left, then, to ascertain from previous circumstances at whom the charge was pointed. These circumstances happen to be easily ascertainable. It is known that the Hon. Mr. Doty, of this House, was the member alluded to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know my friend will appreciate my motives, when I call the attention of the Chair to the rule which prevents members of either House from commenting upon the speeches made in the other House.

Mr. FITCH. When the honor and integrity of a member of this House are commented upon and questioned at the other end of the Capitol, no point of order shall prevent my answering it, at least so far as it is connected with any legislative measure, coming from a committee of which I am a member, and which measure such comments have prejudiced. I speak of it, not only in justice to the House and the members from Wisconsin, but in defense of the House amendment under discussion. Now, with the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] I ask the Clerk to read certain letters upon this subject, one from the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Doty,] who I perceive is not in his seat—and who if he were would repeat upon the floor the substance of his letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remark, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, that it is a well-settled principle of parliamentary law, that it is not to be permitted to the members of one branch of a Legislature to allude even to the doings of the other branch of the Legislature, until officially communicated to it. The reason why the law was established, was that it should be observed for the better promotion of harmony between the two branches of the Legislature. But, at the same time, the Chair knows of no rule which would interdict or prohibit a member of one branch from replying to remarks made in the other branch, having special reference to the conduct and action of members of the body to which he belongs. On the contrary, every principle of natural law and justice accords such a right; and, in the opinion of the Chair, the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana are therefore in order.

Mr. FITCH. I must again repeat that I make these remarks with no ill feeling towards any member, and with no wish or intention to interfere in any difficulty with any of its members which does not relate to myself personally, or to express any opinion relative to such. I do it simply to obviate an injurious effect which the charge or assertion has, and otherwise might continue to exercise upon a legislative measure recommended by the Indian Bureau, and coming from the Indian Committee, of which I am a member. The Clerk will read the letters.

WASHINGTON, July 29, 1852.

DEAR SIR: While the item in the Indian appropriation bill proposing the allowance of a sum of money to the Menominee Indians was under consideration in the Senate, to-day, it was stated in debate, by Mr. WALKER, of Wisconsin, that in addition to what was to be paid me, as their attorney, a member of the legislative department of the Government was also to receive the sum of $30,000 of the amount allowed them. He stated, also, that the member to whom he referred had once held a responsible office in Wisconsin, and that his object in securing this payment to these Indians was not only to obtain the sum referred to, but to gratify his hatred of Colonel Medill, because that gentleman had charged him, in a speech made some years ago in the House of Representatives, with high crimes and misdemeanors, and to which he had yet made no reply.

I was employed by these Indians in the summer of 1850. The power of attorney under which I have since acted was executed in the office and in the presence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and his acknowledgment bears his attestation. I was then, have been ever since, and yet am, their sole attorney. Nobody else has ever had authority, since then, to act for them in the prosecution of this business; and nobody else has undertaken to exercise such authority. They came to me without any solicitation whatsoever upon my part, to seek protection against the sub-Indian agent who resided amongst them, and in whom they had no confidence, and spoke to me so fully and freely in reference to their business, that I am satisfied they would not have concealed the fact from me if they had employed any other person, or had wished to do so. I have not, since then, heard of any such employment, nor do I believe that any such was ever made, or that it could have been made without my knowledge.

I was a member of the House of Representatives at the time the speech referred to was made by Colonel Medill, and recollect that it had direct reference to yourself, you being then Governor of Wisconsin Territory. I presume, therefore, that Mr. WALKER referred to you. As I have never heard before of your having any such personal interest in the money to be paid these Indians, as was charged by him, I will be obliged to you to state whether or no you have, either directly or indirectly, any agreement or understanding with them to that effect? I need not inquire of you, whether you are to receive any portion of what they have agreed to allow me, for you very well know that not a single word in reference to any such thing ever passed between us.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. THOMPSON.

Hon. J. DUANE DOTY, House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, July 29, 1852.

DEAR SIR: This evening I have received your note in relation to remarks made to-day in the Senate by ISAAC P. WALKER, and which you suppose were intended by him to apply to myself. I have no doubt they were so intended; and therefore, after thanking you for your statement, beg leave to say in reply that his assertion that I am to receive $30,000 of the sum allowed by the amendment to the Menominee Indians, is grossly and unqualifiedly false, whether made by the Senator or by anybody else.

I should indeed be very sorry if this or any other fabulous statement by him, influenced the Senate in its decision upon the merits of this demand by the Indians for justice. I cannot believe it had, or the name of the "member of the legislative department" would have been demanded by some Senator present.

Mr. WALKER is equally unfortunate in his reference to the attack—also equally unfounded with his own—made upon me in 1841 or '42, by Mr. Medill. I replied fully and distinctly to his statements by a letter, a copy of which was sent to the Speaker of the House, and also published in the newspapers in Wisconsin. I have since then supposed he was satisfied he was mistaken; but with the reference lately made to him in the House I had nothing to do, nor do I think Mr. W. has anything to do with my former difference with Mr. Medill.

The charge made by Mr. WALKER would be unworthy of notice but for the place where it was uttered, and the effect it may possibly have upon the claim of a helpless people, now suing for justice. You are authorized, therefore, in any manner you may think best, to save them from the effects of this false and malignant charge, to use this letter or to make my denial public. It is very certain that no man worthy to be a Senator could have fabricated such a charge, or employed it for so base a purpose.

I remain, very respectfully and truly, yours,

JAMES DUANE DOTY.

R. W. THOMPSON, Esq.

Mr. FITCH. The letters would have been sent to the Senate to be read, but it was too late to remedy the wrong to the Menomonees inflicted by the charge to which they relate. The amendment of the House was defeated in the Senate mainly upon this side issue. For one, I am not disposed to see this done. If the Senate will meet it openly, and defeat it on the ground of want of merits, I am content. But if an unsustained side issue is got up, and on that issue, any action of the House in which I have aided is subverted here, or at the other end of the Capitol, I certainly shall not rest quietly under the decision.

The attorneyship I have already alluded to, and I hope I have answered that objection. No white man, call himself what he may, unless with the consent of the President, could obtain a dollar of this money. It is to be paid under the supervision of the President. The $25,000 proposed by the Senate for the removal of the Indians, is an acknowledgment of the debt, but a mockery of its payment. That amount would scarcely remove them to their new homes, much less feed them for any length of time after they reached there; for they number not hundreds, but thousands. It is somewhat singular that, notwithstanding their objection to the attorneyship, many of the Senators who voted against this amendment, and, perhaps, on that ground, themselves supported a provision proposed to be inserted in the bill, appropriating $60,000 to an attorney in another case, for services rendered to other Indians, thus recognizing and voting for the very principle which that body objected to in this case.

Again, they objected that perhaps the Indians would not receive the money, and that it is our duty to pay to them and to them only, all the money which is due them, under any and all circumstances. And yet, sir, they have inserted in this very bill, an appropriation of some $20,000 to Grignon, for services not proved, and to be paid out of a fund belonging to the Menomonees—an appropriation which the Senate had themselves stricken out of a treaty some years since, and which the House Committee on Indian Affairs have recently refused. But now they come forward, immediately after refusing to adopt the amendment of the House, on the ground that whites will receive part of the money, and appropriate $20,000 from the money of the same Indians as a bonus to a white man.

There is another amendment of the Senate, for the payment of a certain claim known as the Hart claim—a claim which has been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, and rejected—a claim which we did not believe to be just, and which, I trust, will not be allowed.

Another case to which I shall devote a little attention, is a claim that was originally introduced, in the shape of an amendment to this bill, by the gentleman on my right, [Mr. CONGER,] a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I am not aware that it was ever acted upon by that committee. It is an old claim for the payment to David Taylor of $12,000. It went to the Senate and was there amended by the addition of interest, and comes back providing for the payment of $24,000. The grounds upon which this claim stands, I will state as I understand it, with no disposition whatever to do injustice to the claimant. The papers in the case certainly ought to have been in a different shape from what they are now, before they were presented here, or the claim allowed upon them. It is a claim arising under a clause of the thirteenth article of the treaty of the 29th December, 1835, with the Cherokees. By that treaty, certain individuals, half-breeds, whites, and others, who were recognized as Cherokees, were permitted, if they possessed claims to land, to retain that land; their right to it was recognized. Taylor had such a claim. He was the husband of a Cherokee woman and the father of Cherokee children. But the State of Tennessee claimed the fee-simple in the land as soon as the Indian title was extinguished, and compelled Taylor to pay $800, the price of the land at the rate of $1 25 an acre. He did pay it, and presented to the commission appointed under that same treaty of 1835, his claim for this $800. As the Government had recognized his right to the land, that commission very properly allowed the claim of $800, and interest, the whole amounting to $1,500. That money was paid to him.

Subsequently, however, he presented a claim for compensation in full for the land and improvements, alleging that the State of Tennessee had dispossessed him. How could the State of Tennessee deprive him of land in which he had the fee-simple from the State itself, and for which he had once paid the State? I have seen no proof that he ever was dispossessed of his land, or at least that he did not sell it for his own benefit. A commission adjudicated that claim. Taylor came before them with his claim, and they passed upon it, and rejected it. An opinion of the Attorney General, Mr. Mason, is among the papers, stating that a certificate of valuation which Taylor had must be considered as final, and entitling him to the amount claimed. Throughout the opinion of Mr. Mason there is an error—not a legal error, (for I profess to be no judge of such,) but an error of fact. The treaty under which the claim is presented, provided that when a man presented a claim for land, or land and improvements, the value of the land should be ascertained, and a certificate of value given him. This certificate of value was not proof of the justice of the claim, but formed a part of its basis. The certificate of valuation given by the agent or agents appointed to appraise the value, was proof of nothing but the value. The treaty nowhere contemplates that such certificate shall be final. The only final certificate was to be that of the Board of Commissioners to investigate the claim. This board rejected the claim. Mr. Mason reasons upon the presumption that the certificate of valuation could not have been issued, unless the commissioners had previously adjudicated the claim, and allowed it. Here is the error. The certificate of valuation is dated September, 1843, and the adjudication at which the claim was rejected is dated December, 1844, showing the error into which Mr. Mason had fallen, and showing clearly that the certificate of valuation was obtained as a preliminary step to the adjudication. The claim was presented to the commission, and upon all the evidence before them, they declined allowing it; they declined issuing that which the treaty itself says shall be final—the certificate of adjudication. The claim may admit of explanation warranting its payment, but no such explanation have I seen—none at all satisfactory, and until such is produced, I trust the claim will not be allowed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will not detain the committee long, nor do I think I will attempt to debate any one of the cases to which I shall allude. The Shawnee case is one concerning which I wish to state a fact or too, to which I ask the attention of the committee.

We adopted an amendment in this House to the Indian bill originally reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, for the relief of the Shawnee Indians. The bill then went to the Senate, and the Shawnee amendment was stricken out by them. Now, sir, a very singular and remarkable circumstance occurred there—one that will satisfy the entire House that we ought never to concur in their amendment striking out that provision. It is a singular fact, that throughout the whole debate in the Senate, almost every Senator admitted that the specific amount claimed was due to these Indians, and that there was no doubt about that. The only question was, not whether we owed it to them, but as to the manner in which we should pay it—one portion of the Senate seeking to pay it on one set of conditions, and another portion of the Senate seeking to pay it on another set of conditions. Each different proposition failed—there being a small portion of the Senate opposed to both of them—and thus it was that the whole of the amendment put in by the House was defeated. But all parties were in favor of paying the claim. In this state of the case I shall not go into any argument to show the justice of the claim, more especially as I argued the matter somewhat at length when it was originally before the House. At the proper time I shall ask the House to refuse to concur in the amendment of the Senate striking out the Shawnee sections. I believe the Committee of Ways and Means have recommended that we should concur in the Senate's amendment. The Senate themselves, I imagine, could not have had any desire that we should concur, and our proper course would be to refuse to concur, and then a committee of conference can arrange the method in which the whole matter can be settled, and the Indians can get what is their due. I shall therefore ask the House to adhere to its original proposition, and refuse to concur in the motion of the Senate striking it out. That is all I have to say in regard to that case.

The Menomonee case I shall say nothing at all about. With regard to the Biloxi Bay Indian case, I shall attempt to make no argument on the subject. I am entirely and fully satisfied of the justice of the provision inserted by the Senate, and I hope that this House will concur in that amendment. I believe that the Committee of Ways and Means recommend the rejection of that amendment also. But I am, nevertheless, satisfied of the justice of the claim, and that no argument can be adduced against allowing it, unless it be, that, having failed to do justice for some twenty or thirty years, we ought therefore to refuse to do it for ever. That is the only argument which I can find for rejecting the case. But I will pass by this amendment without further remark.

I come now to another provision, inserted by the Senate, and in which the Committee of Ways and Means, I believe, have concurred. It is for the appropriation of a very small sum of money for the purpose of procuring, or for the purpose of making, a map of the Indian lands of the country, showing the various boundaries and localities of the different tribes of Indians. Now, there is not a map of that character in the possession of either the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, nor in the possession of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this House, or in the possession of any member of either committee; nor do I believe there is a member of either committee who could tell you, if you were to put him to the test, where our various tribes of Indians are located, or give you their boundaries, their connections, or the position in which they stand upon this continent, if they were to be hung for it on failure; and here we are legislating in the dark upon this subject. What they propose is, a small appropriation for the purpose of constructing a map showing the location of these Indians, so that we may legislate knowingly in relation to this subject so far as the locality of these Indians is concerned.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir. I say the Committee on Indian Affairs have no such maps; and I hope the House will concur in it, to increase the appropriation in the Senate amendment—it is only some two or three hundred dollars as it now stands—so as to embrace a like provision for maps for the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House as well as the Senate. I believe the committee in the House, as well as that in the Senate, should understand this subject, so that we may speak knowingly when we come before the House to advocate any particular policy. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is not averse to this amendment, nor are the Committee of Ways and Means, as I understand, seriously averse to it. It is a thing so palpably necessary to any intelligent action upon our part in relation to these measures, that I cannot for a moment believe this House will hesitate to adopt our amendment, and to concur in that of the Senate.

The next amendment to which I shall refer, is a new section which the Senate has added to the bill—section three. I ask that the House shall non-concur in this Senate amendment. I will read the section, so that the House may understand it fully, and then I will give them such information in relation to the matter as I am in the possession of. The object of the section is, without doubt, good, but is an object which has long since been accomplished as far as it can be in accordance with the best interests and prosperity of these Indians. It reads as follows:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several sums of money appropriated by this act to any Indian or Indians, shall be paid directly to the Indian or Indians entitled thereto, and not to any agent or attorney of said Indian or Indians, whether said attorney or agent may have been constituted by power of attorney, or otherwise; and that no person shall be appointed or continued as the agent of the Government to make any such payment who holds, or is interested in any contract with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act; and that before any person shall be allowed to make any such payment, or any disbursement of money herein appropriated, he shall take and subscribe to an oath before some competent authority, to be filed in the Department of the Interior, that he does not hold, and is not interested, either directly or indirectly, in any contract of any kind, with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act, and that he will not, during the continuance of his duty, become the holder of, or interested in, any such contract."

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say, in regard to this section of the bill, that when the Committee of Ways and Means had it before them, they examined what papers they had which were before the Senate. Since that time, however, I have read a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee of Indian Affairs, [Mr. JOHNSON.] It is a lengthy communication, which I suppose it is not intended should be read here now, in which there are cases set forth which are in conflict with that law, and which make the law in conflict with some of the provisions of treaties. I am, so far as I am concerned as one of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means, willing not to insist upon that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will allude, as I proceed, to the points where that law improperly conflicts. I do not know that it is necessary to read the letter just alluded to by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, but I will state that I have the letter before me, and that it may be examined by any member who desires. It is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in answer to a call made by myself in behalf of our Committee on the Indian Bureau, in relation to the effect of that section upon the Indian policy of the country. The letter is a most complete refutation of the wisdom and policy of adopting that section. I shall therefore protest against any such thing as retaining that section; and I hope that when this amendment comes regularly before the committee, the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will not have so much force as to induce the House to adopt it, inasmuch as they themselves were not in possession of the facts which I now have, and which, at the time they were compelled to act, I did not have myself to lay before them. That information is satisfactory, and, with these remarks, I submit the question.

Mr. ORR. We are likely to be pretty hard pressed for time. We have heard the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs on the subject of the amendments to this bill. I will therefore move that the committee rise, and that we go into the House with a view of terminating debate upon these amendments. Debate can then be continued under the five minutes rule, as usual in committee, sufficient to enable gentlemen to understand the several amendments. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. DISNEY) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate amendments to House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30th, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon House bill No. 43 shall cease in five minutes after the committee shall next have resumed its consideration, and if the committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion thereon, it shall proceed to vote upon such amendments as may be pending, or may be offered to the bill, and shall report the same to the House with such amendments as shall have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. MOLONY. I have two bills which have been on my hands for the last six months. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report them back from the Committee on Pensions, merely for the purpose of having them referred to the Committee of the Whole, to take their places on the Private Calendar.

There was no objection; and

Mr. MOLONY, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back the following bills, which were referred to a Committee of the Whole, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed, viz:

House bill No. 317, for the relief of Nathan H. Darling; and House bill No. 318, for the relief of Gilman Smith, of Sycamore, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. ORR. I move the previous question upon the passage of the resolution closing debate upon the Indian appropriation bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then put, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote just taken by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

(Mr. KING, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill.

The first Senate amendment was then reported by the Clerk, as follows:

"At the end of the clause providing for the interest on the amounts awarded the Choctaw claimants under the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, insert the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to examine the reservation claims of the Choctaws, known as 'Bay Indians;' and of those Choctaws in whose cases the scrip awarded by the late Board of Commissioners has not been issued, and where he shall find that such Indians are clearly entitled to land under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, and under the several acts heretofore passed in relation to such claims, he is hereby authorized to extend to such claimants the provisions applicable to such claims in the acts of the 23d of August, 1842, and the 3d of March, 1845."

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriation heretofore made for removing the Choctaw Indians from Mississippi, as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

Mr. DUNHAM addressed the committee in explanation and in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the reading of the whole amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. The first branch of the amendment only is now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. It is all one amendment, and unless a division is asked, a vote will be taken upon the whole amendment as it has been read.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask for a separate vote upon each branch of the amendment, the first division to end with the words "3d of March, 1845."

I concur, Mr. Chairman, with the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HOUSTON] substantially as to the facts in regard to this case. These Indians were a portion of the Choctaw tribe, all of whom had the right to remain upon their homestead, provided they chose to do so, and signified their intention to do so within the time specified in the treaty. This tribe of Indians are known as the "Bay Indians."

The sixty-seven provided for in this bill were as much entitled to their lands as others, but they had no opportunity of making their rights known to the commission appointed by the Government until that commission had adjourned. They now come forward and simply ask this Congress to do that which would have been done for them, provided they had made their claims known before the commissioners appointed to adjudicate them. The amendment of the Senate asks that this matter may be adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means said, this morning, that if this thing was to be done at all, it was better to have another commission. I am opposed to another commission for two or three reasons. First, that it is not at all necessary for the purpose of adjudicating some sixty or seventy claims. Second, it would involve the necessity of appointing three or four officers, involve an expenditure entirely unnecessary, and involve a large amount of litigation, and probably the bringing of these parties together, at great cost to them, all of which is wholly unnecessary. The testimony has all been taken, and is now in the Department of the Interior; and these claimants are perfectly willing to risk their claims before the present Secretary of that Department. That they are entitled to the lands under the treaty there is no sort of question. The Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, I understand, have reported against these claims, and for the reasons pointed out by the honorable chairman this morning—that they ought to have made their claim known at an earlier day.

Why, Mr. Chairman, need I tell gentlemen who know anything of the Indian character how little they can appreciate your manner of legislation? They came forward at an early day, and filed their claims.

They were passed against by the Government commission upon a technical objection. They went to obtain testimony to destroy the force of that objection, but could not get it before the commission until within two days of its dissolution; and then the commissioners reported to the President that they had not time to adjudicate these claims, and in this condition they were left.

They now appeal to Congress—to do what? To allow the Secretary of the Interior to adjudicate their claims in the same manner that the commissioners would have done, if they had set a few days longer. That is all they ask. Now, can there be any sort of objection to that in any quarter? If they were not entitled to this land under the treaty, the Secretary of the Interior will decide against them. If they have a title to it, you will not upon a mere technicality take it from them.

Recollect, sir, that these claimants had nothing to do with the passage of your law appointing a commission to examine their claims. You passed it without consulting these parties, and affixed to it your own limitation.

I trust that the recommendation of the committee will not be agreed to, but that the amendment of the Senate will be concurred in. You cannot in honor take advantage of your own legislation to deprive a handful of miserable savages of their rights, under a treaty made and executed in good faith on their part.

The question was then taken upon concurring with the first branch of the Senate amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The second branch of the amendment was then read, as follows:

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriations heretofore made for removing the Choctaw Indians, as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

Mr. McLANAHAN. I move to strike out $37,412, and insert $1.

During the last session of Congress, Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. This subject was before that committee at that time, and I bestowed upon it some investigation. I have been unable here to procure the papers that were then submitted to that committee; and I may not speak with perfect accuracy as to dates and amounts, but I think I remember sufficiently well the details, to satisfy this committee that the claim of $37,412 is an unjust one, and ought not to be paid by the Government. In the year 1844, a contract was entered into, between the Secretary of War upon the one part, and Messrs. Anderson & Forrester and others upon the other part, by which the parties of the second part contracted to remove the Choctaw Indians, at this sum of $26 71½ per head. In this contract, which is one drawn with great care and circumspection by the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Hon. Thomas Hartley Crawford, provision is made by which this Government is clearly and fairly indemnified from any loss which may be sustained, by parties who entered into contract with it. In view of the difficulties which surrounded the removal of the Choctaw Indians, these parties entered into certain stipulations with the Government; allow me to read one of them to the committee:

"And the said parties upon the second part engage and covenant, to act with the greatest energy and industry, and to use all proper persuasion and means to induce the said Indians to remove within the shortest practicable period."

But I call the attention of the committee particularly to the next clause:

"And that in no event shall the United States hereafter be subject to any claim for damages, or compensation for loss or injury that may arise, or be alleged to arise, out of this contract, under any circumstances whatever, either from the delay or refusal, in whole or in part, of the said Choctaw Indians to remove west, or from any other cause or reason whatever."

Mr. DIMMICK. Does my colleague mean to convey the idea that, by the clause in the contracts just read, the Government is discharged from all claims to damages occasioned by her own fault, or the neglect to perform her duty?

With the gentleman's permission, I will state my understanding of the case to be this: that these Indians were to receive one half of the scrip before they started west, and the other half upon their arrival there, and that the United States Government failed to furnish the scrip it was bound to by the act of 1842.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I will respond to my colleague with pleasure. I have no doubt that one of the most cogent reasons to induce these parties to enter into the contract with the Government was the prospect of procuring from the Indians their certificates of land scrip. The Government subsequently to the date of the contract, enacted a law to protect the Indians from the frauds which were constantly being practiced upon them; but, sir, notwithstanding these parties failed to get all of the certificates from the Indians which might have been obtained, yet it is perfectly manifest from the papers, if they be examined, that a large portion of this scrip had been issued.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HIBBARD. The remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania having been confined to his amendment, I apprehend it is still in order for me to discuss the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. VENABLE. I rise to a question of order. I desire to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. McLANAHAN.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire has not thus far proceeded in any discussion out of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to reduce the appropriation from $37,412 to $1, and in fact involves the whole question.

Mr. HIBBARD. Is it in order for me to oppose the Senate's amendment, which has not yet been done?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania opposes the amendment, by striking out the entire sum excepting a dollar.

Mr. HIBBARD. But he speaks to the amendment which he offers. I wish to speak to the amendment of the Senate; and I apprehend that it is still open for me to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will recollect that the rule is, he must oppose an amendment pending.

Mr. HIBBARD. I will obviate the difficulty. I will speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am opposed to his amendment because I am against allowing anything. I am against the whole claim that the Senate propose to add to this bill. The Committee of Ways and Means, who considered this matter upon several occasions—first when the estimates were originally sent to it, and secondly when this amendment was referred to it—voted unanimously, if I remember rightly, against it. The grounds upon which it was done were these: That it is purely a private claim; that it was not to execute any existing law, or treaty; and that it has not only never been allowed by any Department, but upon two occasions it has been rejected. Upon all these grounds the committee were opposed to it, apart from the question of its merits or demerits when it shall be properly presented.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Have not $7,000 been paid since last Congress?

Mr. HIBBARD. An item of $7,137 has been allowed and paid since the last Congress. If it were necessary to examine the merits of the claim, I might refer to what is stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that at the last session the Committee on Indian Affairs examined and rejected it. At this session, the gentleman from Indiana has just informed us, the Committee on Indian Affairs have had this matter before them and disallowed it. It was the province of these committees upon those occasions to examine this matter upon its merits. Every man knows that they are competent to do it. No man doubts their disposition to allow every fair claim. They have disallowed it. It is not competent, apart from the question of its merits, to go upon an appropriation bill because it is a private claim. The history of it is this: it was originally presented to the Department of Indian Affairs on the 19th of August, 1850, and was disallowed by the then Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Lea, and I have here his report, giving his reasons; and one of his reasons is the fact alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that it is not only not competent to be allowed under the treaty, but is expressly cut off by the terms of the treaty, which say that no claim shall be set up for damages under the treaty. Here is the portion of his report containing his decision:

"Having given the subject a careful consideration, I find that the entire claim is predicated on the ground of damage, loss, or injury sustained by the contractors, in consequence of delinquency or improper conduct on the part of certain officers of the Government. But I find also, that the contract contains the following provision: 'And the said parties of the second part (Andrews, viz: Forrester, Cobb & Pickens) engage and covenant to act with the greatest energy and industry, and to use all proper persuasion and means to induce the said Indians to remove within the shortest practicable period, and that in no event shall the United States hereafter be subject to any claim for damages, or compensation for any loss or injury that may arise, or be alleged to arise out of this contract under any circumstances whatever, either from the delay or the refusal, in whole or in part, of the Choctaw Indians to remove west, or from any other cause or reason whatever.'

"It is thus evident, that however meritorious the claim may be, it is not provided for in the contract; on the contrary, it is precisely such as the contract expressly guards against and precludes. The Department, therefore, has no authority to allow the claim."

It was disallowed; and without passing upon the merits or demerits of the claim, the Commissioner referred these claimants to Congress, because it stands upon the footing of countless other claims before us, which require examination before the appropriate committees, and to be allowed by acts of Congress before they can be paid by the Department or included in appropriation bills. It is no part of the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means, nor of the Committee of the Whole, nor of the House itself, while considering general appropriation bills, to examine the merits of private claims, nor to add them as riders to these bills. It is sometimes done, but it is a most objectionable practice, and is in violation of an express rule of the House.

Mr. DIMMICK. Is it not in order now, Mr. Chairman, for some gentleman to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? Both of the gentlemen who have spoken upon it have opposed the Senate amendment. I desire some one shall be allowed to speak in support of the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion has ended upon the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. McLANAHAN's amendment; and it was disagreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes 19, noes not counted.

Mr. DIMMICK. I move to increase the appropriation one dollar, for the purpose of saying a few words in support of this claim. I have not had an opportunity of having access to the testimony which is relied upon, and on file in the office of Indian Affairs, but some time last Congress, if I recollect rightly, I had access to the papers connected with this claim, and gave them, as I think, a fair and candid examination. I then came to the conclusion that it was a just and honest claim upon the Government, and ought to be paid. The gentleman from New Hampshire, who last addressed the committee, set off with the allegation that this was a private claim, and is not, therefore, germane in an appropriation bill. In the first place, I desire to say, that I differ with the gentleman upon that point. This appropriation has been estimated for by the Department—by Mr. Secretary Stuart—and his estimates I hold in my hand. They are dated January 11th, 1852, and read as follows:

"For payment for the removal of Choctaw Indians from the States of Mississippi and Alabama, a balance of a claim on account of said removal, heretofore reported to be due by this office, and an appropriation for the payment of which passed the Senate of the United States at the last session of Congress, $37,422 12."

Very well, sir; my friend from New Hampshire referred to the fact that Mr. Lea had refused the allowance of this claim. It is true that he refused to make payment of this claim; but in the very communication making the refusal he expressed an opinion favorable to the merits of the claim, and recommended the claimants to seek redress at the hands of Congress.

A MEMBER. What was the claim for?

Mr. DIMMICK. For supplies furnished in the removal of the Choctaw Indians.

Mr. McLANAHAN. The gentleman answers, that it was for the removal of the Choctaw Indians. My recollection is that some $80,000 were paid for the fulfillment of the contract, and that this is a claim for damages, they allege, arising out of the contract after they have entered into that legal agreement.

Mr. DIMMICK. I desire to say one word upon the merits of the claim. Mr. Loughery has always expressed a favorable opinion of this claim. I desire also to state that the Secretary of the Interior has requested Congress to make a special appropriation for the purpose of meeting its payment. The facts of the case are simply these: The Government of the United States entered into a contract with Mr. Forrester and others for the removal of these Choctaw Indians. It is true, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, that he agreed to make no further claim upon the Government of the United States for any injury or loss arising under that contract. That provision was inserted in the contract, but it was the understanding that the Government of the United States should deliver to the Choctaws prior to their removal, under the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, one half of the land scrip they were entitled to.

The Secretary of War, some time in 1844, promised to deliver, and to have in readiness, one half of the scrip to which the Indians were entitled. An agent of the United States was sent down there for the purpose of seeing that these Indians were removed comfortably, and in a proper manner. The contractor, who was there ready, had assembled a great portion of the Indians; but they refused to go before the scrip was delivered. The Secretary of War failed to deliver the scrip; and the consequence was that the Indians refused to go. It became necessary, then, for the contractors to make an effort to effect the removal of the Indians. The one half of the scrip, with which they expected to pay their debts, and provide themselves with necessities for their comfortable removal, had been withheld by the Government; and, as I understand the evidence, at the suggestion of the Government agent, these supplies and advances were furnished the Indians, who were to have paid the contractors for them with the scrip which the Government never delivered them, but subsequently funded this claim by act of Congress in 1845; whereby this scrip or fund, out of which these contractors were to have been paid, was diverted. Thus, the only means the Indians had to reimburse these outlays by the contractors for their supplies, were taken away, and the contractors left without redress, except to rely on the justice of the Government, and the promises of her agent for their indemnification in furnishing these supplies to the Indians; and without which their removal could not have been effected.

Mr. VENABLE. We have had nothing but a one-sided discussion. My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] was opposed to this amendment, because he thought that one dollar was perhaps too much. I am opposed because it is not enough. The Government makes a treaty and plights its faith for removing a part of the Choctaw Indians, and a part of that agreement is, that they shall furnish them with the land scrip before they move. Somebody who undertakes to be guardian of the Indians discovers here that they are likely to be cheated out of their land scrip, and that the Government ought to decline to fulfill its part of the treaty by refusing to deliver the land scrip according to their own agreement. The Government having so refused, the Indians became dissatisfied and are unwilling to go.

Mr. McLANAHAN. How much land scrip was delivered?

Mr. VENABLE. It matters not for the issue. The Government violated their contract. If the Government makes a contract and covenants with the Indians to remove them at a certain time and upon certain conditions, and if they violate their own agreement with the Indians, it does not look well now to say that they will not pay the contractors for the removal, because of the wrong inflicted upon these Indians. If we had covenanted with a contractor to remove the Indians, and the Indians were secured by treaty with a certain portion of land scrip before they removed, and if the Government assumes the right of refuse to deliver the scrip and the Indians refuse to remove, it certainly does not lie in the power of the Government to place obstructions in the way of the contractor, and say that they made a bargain with the contractor and they will not pay damages.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman give way for a moment?

Mr. VENABLE. I cannot give up my time. The gentleman can follow me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire information, and I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. VENABLE. I can give you the information, and it is this: The Government required the Indians to be removed. They made a contract with these parties to remove them, and placed them under certain obligations and certain conditions to relieve themselves from any liability for damages to the contractors. They bind themselves by treaty with the Indians, before they remove, to deliver a certain portion of land scrip. They take alarm—refuse to give the land scrip—make the contractors responsible because they were thus obstructed in removing the Indians, and hold them to the contract.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I ask the gentleman if that forms any portion of the contract for the removal of the Indians?

Mr. VENABLE. No, sir; but it is undignified on the part of the Government, having made a bargain with them to remove these Indians, to obstruct them in the execution of their contract. They plead their own wrong in excuse for a greater wrong inflicted by themselves. They render it impossible that the contract shall be complied with.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Indians failed to remove. How did damages accrue?

Mr. VENABLE. The Indians were removed, and responsibilities were incurred by the contractor in removing them. They were delayed and had to furnish supplies for a considerable time. The Senate have passed this bill unanimously. Estimates in regard to this matter have been made by the Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to say to my friend that he misunderstands the action of the Senate.

Mr. VENABLE. The gentleman can reply to me when I get through.

The question was then taken upon Mr. DIMMICK's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to cut down the appropriation to $2. I will state in the commencement of my remarks, that the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE,] in what he has said to the committee, no doubt stated the facts as he supposes them to be. He is setting forth the allegations of the claimant here, that there was a failure on the part of the Government to comply with this contract. This same matter, with all the evidence and all the facts, has been upon two several occasions considered by the proper committee, that of Indian Affairs—the whole claim has been examined upon its merits, it and has been disallowed. I understand this, that there has been no default, in point of fact, upon the part of the Government. The allegations of the gentleman from North Carolina are not admitted. They are not proved. On the contrary, the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs indicates that they were disproved. There was the time and place to make an examination upon the merits of the case, and the proper committee, after making an examination, have found against this claim. I wish to finish the history of the action of the Department, which I began in my first remarks. The whole sum stipulated to be paid to these claimants for removing the Indians, has been paid to them. When they submitted their claim to the Department, the sum of $7,139 was allowed and paid, while the remainder was disallowed. I spoke of the action of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs disallowing this matter upon its first presentation at the Department.

This claim has been sent down here at the instance of the Secretary of War, the gentleman says—and this is urged as an argument in favor of its allowance. What are the facts? The claim being disallowed at the Department, Mr. Hart applied to Congress for relief as a private claimant. This action on the part of Hart in presenting his claim as a private one, is an admission on his part that it is a private claim, unsettled and unadjudicated. It shows that it is not a fixed and settled liability on the part of the Government, such as is proper to be embraced in an appropriation bill.

It is no part of the business of the Committee of Ways and Means to pass upon the merits or demerits of private claims. Nor should they add them as riders to appropriation bills. By one of the rules of the House, no appropriation is to be reported in a general appropriation bill, nor is in order as an amendment thereto "for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government." Neither can the House, nor the Committee of the Whole, consistently with their own rule, add such items to appropriation bills. This claim is clearly cut off by the rule referred to. It is presented and urged here by its friends, as a purely private claim for damages, because, as they allege, the Government did not perform its part of the stipulations of the contract. It is not authorized by the contract, but is cut off by its express terms, and has been disallowed at the Department. After the close of the last Congress, this claimant again applied to the Department of the Interior, and got a report in his favor from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. How much evidence this is, other gentlemen may judge better, or as well as I can. With me it would be no evidence at all, judging from facts that have come to my knowledge in this and in other cases. How was it with the Department itself, from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, whose adjudication is final? What did he do? If he allowed the claim as due, it was an adjudication by which the Government might have been bound. The Secretary, whose decision was the judgment of the Department, overruled the report of the Commissioner and disallowed the claim.

I will read the letter of the Secretary containing this decision:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, October 9, 1851.

SIR: With respect to the claim of William B. Hart, assignee of Anderson, Forrester, Cobb, and Pickens, reported upon by you on the 16th of August last, I do not feel authorized to give the direction requested by Mr. Hart. The items of his account, designated by your officer as proper to be paid, do not seem to me of such a character as to allow me to take them from the jurisdiction of Congress, to which body the claimant has already applied for relief.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ALEX. H. STUART, Secretary.
LUKE LEA, Esq., Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Now, if this claim had been adjudicated and allowed by the proper officers, it might have been our duty, under the law, to put it into an appropriation bill; but it was not so passed upon and adjudicated. How it was, after overruling the report of the Commissioner and disallowing this item, the Secretary of the Interior came to send to the House an estimate for the same item, to be provided for in an appropriation bill, is what I do not understand. He is made to ask Congress to appropriate money to pay a claim which he had just rejected.

These Indian estimates, as is well known, are prepared by the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, reported by him to the Secretary of the Interior, who reports them to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he to Congress. The supposition most favorable to the Secretary of the Interior, and perhaps the most probable, is, that he was not aware of the nature of this item of the estimates. If so, he is chargeable with negligence. If he knew it was the item he had just disallowed and then recommended it for an appropriation, that rejection standing wholly unreversed, his conduct cannot be too severely censured.

Mr. VENABLE. During the five minutes which I occupied a short time since I did not give a plain history of this case, and in such a way, perhaps, as to make the House understand me. How does this matter stand? The Government made a contract with Forrester and others to remove a number of Indians, and they made a treaty with the Indians in which they consented to remove. Now, no one would justify the employment of force in compelling the Indians to remove, unless the Government complies with its contract with them. If I understand the position of the claim it is this: The Government covenanted with the Indians to give them certain land scrip before they removed. When the agents go there to remove them, they find that the land scrip is withheld, and that the Indians are destitute and dissatisfied. They made all their preparations to remove them, and incurred great expense in consequence of the delay, and yet I hear gentlemen say it is in the power of the Government, after they have bargained with those agents to remove the Indians and have themselves put obstructions in the way of their removal, that they shall not pay damages for the wrong inflicted upon this agent. Estimates have been made in regard to this matter by the Department and sent down this year. When this claim was presented in the Senate it was objected to on the ground that it was a private claim. It was discussed, and the Senate decided that it was not a private claim by a vote of thirty to fourteen, and upon its being decided that it was not a private claim they unanimously annexed it to the bill. That is the fact as recorded upon the Journal of the Senate, and gentlemen can find it by recurring to it. It does not look well in the Government, after having made a contract with persons to remove Indians, to throw obstructions in their way, and then plead like a miserable special pleader before a magistrate's warrant trying or some county court, to a mere matter of form against the justice of a claim. They are bound to pay the damages incurred by this contractor, and they are bound to keep their hands clean and maintain the dignified position of a great Government, that will not bear down upon a contractor in whose way they have placed obstructions, prevent him from complying with his contract, and then seek to avoid the responsibility which they themselves have honestly and honorably incurred. This claim is for expenses incurred because the Government prevented the execution—these contractors from the discharge of their duty. To avoid responsibility it is urged that it is a private claim, unconnected with the agreement. The Government then pleads in bar a provision of the agreement by which the Government seeks to protect itself against damages. The obvious reply is, that themselves have created the difficulty by which the damages were incurred. I trust that the Government will never adopt that principle, and that it will never be brought to bear down upon a contractor who suffered a great loss in consequence of the Government failing to do what they had promised. The difficulty has arisen from the want of good faith on the part of the Government, who avail themselves of a contract by which they seek to avoid a claim for damages incurred, because they placed a stumbling-block in the way of the performance of the duty imposed upon the contractors.

Mr. SCURRY. I move to reduce the sum three dollars. I do this for the purpose of saying a very few words in regard to this matter. The House seems to be but a register of the opinions of the Committee of Ways and Means. I think that the worst misfortune which has ever befallen my friend from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] was his appointment as chairman of that committee. He thinks that nothing but what passes through that committee should pass the House. My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] is in the same situation. I say this in all kindness; but it looks to me as if they wanted to usurp the whole business of the House by cooperating to put down the judgment of every member in the House, and place a brand upon those who differ with the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. SCURRY. I will do it, sir. I say it in all kindness, but it does seem to me as if the whole business of the House was a usurpation—a perfect usurpation, and as if the only reason why the amendment of the Senate is not to be adopted is that the Committee of Ways and Means do not recommend it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained to say that the gentleman from Texas is departing from the discussion of his amendment.

Mr. SCURRY. Well, sir, I have done.

Mr. DIMMICK. I desire to say a few words with regard to the merits of this claim. It has been well observed by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VENABLE,] that the Government of the United States failed to comply with the contract on its part. The Government of the United States agreed, upon the assembling of the Indians—as I understand it, and as I read the testimony some two years ago—to deliver to them the land scrip to which they were entitled; one half before their departure and the remainder on their arrival at their western destination. Well, the Indians being assembled, the scrip did not come according to the engagement and promise of the then Secretary of War. Mr. Barstow was then the agent of the United States, sent there especially to superintend the emigration of the Indians to their destination west. Finding themselves in that situation, the Indians refused to go. It was then in the winter season, a period of the year when the Indians were in need of clothing. They wanted blankets and a great variety of other things, necessary for their comfort in their removal to their destination west. The agent of the United States, therefore, suggested to the contractors that they should go to New Orleans and lay in a supply of goods. Upon his suggestion, and with his promise and assurance that they should be reimbursed for all the expenditures and all the outlay they made in carrying out the policy of the Government, which was the removal of these Indians to their destination in the west, these supplies were furnished to the Indians by the contractors.

Of the item of $37,000, I think there is something like $18,000 or $20,000 for blankets, clothing, shoes, stockings, and all such other articles as were necessary for the comfortable removal of these Indians to their western home. All these supplies which were furnished, were furnished upon the guarantee of the agent of the United States, that the contractors should be reimbursed. He told them that they need not refuse or hesitate to make these advances, for that the Government of the United States would reimburse them. Upon these assurances, thus given, these supplies were furnished. The contractors also removed the mules, and a variety of other articles which the Indians had, and without which they refused to go. I say, then, that these charges against the Government of the United States are for supplies furnished, and for advances made by the contractors, with the promise of the agent that they should be reimbursed by the Government. Unfortunately, the agent, Mr. Barstow, was drowned in crossing some stream on his way with a portion of these Indians to their destination west. But for that circumstance, the probability is, that there never would have been any doubt or difficulty as to the justice and propriety of this claim. When the claim was presented to the Indian Bureau, it was examined by three or four intelligent men, each and every one of whom expressed a favorable opinion with regard to its merits. Now, the Government of the United States have, by its agent, given assurance to the contractors that they should be indemnified for their advances thus made, and the Department having sanctioned it, ratified it, and approved of it, I say that if the Government, or if the Department could be sued, an action of debt could be sustained against it, and a recovery had; for they have recognized, admitted, and allowed the justice and merit of this claim; and although the agent may have transcended his authority in the first instance by giving these assurances to the contractors, yet, if the Department subsequently recognized the acts of her agents, she is as effectually bound as though the agent had a precedent authority to make these promises and give these assurances.

I do hope, therefore, that this committee, when they come to vote upon this question, will vote in favor of its allowance. I think that justice, right, and equity require that we shall not withhold it. I think, as the gentleman from North Carolina has said, it would be quibbling and placing the defense of the Government upon a question of technicality. The Government rests its defense upon the ground that there is a clause in this contract wherein the contractors agree that in no event and under no circumstances will they call upon the Government for any losses or injuries which may arise under it. Now, the Government itself, as is clearly shown and fully proven, was in default from the beginning to the end, and the Government should not seek to take advantage of her own wrong. Again, if I recollect right, it was stipulated in the contract, that one thousand of these Indians should be removed within three months from the making of the contract under a penalty of a forfeiture of the same; and this removal was to be effected in the winter season. When I read the contract I was impressed with the belief that there was a design on the part of the person who drew the contract for the Government to throw difficulties in the way of the contractors, and if possible to defeat or embarrass the execution and performance of the contract on their part, and I believe the history of this case will fairly justify the conclusion to which I came in reference to it.

The question was then taken on Mr. SCURRY's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $37,412, and inserting "$4." The case, as stated by my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. DIMMICK,] is one which, if the facts sustained the statement, would be very clear, and the positions which he has taken would be fully correct. But, sir, I answer his whole argument by the assertion that Mr. Barstow, the Government agent, had no warrant of law, and no authority from the Government, to go with these contractors to New Orleans and incur a debt, or authorize a debt to be incurred on the part of the United States, of some forty-odd thousand dollars. Sir, the contract for the removal of these Indians was one which enabled the contractors to draw (according to my recollection) from the coffers of the United States some $80,000. Under the terms and by virtue of that contract, they were paid every dollar that was due to them. But my colleague says that an agent of this Government went with these contractors to New Orleans for the purpose of purchasing goods, and furnishing the Indians with shoes and stockings, and that he guaranteed the faith of the Government that this payment should be made. If he did so, his conduct was reprehensible, and instead of receiving the sanction of this committee, deserves its prompt condemnation. What authority had a mere agent, who was specially sent with these Indians to see that the contractors fulfilled the stipulations of their agreement with the Government, and come up to their contract, to remove and supply the Indians on their western journey? What authority had he to incur a debt on the part of this Government, of some forty-odd thousand dollars? And, sir, after this debt was incurred, the strongest evidence that is adduced against the United States to support the claim, is the evidence of the self-constituted agent of the Government. Sir, I do not know anything, nor do I allege anything against the characters of the parties in this transaction, but this circumstance raises a strong presumption that that evidence is not the most reliable in the world.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] alleges that the certificates of land scrip were not issued, and that this was the fault of the Government of the United States. Under the "Dancing Rabbit Creek" treaty of 1831, which the Government entered into with this tribe of Indians, the Government became bound to issue certain land scrip to the emigrating members of the tribe. One half of this scrip was to be delivered to the Indians before they started for their new home in the west; and by reference to the documentary evidence in this case, it will be found that a large quantity of this scrip was actually delivered to them before they set out. Now, the calculation doubtless was, for the contractors, under those circumstances, to purchase a supply of goods at New Orleans to sell to the Indians, and have their affairs in such a position that they could get hold of the Indian land scrip for the goods thus purchased. That was the inducement to go to New Orleans. The naked feet and unclad bodies of these wild savages excited sympathies which under other circumstances never would have been awakened. They went to New Orleans and purchased, on the strength of this agent's unauthorized statement, some $40,000 worth of goods, supposing that they would receive therefor the land scrip that the Government was to give to the Indians. I say that is a fair statement of the case. They were defeated in the speculation, and hence arises this claim for damages.

Mr. BISSELL. From the general idea which I have been able to gather of the main facts in this case, I am inclined to think that there is some justice in this claim. But the details of it I profess not to understand. As far as I do understand the claim, I am not satisfied with the defense set up against it. Now, I suppose, from what I have been able to gather, that these are the main facts of the case; that the Government entered into an arrangement with the Choctaws, or with a portion of them, to induce them to emigrate westward, and upon certain conditions the Choctaws agreed to do so. That being the state of the case, the Government entered into a contract with these claimants to go and effect the removal of the Indians. The claimants made their necessary, varied, and extensive arrangements for carrying out their contract, and in doing it, of course, incurred very great expense. The Government failed to comply with the stipulations it had entered into with the Indians, and, in consequence, the Indians refused to emigrate.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I ask the gentleman where is the evidence of that fact, except as proved by those who were interested parties in the purchase of these goods?

Mr. DIMMICK. The agent himself testifies it.

Mr. HAVEN. As I understand it, they did not refuse to go out. They did go out, and these persons superintended their removal.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to say a word?

Mr. BISSELL. With pleasure. I am more anxious to obtain information than to impart it.

Mr. CONGER. The first item of the claim seems to be founded on what I will now read from a report made in the Senate in January, 1851:

"Efforts were immediately made to remove the Indians within the time fixed in the contract; but they refused to go until the certificates or scrip for their lands were issued.

"They desired these to pay their debts. The Secretary of War promised that it should be issued in September, 1844, but the promise was not complied with. The contractors were therefore placed in a most embarrassing position. By the condition of their contract, they were required to remove one thousand Indians within the year 1844, and to furnish the Indians, at their own expense, those articles which were necessary for their removal, relying upon the promise of the Secretary, and the provisions of law by which the Indians were to be furnished with land scrip, to repay them."

Mr. BISSELL. I think that makes the case a little stronger upon the claimants than I had supposed it was. I think the defense set up savors rather of special pleading. I do not think it a fair and manly way to meet the claim in this case. If it is, I do not understand the case. If the facts are such as I have stated them to be, there can be no doubt as to the justice of the claim. Of the amount, I have no means of knowing; but I take it for granted that when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has estimated the amount, and when the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate have unanimously reported in favor of allowing this amount, and the Senate, when they had settled the propriety of putting it into this bill at all, and agreed in allowing the claim, it is the proper amount.

Mr. HIBBARD. I understand the item referred to by the gentleman last up, [Mr. BISSELL,] for removing five hundred and forty-nine horses, has all been paid.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; that is not the item referred to at all.

Mr. HIBBARD. Then I was mistaken.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was then taken on the proposition to reduce the appropriation to $4; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the original amendment of the Senate,

Mr. DAWSON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and BARRERE appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The committee then passed to the second amendment of the Senate, which is as follows:

"Page 12, strike out the following clause of the bill, viz: 'To pay the claim, as adjusted by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury, in favor of David Taylor, under the latter clause of the thirteenth article of the Cherokee treaty, concluded at New Echota, December 29, 1835, and approved by the Senate, $12,800; and to be paid out of the balance of the appropriations of July 2d, 1836, under the act entitled 'An act making further appropriations for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties,'"

"and insert—

"To pay the claim of David Taylor, as adjusted and found due by the Second Auditor of the Treasury on the 11th of March, 1852, under the latter clause of the thirteenth article of the treaty with the Cherokees, concluded at New Echota, on the 29th of December, 1835, and approved by the Senate, $24,373 04."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to increase the appropriation $100.

As the Committee of Ways and Means recommended a concurrence in this amendment, I would not say anything in relation to it, but for the fact that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FRENCH] expressed some doubt as to its propriety. I beg leave to read a short statement of the Comptroller of the Treasury. Mr. Whittlesey, after stating that the claim could not be paid without an appropriation, there being no money in the Treasury, says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
 COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, July 5, 1852. }

WILLIAM L. HODGE, Esq.,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: On the 25th of June the Secretary of the Interior sent to the Secretary of the Treasury a requisition, properly countersigned by the Acting Second Comptroller, and Second Auditor, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a warrant for $10,240, in favor of David Taylor, as per report No. 12,960 of Second Comptroller, on decision of Secretary of the Treasury, to be charged to the appropriations in the act of 2d of July, 1836, carrying into effect Cherokee treaty of 1835-36.

On the same day the warrant was issued as required, and sent to this office to be countersigned by the First Comptroller. By the act of September 2d, 1789, it is made the duty of the Comptroller to countersign all warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall be warranted by law. (Vol. 1, St. at L., p. 66.) The same provision is contained in the act of March 3d, 1817. (Sec. 8, vol. 3, p. 367.) The first article and ninth section of the Constitution of the United States provides, that "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." (Vol. 1, page 15.)

It is important to know whether there is "an appropriation made by law," for the payment of this claim. It need not be a specific appropriation for the payment of this identical claim; but is there an appropriation on which this claim is properly chargeable?

The Comptroller is equally responsible with the Secretary of the Treasury in deciding this question legally. By law, they are checks on each other for the security of the Treasury.

I shall differ with the Secretary of the Treasury with great reluctance in any case, and I shall not do so until the question presented shall be carefully examined, and the correctness of my opinion shall be fully established after full deliberation. The papers were referred to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the early part of May, and my opinion was asked, whether an appropriation existed, out of which this claim could be paid?

That opinion was given in the negative, in two letters addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, one dated May the 8th, and the other May the 10th, to which I refer you. The opinion then given was informal and advisory; but I am now called upon to act officially, and the opinion I give is a decision of the matter so far as this office is concerned.

The payment of this claim has been so long delayed, the necessities of Mr. Taylor are so urgent, that it would have greatly gratified me if I could have arrived at the conclusion, that Congress had made an appropriation out of which the amount found due by the accounting officers could be paid; but, after a laborious search, believing that no such appropriation exists, I proceed to state the grounds for that conclusion:

A treaty was made with the Cherokees on the 29th day of December, 1835, containing nineteen articles. The thirteenth article embraces four classes of claims.

1st. Reservations under former treaties, if sold by the United States, to be paid for by the United States.

2d. When such reservations have not been sold by the United States, but the reserves have been performed, as required by the treaty, then they are to be confirmed in their title.

3d. All persons who were entitled to reservations under the treaty of 1817, and who, as far as practicable, in the opinion of the commissioners, have complied with the stipulations of said treaty, although, by the treaty of 1819, such reservations were included in the unceded lands belonging to the nation, were confirmed to them, and they were entitled to receive a grant for the same.

4th. Reservations which Cherokees were compelled to abandon under State laws, the reserves were entitled to receive pay from the United States.

The claim of David Taylor, amounting to $12,800, without interest, was found due to him under the fourth head of the thirteenth article, as specified above. Supplementary articles to this treaty of 29th of December, 1835, were executed on the first day of March, 1836. By this last treaty the rights to preemptions and reservations, provided for by the twelfth and thirteenth articles of the treaty of December 29th, 1835, were relinquished and declared void.

The reason for said relinquishment is set forth in the preamble, as follows: "And whereas, the President of the United States has expressed his determination not to allow any preemptions or reservations, his desire being that the whole Cherokee people should remove together, to establish themselves in the country provided for them west of the Mississippi river."

We have seen that, under the second and third heads of the thirteenth article, reservations in certain cases were to be confirmed; and it was, as to these reservations, the President had determined the Cherokees should not have any right to claim, because the confirmation of such reservations would, necessarily, permit the Cherokees to remain in the State where the reservations were situated, whereas, it was the policy of the President to compel all the Cherokees to remove.

The first and fourth heads of the thirteenth article of the treaty of December 29th, 1835, relate solely to the payment of money in two classes of cases—the one where the reservations had been sold by the United States, and the other where the reserves had been compelled by the laws of the States to abandon their reservations.

At the close of the thirteenth article of the treaty of 29th of December, 1835, is the following stipulation:

"It is expressly understood by the parties to this treaty that the amount to be allowed for reservations under this article, shall not be deducted out of the consideration money allowed to the Cherokees for their claims for spoiliations and the cessions of their lands; but the same is to be paid for, independently, by the United States, as it is only a just fulfillment of former treaty stipulations."

The second article of the supplementary treaty is as follows:

"Whereas, the Cherokee people have supposed that the sum of $5,000,000, fixed by the Senate in their resolution of — day of March, 1835, as the value of the Cherokee lands and possessions east of the Mississippi river, was not intended to include the amount which may be required to remove them, nor the value of certain claims which many of their people had against citizens of the United States, which suggestion has been confirmed by the opinion expressed to the War Department by some of the Senators who voted upon the question. And whereas, the President is willing that this subject should be referred to the Senate for their consideration, and if it was not intended by the Senate that the above-mentioned sum of $5,000,000 should include the objects herein specified, that in that case such further provision should be made therefor as might appear to the Senate to be just."

The third article that follows stipulates, that $600,000 shall be allowed in lieu of reservations and preemptions, and of the sum of $300,000 for spoiliations, described in the first article of the treaty of December 29th, 1835.

I will now briefly copy the appropriations contained in the act of July 2d, 1836, to carry into effect these treaties with the Cherokees of 1835-36:

For lands ceded in the first article of the treaty of 1835, deducting the price of land to be ceded under to them west of the Mississippi, under the second article.....	$4,500,000

For extinguishing title of certain half-breeds..	15,000
For payment of improvements on missionary reservations.....	25,000
For commutation of certain permanent annuities.....	214,000
For compensation of two commissioners.....	11,689
For compensation to a secretary.....	3,650
For compensation to an interpreter.....	1,825
For advance of annuities.....	75,000
For removal of the Cherokees, and for spoiliations according to the third article of the supplementary treaty of March 1st, 1836.....	600,000
For expenses attending the negotiation.....	37,212
For surveying certain lands.....	7,000
	$5,490,367

Neither appropriation is for paying a Cherokee who was compelled to abandon his reservation or preemption under State laws.

That is the claim of David Taylor, and from the very character of the claim, its payment would not be provided for in a specific appropriation before the amount of the claim was ascertained. The commissioners to ascertain the amount due to these claimants were not then appointed. Large sums of money having been drawn from the aggregate amount of these several appropriations to pay claims for reservations, ascertained to be due, under the thirteenth article of the treaty of 1835, and the Cherokee people being dissatisfied therewith, it was agreed by the United States, in the third article of the treaty of August 6th, 1846, that they would repay the money so improperly charged upon the Cherokee fund.

If any claim has been charged upon the balance of these appropriations, since the 6th of August, 1846, of the character of the claim of David Taylor, it has been from inadvertence.

My attention has been invited to the payments made to John Shoemaker, and wife, and heirs, and to the case of John McNany, and wife, and heirs, from the appropriations of July 2, 1836. A memorandum to that effect was handed to me by Mr. Mix, chief clerk in the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The commissioners, in their first decrees, found due to John Shoemaker, wife, and heirs, $7,680, that being the amount, &c., for the value of a reservation under the thirteenth article of the treaty of 1835-36, and the third supplemental article. This decree was afterwards amended by inserting: "Said reservations being those for which a grant would have issued, had not the said reservations been abrogated by the preamble and first supplemental article." The decree in the case of John McNany, and wife's heirs for $3,400, was amended in the same manner.

By so amending the decrees, they were brought within the second or third heads of the thirteenth article of the treaty of 1835, and the third supplemental article of the treaty of 1836, and properly chargeable upon the appropriation.

Although doubts seem to have existed as to whether the commissioners virtually found a sum of money due to Mr. Taylor, it seems now to be admitted that they legally awarded to him $12,800, and that he applied for payment on the 28th of February, 1846, of this award.

He has been importuning the Government to pay him this award from that time to this. I exceedingly regret there is no appropriation on which it is properly chargeable. It is a case of so much hardship that I cannot doubt Congress will readily and promptly act in the matter on the presentation of the facts by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

There is a balance left of the appropriations of July 2d, 1836, and of June 12th, 1838, for the Cherokee people, which will not be used for the purposes mentioned in the acts, because other provisions have been made for the Cherokees under the treaty of August 6th, 1846.

If it should be the pleasure of Congress to pay this claim from that balance, I presume it might be done by a simple joint resolution, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the award from it. I cannot refrain from expressing the hope he may obtain speedy relief.

Most sincerely, and respectfully, yours,
ELISHA WHITTLESEY.

The following is a letter from the Second Comptroller:

"SIR: In reply to a verbal inquiry made here this morning, in relation to the allowance of interest upon the claim of David Taylor, as provided by the amendment of the Senate to the appropriation bill, I have to say that interest has not been allowed at the Treasury, so far as I can learn, upon any similar claim under the same treaty. I am not aware that any other claim has been presented, the circumstances of which would render the payment of interest proper. But however this may be, it is regarded as a settled principle that the accounting officers have no authority to allow interest upon any claim against Government, except where interest has been paid by the claimant in such a manner as to become part of the principal of his demand. And it was upon this ground that the allowance of interest made by the Second Auditor in Taylor's case, was rejected in this office, and a final allowance made of the principal only, at the sum originally mentioned in the appropriation bill.

"From a thorough investigation of this claim, however—the circumstances of which are extraordinary—I have no hesitation in strongly recommending to Congress the allowance of the interest. The justice of the original demand is undoubted, and the delay in its settlement unexampled and ruinous. The claim for such compensation as would be afforded by the interest is therefore, in my judgment, most equitable.

"Very respectfully your obedient servant,
"E. J. PHELPS, Comptroller.

"Hon. Mr. JONES, House of Representatives."

I will say that this claim has been pending since 1836. Mr. Taylor has been pressing it for nine or ten years, but has never been able to get the money. During Mr. Polk's administration, the Attorney General gave an opinion in his favor, and Mr. Walker, the then Secretary of the Treasury, ordered it to be paid; but before it was paid, an individual who was then a Senator, but now no longer here, as Mr. Taylor informs me, demanded $1,500 as his fee, and upon Mr. Taylor's refusing to give it, he went to the Treasury and prevented its payment. During the next Congress, another individual, a member of General Jackson's Cabinet, claimed a large fee, and upon Mr. Taylor refusing to give it, he prevented its payment. During the present session of Congress, the claim was likely to be adjusted at the Treasury, when an individual, a member of a Cabinet two years since, claimed twenty per cent. as a fee. There was also a banking-house that claimed twenty per cent. more as assignee for another attorney, and another person still who claimed ten per cent. I then told Mr. Taylor, who had been here nine or ten years, and was likely to starve to death, to say that if there was any money in the Treasury which was not claimed by any of these people, to take it and go home. He made his application, therefore, in that way, and prepared a warrant for half the sum which would have been paid; but Mr. Whittlesey, on its presentation, was of the opinion that there was no money in the Treasury out of which it could be paid, and the matter remains in that situation. Mr. Taylor is an illiterate man, and can neither read nor write. I have no doubt his case would be adjudicated at the Department but for these parties and litigants who claim the money. They might, by filing a bill in equity, force him to give security, or otherwise give satisfaction for any just demand. I think if gentlemen will examine the case, they will be satisfied it is right.

Mr. CLINGMAN then, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to appeal to gentlemen to dispense with debate as much as possible, or we shall not be able to get through with all the appropriation bills.

The question was then taken, and the committee agreed to concur in the original Senate amendment.

The third amendment of the Senate was as follows:

"Strike out in page nineteen, line two, the word 'ten,' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'two,' so that the section will read:

"For permanent provision for the purchase of one thousand pounds of tobacco, two thousand pounds of iron, and one thousand pounds of steel, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of 23d of October, 1836, $770."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The fourth amendment of the Senate was read, viz:

"For permanent annuity, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 30th of September, 1809, $350: Provided, That the money appropriated by the three preceding clauses, together with the similar appropriations in 1850, and 1851, for the Eel Rivers, (Miamies,) heretofore withheld from payment, shall be paid to said Eel Rivers (Miamies) only, and to no other band, or nation, or individuals; and that all annuities heretofore due, and appropriated to the Eel Rivers, (Miamies,) and erroneously or otherwise paid to the Miami nation, shall be repaid to the Eel Rivers, (Miamies,) out of the money appropriated in 1851 and 1852 for payment of annuities to said Miami nation, or, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs deem it more expedient and just to the Indians, shall be paid and is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, to be repaid to the United States by being withheld from the Miami annuities, in such installments as the Commissioner may deem expedient"—

"and insert in lieu thereof—

"For the redemption and final extinction of the annuities due to the Eel River Miamies, under the provisions of the treaties of August 3, 1795, August 21, 1805, and 30th September, 1809, $15,000, to be paid per capita: Provided, That before paying the said sum, or any part thereof, to the said Eel River Miamies, they shall relinquish, in such form as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct, all claim and demand on the United States for any further annuity or payment: And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, before paying the said sum of money, as above directed, to ascertain who are the individuals composing the said band, without regard to the place of their residence, and to pay to the said individuals, so ascertained, per capita, the sum of money herein before appropriated."

Mr. FITCH. I move to amend by striking out the latter proviso of the Senate's amendment.

That is a proviso declaring that two Eel River women who have married Miamies, and have since moved to Missouri, and become incorporated with that nation, and draw annuities as Miamies, shall likewise draw as Eel Rivers, and thus receive two annuities. It is unjust.

But I moved to strike out this proviso more particularly for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the whole Senate amendment. I hope the whole of it will be non-concurred in by the House. Such is the recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and such is the course which the plain dictates of justice would point out. The money has been paid out of the National Treasury year after year, but has been paid to the wrong nation; and the Committee on Indian Affairs propose that that nation shall reimburse the Treasury, and that it shall be paid to the right band. We do not propose to look solely to the Treasury to reimburse the Eel River Indians for the annuities which they have not received, but to look to the Miami nation, to whom those annuities have erroneously been paid. We propose that it should be paid back to the Government out of their annuities.

And further, this amendment of the Senate provides that the Eel River Indians shall not have their money until they will consent, as a condition, to release the United States from all further claim upon them—claims based upon treaties by which we have solemnly obligated ourselves to pay to them forever a certain annuity amounting to $1,100; but it is now proposed in this summary manner to wipe these treaties out of existence—to repudiate our plighted faith, to deny to these parties what, if they were private individuals, they could recover in a court of justice. We acknowledge their existence. The Department acknowledges it; and the treaties cannot be denied; yet we propose to withhold from them the money we have agreed to pay them, in utter violation of our treaty obligations. I sincerely hope the whole Senate amendment will be non-concurred in. The original section of the bill was a just one, and covered the entire ground. I think the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will interpose no serious objection to this course; indeed, I believe, he coincides with me.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon agreeing to the Senate amendment; and, being taken, the committee refused to concur—ayes 30, noes not counted.

The fifth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

"Strike out the following section of the bill:

"For additional compensation for the sale of their lands in the State of Wisconsin, by the treaty of October 18th, 1848, $221,840; the same to be paid in such sums and at such times, with the approbation of said nation, as the President may think most conducive to their prosperity and happiness."

"and insert in lieu thereof—

"For expenses of their temporary removal, and provisions for their present location to the district of country on the Wolf and Oconto rivers, designated in the report of Superintendent Murray to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated September 30, 1851, $25,000."

Mr. FITCH. I move to increase the appropriation to $50,000. The Senate have substituted this amendment for an amendment adopted by the House to pay the Menomonee Indians $221,000 for the difference between the land we paid them and the land we obtained of them. We obtained of them by treaty 5,000,000 acres; but they were induced, under coercion and fear, to accept pay for only 3,000,000 acres, leaving unpaid for 2,000,000 acres, for which we now justly owe them. The commissioner who treated with them was instructed to allow them a certain price for all he purchased. He did not do it. We propose to ratify his wrong or error; but the Senate have stricken out this provision, and have inserted one for paying $25,000 for their removal to the Wolf and Oconto rivers. That amount will scarcely remove them—leaving them nothing to subsist upon subsequently. I hope the Senate amendment will not be concurred in. The original provision was well guarded. It is made not only with the concurrence of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, but with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior and of the President. The matter has been well investigated, and I think the money ought to be paid.

Then why the necessity of substituting anything else for it? I wish to add, in speaking of this Senate amendment, that the objections urged to the House amendment is perfectly futile. Their objection to the interest of a member of Congress in this claim, is utterly without foundation; and yet upon this false issue was this amendment rejected, and upon no such issue am I disposed to have it rejected; and I hope the entire amendment of the Senate will be non-concurred in by the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that the Senate rejected the amendment because of the fact that an agent was to get one third of the amount.

Mr. FITCH. I cannot be mistaken when told so by an individual Senator.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know what an individual Senator may have told him. I speak from the debates of the Senate as I read them; and I know the gentleman will agree with me that the main and substantial points of objection to this amendment were entirely different from that. These were matters which came in the course of debate, and they have nothing to do with the proposition here; but as Senate objections have been urged to-day upon other matters, I think I am justified in saying that upon this proposition, at least, the Senate were unanimous, as I understand, in striking it out, after a very full and thorough investigation and examination. I understand that the Indian committee of that body, as well as the body itself, determined against this amendment, with but one solitary exception I believe, and he did not choose to ask a vote upon it. I hope, therefore, that the House will concur with the Senate, and lay this large and important amendment over for discussion at a time when we shall have more leisure.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question then being upon concurring with the Senate amendment, it was put and decided in the affirmative.

The sixth amendment of the Senate was then read, as follows:

"For the Omaha Indians, $25,000—$5,000 thereof to be expended annually under the direction of the President for the relief and improvement of said Indians."

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

The seventh amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

"Sioux of the Mississippi.

"For fulfilling treaties with the Sioux of the Mississippi, to wit:

"For payment to the chiefs of the See-see-tona and Wah-pay-toan bands of the Dakota or Sioux Indians, to enable them to settle their affairs, and comply with their present just engagements, for expenses of the removal of the said bands from the lands ceded, and for subsistence of themselves for one year thereafter, per first clause of the fourth article of treaty of 23d of July, 1851, ratified by the Senate of the United States on the 23d of June, 1852, $275,000.

"For this amount, to be laid out under the direction of the President, for the establishment of manual labor schools, the erection of mills and blacksmith shops, opening farms, fencing and breaking land, and for such other beneficial objects as may be deemed most conducive to the prosperity and happiness of said Indians, per second clause of the same article and treaty, $30,000.

"For interest, at the rate of five per centum, on the sum of $1,360,000, per same article and treaty, $68,000.

"For interest, at the rate of five per centum, on the sum of $112,000, to be added to the trust fund provided for in the fourth article, being the amount allowed in lieu of the reservation set apart in the third article, containing 1,120,000 acres, at ten cents per acre, per Senate's amendment to the aforesaid treaty, $5,600.

"For payment to the chiefs of the Med-av-wa-kan-toan and Wah-pay-koo-tah bands of the Dakota or Sioux Indians, to enable them to settle their affairs, and to comply with their present just engagements, for expenses of removal of the said Indians from the lands ceded, and for subsistence for themselves for one year thereafter, per first clause of fourth article of treaty of 5th August, 1851, ratified by the Senate of the United States, on the 23d June, 1852, $220,000.

"For this amount to be laid out under the direction of the President, for the establishment of manual labor schools, the erection of mills and blacksmith shops, opening farms, fencing and breaking land, and for such other beneficial objects as may be deemed most conducive to the prosperity and happiness of said Indians, per second clause of the same article and treaty, $30,000.

"For interest, at the rate of five per centum, on the sum of $1,160,000, per same clause, article, and treaty, $58,000.

"For interest, at the rate of five per centum, on the sum of $69,000, to be added to the trust fund provided for in the fourth article, being the amount allowed in lieu of the reservation of land set apart by the third article of the treaty, containing 690,000 acres, at ten cents per acre, per Senate's amendment to the aforesaid treaty, $3,450.

"Provided, That no portion of the money appropriated for the purposes aforesaid shall be applied until said Indians shall express their assent to the treaty as amended by the Senate."

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

The eighth amendment of the Senate was to strike out the following clause:

"For the payment to the Shawnees of moneys due them under and by virtue of the treaties of the 7th of November, 1825, and 8th of August, 1831, between the United States and the two divisions of said tribe of Indians, the same being the net balance received into the Treasury for the sale of their lands in Ohio, $66,246 23: Provided, however, That said tribe of Indians shall first express their assent that the payment of the above sum shall be made equally to the whole tribe, rather than to either division thereof."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will say to the House, as I have said before, that the Senate are almost unanimous in concurring in the fact that the money is due; and the only question is as to how it shall be paid. I ask that the House will not concur in the action of the Senate, for they fell into a complete trap themselves.

Mr. HALL. Do they acknowledge the corn?

Mr. JOHNSON. They acknowledge the corn, and I hope we shall non-concur in their action, and leave it to a committee of conference, when the matter can be settled as it ought to be.

The question was then taken upon concurring with the action of the Senate in striking out the clause, and it was decided in the negative.

The next amendment of the Senate was to insert after the words "per annum" in the following clause, the words in italics:

"For payment to the heirs of Cyrus Choice the balance due for services rendered by him as acting Indian agent in New Mexico, from the 9th of December, 1849, to the 14th of September, 1850, at the rate of $1,550 per annum," after deducting the sum of fifty dollars heretofore paid to said Cyrus Choice, "1,137 76."

Mr. HOUSTON. That amendment is to reduce the sum in our appropriation to Cyrus Choice $50. We appropriated a certain amount of money to the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in New Mexico, without deducting the amount which had been paid to him.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That Senate amendment is all right.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate comprehended the insertion of the following clauses:

"For compensation to three special agents and four interpreters for the Indian tribes of Texas, and for the purchase of presents, $15,000.

"For presents to the Camanches and Kiawas, and other Indians on the Arkansas river, and to enable the President to treat with said Indians, $20,000.

"For defraying expenses incident to the visit of the Pueblo Indians, and their attendants, from New Mexico to Washington, and to defray their expenses to their homes, the sum of $7,500.

"For general objects incident to Indian service in New Mexico, $20,000.

"For expenses of running and marking the eastern boundary line of the Creek country, west of Arkansas, $7,990.

"For payment to James W. Marsh, to cover the loss of his property destroyed by a band of Sioux Indians in the month of July, 1849, while extending 'the second connection line' of the public surveys in the State of Iowa to the Missouri river, under contract with C. H. Booth, Surveyor General of the United States, $1,200.

"For expenses of the California Superintendency, to wit: Salary of the Superintendent.....$4,000
Salary of clerk to the Superintendent.....2,500
Office-rent, stationery, fuel, lights, and postage on official letters.....3,500
Messengers.....2,500
Interpreters.....3,000
Contingent expenses, including the traveling expenses of agents in their districts.....12,500

"For the preservation of peace with those Indians who have been dispossessed of their lands in California, until permanent arrangements be made for their future settlement, the sum of $100,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to imply obligation on the part of the United States to feed and support the Indians who have been dispossessed of their lands in California."

The question was then taken on concurring in the several clauses above inserted, and they were concurred in, with exception of the following, which was non-concurred in, viz:

"Contingent expenses, including the traveling expenses of agents in their districts, $12,500."

The Clerk next read the following clause under the head of expenses of California Superintendency:

"Traveling expenses of the Superintendent and the necessary attendants on visits of inspection, including the purchase of animals and camp equipage, $5,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. In that amendment the Committee of Ways and Means non-concur. It provides for the expenses of a cavalcade of the Superintendent there, and should not be adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was non-concurred in.

The following amendments under head of California Superintendency, were next considered and concurred in:

"Furniture for Superintendent's office, $500."

"Flags for distribution among the tribes, $500."

The following amendment, also under head of California Superintendency, was next read:

"One iron safe for Superintendent's office, $1,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. McCORKLE. Unless such a provision be made, all your money there will be lost.

The question was then taken and the amendment was non-concurred in.

The eleventh amendment of the Senate was:

"Add as a new section:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, &c., That for expenses of compiling a map under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the use of the committees of the Senate, showing the present boundary of the Indian territory, and the location of the various Indian tribes within the United States, $300."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to insert after the word "Senate" in that amendment, the words "House of Representatives, and Indian Bureau," and to increase the appropriation to $500. The necessity of the amendment is obvious.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate as amended was then concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

"Add as a new section:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several sums of money appropriated by this act to any Indian or Indians, shall be paid directly to the Indian or Indians entitled thereto, in person, and not to any agent or attorney of said Indian or Indians, whether such attorney or agent may have been constituted by a written power of attorney or otherwise; and that no person shall be appointed or continued as the agent of the Government, to make any such payment, who holds, or is interested in, any contract with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act; and that before any person shall be allowed to make any such payment, or any disbursement of money herein appropriated, he shall take and subscribe an oath before some competent authority, to be filed in the Department of the Interior, that he does not hold, and is not interested, either directly or indirectly, in any contract of any kind, with any Indian or Indians mentioned in this act; and that he will not, during the continuance of his duties, become the holder of, or interested in, any such contract."

Mr. HOUSTON. Opposition is made to this amendment by various gentlemen. I have examined, as I stated this morning, the letter from the head of the Indian Bureau. He puts a case or two where this provision would conflict with the treaty; and as it has to go back to the Senate, I am willing that the section shall be disagreed to.

Mr. ORR. Would it not be better for the gentleman to make exception, than to strike out the provision entirely? It is intended to protect the Indians. Almost everything we appropriate for them is filched by agents and attorneys. If there be anything in conflict with it, let exception be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to the gentleman, I will state that I supposed, when this went back to the Senate, we should have a committee of conference, who would draw out the provision, so that there would be no conflict with existing treaties at all.

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to that course being pursued, if the committee of conference appointed by the House will represent the wishes and opinions of this House, that some such provision should be passed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I object to such understanding. No such law ought to pass.

Mr. VENABLE. I think the provision ought to pass.

Mr. ORR. I move after the words "and not to any agent or attorney of said Indian, or Indians," to insert the following: "excepting where the same may conflict with existing treaties." I suppose this amendment of the Senate is to provide against the continuance of the abuse which has been practiced by agents upon the Indians. I think it behooves Congress to look to their interests. They are incompetent to manage for themselves, and nearly all the appropriations made for their benefit go into the pockets of agents. It happens very frequently that these Indian claims are rejected from year to year, because they do not employ an agent. They finally employ one, and he appropriates fifty per cent. of what Congress donates. It is time a stop should be put to it, and the proviso I have moved to the amendment will remove all the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The objection sought to be accomplished by the gentleman from South Carolina is a good one. The necessity for this provision is, however, obviated by the fact that at this session of Congress a provision was attached to the deficiency bill, on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WOODWARD,] with my approval, affecting the purpose of the gentleman. This section is superfluous; but were tautology the only objection I had to urge against it, I should not resist its passage. It goes beyond that and conflicts with the treaty stipulations. The provision of my friend to the section does not obviate the difficulty. An attentive perusal of the following letter, which was addressed to the Committee on Indian Affairs in reply to inquiries with regard to this subject, will satisfy the committee that it will not:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, August 24, 1852. }

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, calling the attention of this office to the last section of the Indian appropriation bill as it passed the Senate, and desiring to be informed what would probably be the effect thereof in its present shape upon the operations of the Indian Department; whether any modification of it is desirable; and if so, what, and for what reasons.

I have only seen the section as reported in the proceedings of the Senate in the Daily Globe of the 13th instant. As it there reads, my impression is, that it would require every dollar appropriated in the bill for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations, to be paid over to the Indians in person, or per capita, including not only annuities, but also the various amounts for goods, provisions, agricultural implements, employment of farmers and mechanics, schools, and other beneficial objects. This would be not only in direct contravention of treaty stipulations, but exceedingly detrimental to the welfare and best interests of the Indians, as you, sir, who have so extensive and accurate a knowledge of Indian affairs, and the Indian character, can readily conceive. With respect to annuities, and, in one or more cases, to other moneys appropriated in the bill, the treaties with some of the tribes define and specify the manner in which they shall be paid—in some cases to the chiefs, in some in such manner as the proper authorities of the tribe shall direct, and in others as the tribe shall direct. Hence the regulations of this office of August 30, 1847, issued pursuant to the act of March 3d of that year, providing for the per capita payment and distribution of money and goods to Indians, contained this provision: "The President therefore directs, that hereafter all annuities and other money and goods due to the Indians be paid and distributed to heads of families, and to individuals without families, entitled to participate therein, unless a different mode of payment or distribution is expressly required by treaty stipulation." In all such cases as the latter the Indians have uniformly been averse to any other mode of payment than that so prescribed or provided for. It is unnecessary for me to undertake to show the evil results that must flow from the Government setting the Indians the example of disregarding plain and direct stipulations and requirements of our treaties with them. If not observed by us, we cannot expect them to be by those people.

The regulations to which I have referred made another important exception, as follows: "It is not intended by the directions herein contained to debar the Indians from setting apart such portions of their annuities as they may see proper for purely charitable purposes or for such national objects as may be calculated to improve their condition and to advance their general welfare, such as schools, and the encouragement of agriculture and the mechanic arts," &c. Such appropriations, in some instances of considerable amounts, have been made by a number of the tribes of portions of their annuities, which the section referred to would prevent by requiring all to be paid over to the Indians in person or per capita.

In regard to some of the amounts annually appropriated under treaty stipulations, the President is invested with a discretion either to cause them to be paid over in money or to be applied to beneficial objects tending to improve the condition of the Indians and to advance them in civilization. In most, if not all such cases, the amounts have been so applied, and with the best results. To change this course of policy and pay the money to the Indians, as would be required by the section in question, would be exceedingly unfortunate, if not in the highest degree pernicious. Paradoxical as the statement may seem, the less an Indian receives in money, as a general rule, the better he is off.

The seventeenth section of the trade and intercourse act of June 30th, 1834, provides, that depredations committed by Indians upon our citizens shall be paid for out of their annuities. This provision, which operates as a strong preventive of such depredations, would be overturned by the section under consideration, requiring as it would, the payment of every dollar of annuity to the Indians. The result would be, not only that such depredations would doubtless become more numerous, but an obligation would be imposed upon the Government to pay them out of the national Treasury, as in cases of depredations committed by Indians who have no annuities.

With respect to that part of the section which has reference to agents being interested in contracts, and requiring them to make oath that they do not hold, nor are interested in any such contracts, I am confident I do nothing more than justice to the gentlemen at the head of the Department and this office in saying, that they would instantly dismiss, or report to the President for dismissal, any agent holding, or interested in any such contract, on that fact becoming known to them. And any agent who would be so far corrupt and reckless as to disregard his oath of office and the penalties of his bond as to enter into, or be concerned in any such contract, would be but little, if at all, restrained or influenced by an oath without any penalty, such as that required by the section in question.

Another objection to the section is the delay it would occasion in the transmission of the funds required for early payment and expenditure. None can be remitted till the required oath shall have been taken and filed in the Department of the Interior, which, with respect to more remote agents, will require a period of at least from four to six months. Such delay must inevitably give rise to the most serious inconvenience and embarrassment to the public service and the Indians.

With respect to any modification of the system, I would respectfully remark, that I have none to recommend or suggest. The existing laws and regulations being, in my judgment, amply sufficient to protect both the Indians and the Government.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHARLES E. MIX,
Acting Commissioner ad interim.

HON. R. W. JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ORR. My amendment meets every objection and difficulty suggested in the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Committees of Ways and Means and Indian Affairs are satisfied that this thing should be stricken out.

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SWEETSER. I call for tellers upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment which is placed there does not reach but one class of cases. There are at least five. I hope the committee will vote the section down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must be aware that debate is out of order. By unanimous consent, the various amendments were read, upon which the question was to be taken without debate. The question is now upon concurring with those amendments as they have been amended.

Mr. FITCH. To show the inconvenience, not to say absurdity of this thing, I will offer the following amendment.

And the Secretary of the Interior shall take a similar oath, to be filed with the President, and the President shall take a similar one, to be laid before Congress, before he approves any appropriations for Indians, and each and every member of Congress shall take a similar one before voting on any such appropriation.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not in order, as it is not consistent with the question. The gentleman can make an amendment which would be in order.

Mr. FITCH. I do not see how it is inconsistent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment out of order.

Mr. BISSELL. I would like to inquire of those gentlemen who have especial charge of this bill if it is intended to get through with it and pass it in committee? If so, I am content to sit here; but if not, I think the committee should rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now before the committee is upon agreeing with the amendments of the Senate, which have been read.

Mr. HALL. I ask a separate vote upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] asks a separate vote upon the last amendment of the Senate as amended. The Chair, then, upon the previous understanding of the committee, will put the question upon all the other amendments as they have been reported. The question now is upon the last amendment of the Senate as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

The question was taken; and, upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 36; no quorum voting.

Mr. HART demanded tellers; and they were ordered.

Mr. FITCH. If it is in order now, I desire to make an amendment, which will make this thing less obnoxious. I presume that no member of the committee desires to embarrass the bureau in the honest discharge of duty. As this question now stands, it will have that effect. I propose to insert in the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] which reads, "except where they may conflict with existing treaties," the following: "or the instructions of the Department heretofore acted upon in the payment of this money." If you desire to get clear of the present manner of payment to the Indians, you must do it in some other than the sweeping manner proposed in this section, or do injustice to the Indians.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 149.

They have repeatedly set aside funds for educational and other special purposes, and in their councils their chiefs and headmen have requested the agents to lay aside a certain amount for such purposes. Unless we insert a provision of this kind, we compel the payment of this money in small sums to each individual, notwithstanding their wish to the contrary. If there is no treaty obligation to lay it aside, the agents will be compelled to pay it per capita, and defeat the laudable design of the Indians in creating the fund.

Mr. SWEETSER. Is it in order to move an amendment to an amendment which has been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the section as amended, and the Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. FITCH. There are other questions to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. For instance, the Choctaws are in the receipt of annuities, one of $3,000, and another of $600. They number some 12,000 people. Do you desire the agents to go through the farce of portioning out this money in sums of a fraction of a cent per head? You compel them to do it by this amendment. The whole section, though laudable in its object, will be evil in its effect. We should be cautious in legislating upon matters of importance in ignorance of the effect of our action. Gentlemen who move and support amendments of such character, should understand all their bearings before they attempt to force them to become the legal acts of the country. I trust that gentlemen will shape this matter in a form different from that it now possesses, or not adopt it. We should not desire payments per capita, of sums which the Indians have requested to be set aside, in council, for special purposes. They do not wish such sums to be thus diverted. Why not permit their wishes to prevail?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to make a single statement to the House.

Mr. ORR. Does the gentleman oppose the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do. I wish to make a calm statement to the House. If I am wrong, I hope I shall not prevail. If I make it clear that I am right, and every one can see it, then I think gentlemen will not accept that provision placed there by the Senate. We will take, for instance, the effect of that upon a long-established policy of this Government in regard to the Indians, which is this: that when they have committed depredations—I am opposed to amending this in any way at all for the purpose of bringing it to a direct vote—that their annuities shall be made liable to pay the damages.

What will be the effect of this section? To repeal that act so far as it makes the Indian annuities liable for the depredations that the Indians commit, and the wrongs that they do, and to compel the Government of the United States to pay for any depredations that may be committed. The Cherokees are highly civilized. They punish crime and enforce contracts as well as any white nation. They have their appropriations fixed on the arrival of their annuities, on which they are now issuing scrip, the value of which depends upon the regularity of our appropriations.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to modify my amendment, by inserting in lieu of the words "usages of the Department," the words "rules and regulations of the Department."

The question was then taken on Mr. Fitch's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I move to amend the amendment, by adding to it the words "except when in the opinion of the President of the United States it may be proper to pay the money in some other way."

Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch,] with reference to the friends of the amendment of the Senate. That gentleman must know that only a few years ago all the Indian annuities were paid according to the directions of the chiefs, and that the Congress of the United States found that under that mode of payment the Indians were so imposed upon that we passed an act, the general effect of which was to require these moneys to be paid to the Indians per capita. Since then the beneficial effects of that act have been admitted by everybody. Now, almost every Indian agent, and the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, in my own State, protest against the Government of the United States paying these moneys even to claim agents. They insist that these moneys, when appropriated, shall go, as far as the treaty stipulations will admit, and the Indian intercourse law, directly to the Indians per capita.

But, say the gentlemen from Arkansas and Indiana, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, if these provisions are passed, the Indian intercourse law will be repealed. Now, with all due deference, I say that such is not the fact. This amendment only relates to the particular moneys appropriated in this bill, and I am not aware of a single claim against these Indians for depredations; not one. If depredations be committed by these Indians, the Indian intercourse law will still be enforced, and those depredations may be saved out of the annuities due to the Indians. The Indian intercourse law will not be affected at all by the passage of this amendment, for the very reason which I have stated, that I have no knowledge of any claim for depredations against these Indians. That argument, then, of the gentleman is a mere bugbear, set up, it appears to me, without any good foundation; the only effect it can have will be to frighten us out of doing what I believe our duty to the Indians requires us to do.

But, say the gentlemen, if it is passed, what becomes of the appropriations for educational or agricultural purposes? Why, still the appropriation for educational and agricultural purposes may be taken, as at present, from the annuities. The small amounts provided for in this bill, which were, in general, extraordinary appropriations, may properly be paid to the Indians per capita. The annuities may be paid to the Indians per capita, except where the President of the United States may otherwise direct.

Mr. ORR. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, although I was very much gratified to hear the opinion that he expressed with reference to the Senate's amendment, and the one which I had the honor to introduce. My purpose now, however, is to notice very briefly, the very extraordinary speech of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Fitch.] The gentleman spoke of his regret at seeing those who are ignorant upon these subjects attempting—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is aware of the rules of debate, and must confine his remarks to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. FITCH. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. ORR. I expect to apply my remarks to that amendment. The gentleman from Indiana regretted very much to see such an exhibition. Well, sir, living east of the Blue Ridge, I do not profess to have any great knowledge of the Indian character or of Indian intercourse; but since I have been a member of this House, I have seen enough of the impositions practiced by agents upon that class in this country, to induce me, from considerations of humanity and philanthropy, to raise whatever barriers I can between the Indians and the attorneys, who are fleecing them and enriching themselves.

But the gentleman makes pretensions to great intelligence. Now, I have heard that honorable gentleman on more occasions than one, discoursing very learnedly and eloquently upon Indian affairs; and whilst I would not choose to reflect upon him any more than he has upon me, I desire to say that I have never yet received from that gentleman a single clearly-defined idea upon the subject of our Indian relations. It is a grave charge which the gentleman makes—ignorance. Where does it apply, and to whom? The Senate of the United States have adopted the amendment. Their Committee on Indian Affairs in the first place recommended it, the Senate adopted it, and from indications here, a majority of the House are in favor of it; and yet, we are to be arraigned by the intelligent gentleman from Indiana, for our ignorance. Well, sir, it may be so, but I must confess that if taking care of those who are unable to take care of themselves is an evidence of softness or greenness, I acknowledge to the charge, and I trust that the charge may always be made against me. When people who are unable to take care of themselves come within my charge as a legislator, I shall never fail to render to them whatever assistance lies within my power. Why, there is scarcely a claim that passes here but what the agent receives a large proportion—one third, in many instances, or one half of the whole sum appropriated.

The gentleman himself has referred to a charge made on the floor of the Senate, that one of the members of this House was to receive a large sum out of one of the appropriations that we ourselves passed in this bill. Now, when such charges as that are made, not only against agents, but against members of the House of Representatives, I am willing to go even further than the amendment which the Senate have adopted; I would be willing to say that members of Congress shall not be allowed to have an interest in such claims.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. VENABLE. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and desire to say a few words. I shall not occupy my five minutes. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri a very sensible one. I believe that the amendment of the Senate with the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Orr,] and the amendment which was suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, will completely protect the Indians from the grossest outrages that ever have been committed upon a poor, oppressed, and downtrodden people.

In the five years that I have been a member of this Congress, claim agents have stood around like buzzards around the carcass of a dead horse. Whenever a poor Indian gets a claim allowed him they pounce down upon him, and one fourth, one half, or two thirds of the money falls into the hands of these men, who profess to be his friends and agents. They have even filed caveats.

I heard of a case the other day in which a claim agent in this city filed his caveat with the Department, and a portion of the claim was withheld for his fee. The poor Indian comes here with a just claim against the Government. He falls into the hands of a set of borsers and claim agents, and when at last tardy justice is done him, and his claim is allowed, these claim agents pounce down upon him, fix their talons in him, and carry off two thirds of the money, leaving him the skin and bones, teeth and toe-nails.

Sir, we ought to protect the poor Indian. We know he is a savage. We know he is improvident. We profess to be a Christian people and his guardians, and yet we place him in a position that when we pay him that which he is entitled to under our treaty, it all falls into the hands of those who hang around him, and rob him of all the Government has given him.

Mr. FITCH. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. The gentleman from South Carolina need not have been so sensitive. There was no necessity of his confessing to veridancy—we have a record. But my charge of ignorance to which he excepts, was not specially designed for him by any means, nor for the House, nor yet for the Senate. If for individual members of both, neither propriety nor the rules will permit me to locate it.

An amendment of such a sweeping character as this may be, and in this instance we know it will be, productive of seriously injurious effects—effects which will be charged to carelessness or ignorance; and neither should be permitted to control legislation. With all due respect to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. Orr,] a concentration of the mind upon one idea or subject, is often productive of injury in other matters by rendering us blind or inattentive to them. The idea in the instance of this amendment, was to protect the Indians against attorneys. So far, it was all right and laudable; but the Senate have made it so sweeping, that instead of protecting them solely against attorneys, it seeks to protect them against themselves, and compels them to receive money in a different manner from what they desire; in a different manner from what the Government has heretofore, at request of the Indians, paid it to them; in a different manner from that contemplated by our intercourse laws; and in a different manner from that prescribed by the rules and regulations of the Department, which rules and regulations have been framed according to law; in a different manner from what the wants and interests of the Indians dictate. My friend from Missouri stated that the effect of this provision was temporary. I understood him to say that it only applied to this bill.

Mr. HALL. I understood that to be its effect.

Mr. FITCH. If such is the case, the amendment is less exceptionable; but if found to be designed as a part of the permanent statutes of the country, it ought not to be adopted. If it is applicable only to this bill, its evils will be limited to this year. It conflicts with our treaties; it conflicts with our Indian intercourse laws; and it conflicts with the expressed and well-understood wishes of the Indians themselves. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] says, he has never been much enlightened by me upon the subject of our Indian relations. If so, it may be my misfortune—it may be his fault. There are eyes which will not see the right, and ears which are impervious to reason.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 43, being the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope I shall be allowed to say that we are bound to lose some of the appropriation bills, unless we progress with business more rapidly than we are now doing.

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make that motion while the gentleman from Alabama is upon the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to appeal to the House.

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order. He is appealing to the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, that discussion is not in order, unless he makes some proposition to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is what I was trying to do. I want to propose that the House meet to-night. We cannot get through with the necessary business of the session unless we progress more rapidly. I move that the House take a recess till seven o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTTER. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CARTTER. Is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That motion is now in order.

Mr. CARTTER. Well, sir, I submit it.

Mr. STANTON. I insist that I am entitled to the floor. I rose to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's privileged question cannot take precedence of a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to—yeas 50, noes 29.

And the House adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 26, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On the motion of Mr. MANGUM the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, relative to the trade of the British North American Colonies with the United States and other parts of the world; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

A motion to print five thousand additional copies was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITION.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a memorial of a committee of the corporation of the City of Washington, praying an appropriation to repair the present bridge across the Potomac, or to rebuild one on or near its present site.

A motion by Mr. SHIELDS to print the above-named memorial was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That Lydia Ann Mills have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of John G. Camp, late marshal for the middle district of Florida, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, relating to the several conflicting claims of Randolph Coyle, John Delafield, and the city of Cincinnati, to certain lands, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to settle the title to certain lands in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to regulate the surveying and sale of islands belonging to the United States in certain cases, reported it back without amendment, with a recommendation that the bill do not pass, the committee deeming that there has been sufficient legislation thereon already.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, for the printing of one thousand additional copies of certain documents relating to the memorial of the Hon. DAVID L. YULEE, reported that the same be not printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the motion to print five thousand additional copies of the annual report of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, reported in favor of printing the same, and that two thousand copies thereof be for the use of the Institution; which was agreed to.

NAVY-YARD AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of certain citizens of New Orleans, offering to sell a site for a navy-yard, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to ascertain, through an examination to be made by the senior naval officer at New Orleans, with such other naval officers of not less than the grade of a lieutenant, as may then be in New Orleans, in connection with the commanding officer of the navy-yard at Pensacola, whether, in case a navy-yard shall hereafter be established at or near the said city of New Orleans, the property offered by R. B. Sumner, and others, as a site for said navy-yard and depot, is peculiarly adapted to the purpose, and to ascertain what are the best terms on which it can be obtained from the present owners, with all other details, for a purchase, subject to the consideration and action that may be taken thereon at the next session of Congress; the Secretary being further requested to report to Congress, in accordance with this resolution, by the 1st Monday in December next.

PRINTING OF CONGRESS DURING RECESS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report a joint resolution, relating to the printing of Congress during the recess, which I ask may be considered at this time.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House, and Clerk of the Committee on Printing, shall be empowered to examine, audit, and pass upon all accounts for printing and binding during the recess of the present Congress, in the same manner as is done by the Committee on Printing during the session of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

COMPENDIUM OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The same committee, to which was referred a resolution in relation to the printing of a compendium of the President's message and the accompanying documents, have directed me to report back the same with an amendment. My colleague is very desirous that it should be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. BRADBURY. I ask that it may be considered at this time. The amendment that is reported by the committee obviates the objections which were urged to the original resolution. It simply provides that the reports of the heads of Departments shall be printed with the usual reports of the heads of Bureaus, and also a compendium of reports of the heads of Bureaus, in order to enable us, at the commencement of the session, to print the usual number of documents, and instead of an extra number, to have the means of printing a compendium. It will save hundreds of thousands of dollars in a few years.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate, at the commencement of the next session, with the annual reports of the heads of the Departments, and the accompanying reports of the chiefs of bureaus, an abstract or compendium also of said last-named reports; and a like abstract or compendium of the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury on the finances, and on commerce and navigation, together with the full report thereon, to facilitate the preparation of a compendium of the annual public documents.

Mr. BORLAND. I would inquire if this contemplates the printing of the compendium?

Mr. BRADBURY. No, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest, to make the work valuable at the beginning of the next session of Congress, which will be short, that it ought to be printed.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am aware of that, but it would lead to an objection, and we can do that hereafter.

Mr. BADGER. That amendment proposes to direct the President to have prepared a compendium or abstract of the report on commerce and navigation. That report does not come to us from the President. It is not sent by him at all, but is made by the Secretary of the Treasury under the law.

Mr. BRADBURY. It only directs him to have that prepared, with the full report.

Mr. HALE. Is this a joint resolution which the committee has reported?

The PRESIDENT. A joint resolution was reported, was referred to the committee, and has been reported with an amendment.

Mr. BRADBURY. It was intended to make it simply a Senate resolution, so that the Senate might try the experiment. I therefore propose to amend the title by striking out "joint."

The PRESIDENT. Then the report of the committee is to strike out the whole resolution, and insert the amendment.

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I desire to remind the Chair that he once decided in my case that that could not be done.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is still under the impression that the joint resolution will have to be laid on the table, to enable the Senate to proceed to consider the simple resolution which is reported. The Chair has not changed his opinion.

Mr. BRADBURY. By unanimous consent, this resolution may be adopted as reported from the committee. I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT. If such is the pleasure of the Senate, the joint resolution will be laid on the table, and the question be on adopting the resolution reported by the committee.

The joint resolution was then ordered to lie on the table, and the resolution reported by the committee was adopted.

BANKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FISH, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the business of banking in the District of Columbia, and to regulate the issuing and circulation of notes as money; which was read and passed to the second reading.

On motion by Mr. FISH, the bill was ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN STANSBURY'S REPORT.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That, instead of the distribution of Captain Stansbury's report, heretofore ordered by the Senate, there be furnished to the Topographical Bureau three hundred copies; to the Smithsonian Institution one hundred copies; and to Captain Stansbury two hundred copies.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED.

The following engrossed bill and joint resolutions were severally read a third time, and passed:

An act to establish certain post routes;
Joint resolution authorizing the settlement of the accounts of James Pool; and a Resolution for bringing to this country the remains of William T. Barry, late Minister to Spain from the United States.

OCEAN MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

The bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1853, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico and back, in steam vessels;

An act for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company.

Also, that it had passed a bill making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MARGARET L. WORTH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill for the relief of Margaret L. Worth.

The amendment of the House is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be and he is hereby directed to place the name of Mrs. Margaret L. Worth, widow of the late General Worth, upon the pension roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence on the 7th day of May, 1849, and to continue for five years: Provided, That in case of the death or marriage of said Margaret L. Worth before the expiration of said five years, the pension for the remainder of the time shall be paid to the children of the said General Worth, if there be any under the age of sixteen years, and if there be no children under the age of sixteen, the said pension shall cease."

Mr. BORLAND. I would be glad to have a vote upon that, if it could be done at this time. I hope that we will refuse to concur in the amendment of the House. The bill, in the form in which it passed the Senate, passed here twice almost unanimously. The last time there were five votes against it.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will consent to lay it over until to-morrow. Senators can then have time to examine it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am informed that the bill will be lost, if it is sent back to the House. Although the pension is not so much as it ought to be, if we send it back it will be lost. It is better to have half a loaf than no bread. I would suggest, therefore, that we agree to the amendment, and hereafter we can endeavor to make it better.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I think that my friend from Illinois is mistaken. I think the bill will pass in the House, if we disagree with the amendment. After that amendment was passed by the House, it was agreed by those who had opposed it to reconsider the vote. But it was too late, and they regretted it. I believe they will pass the bill to give her $50 a month, if we send it back.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to proceed to the consideration of the civil and diplomatic bill. I therefore move to lay this bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Senate then refused to concur in the amendment of the House.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask a question. When I submit a motion to go into Executive session with a probability that it will be agreed to? I do not wish to interfere with this bill, but it is really necessary that I should do justice to the President, and to certain nominations that have to be acted on.

Mr. HUNTER. It is important that we should get through with the civil and diplomatic bill to-day. If we get through with it early enough, we can go into Executive session afterwards. If not, we can do it to-morrow. I presume that will be time enough.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be so understood then.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know what effect this motion will have upon the Florida contested-election case, which was made the special order for one o'clock to-day? That matter ought to have been settled, in my judgment, long since. It was a very great impropriety in the Senate to have suffered it to remain so long undecided. I shall be compelled to vote against taking up the civil and diplomatic bill, if it interferes with that, because I hold that it is the duty of the Senate at this session to decide the case.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not wish to say a single word upon the subject, and certainly did not expect to do so; but I appeal to my friend from Virginia to abstain from his motion, if the discussion upon the bill is to continue after the hour of one o'clock, when I hope the election case will be taken up and decided. Nine months have elapsed since the case came before the Senate. Throughout every moment of these nine months, I have been anxious for a decision of the matter. Every Senator knows that as long as it remains suspended, the usefulness of one of the Representatives on this floor for Florida must be impaired; and if not justice to myself, justice to the State of Florida, which I represent, demands that the question should be settled. The select committee which was appointed from this body upon the contested election have unanimously reported, and I apprehend that not five minutes will be taken up in the discussion of it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is due to the contestant also to say, that he has also been here the whole time waiting very anxiously.

Mr. BRIGHT. It was on my motion that this case was made the special order for to-day at one o'clock, and I have no doubt that we can at that hour proceed to its consideration, even if we should take up the civil and diplomatic bill now. If we take up that bill now I hope there will be no objection to taking up the resolution reported from the committee on the election case at one o'clock, and to dispose of it to-day if possible. I hope, therefore, the Senator from California will waive his objection to taking up the civil and diplomatic bill now.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say, that if the resolution reported by the select committee is to come up to-day, I must ask the Senate to allow me to call up the resolution to allow the contestant in the election case, offered by my friend from Florida, [Mr. MORRIS,] and laid upon the table at my instance, as I did not then understand that this day had been appointed for the consideration of the subject, in order that the sense of the Senate may be expressed upon it.

Mr. HUNTER's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853.

Mr. RUSK. Last evening, under the direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I offered an amendment to the bill providing for an additional Assistant Postmaster General. The Senator from Indiana desires to offer an amendment on the subject.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to add the following at the end of the bill:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Assistant Postmaster General shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive, each, a salary of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was passed over informally, next came up for consideration. To insert in the bill:

"To enable the President of the United States to make compensation to the Spanish Consul, and other subjects of Spain, residing at New Orleans, and subjects of Spain at Key West, for losses sustained by violence in the year 1851, arising from intelligence then recently received at those places of the execution of certain persons at Havana who had recently invaded the Island of Cuba, $25,000: Provided, That before the payments are made under this appropriation, the President of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made of such alleged losses, and that the sum, together with the reasonable costs of the investigation, shall be paid on the certificate of the Secretary of State that the same are proven to the satisfaction of the President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee, which had been passed over, was to insert the following:

"For finishing the grading, manuring, planting, finishing the roads and walks, graveling, and laying gutters along the margin of the same, and repairing the fence of the Smithsonian Square, $13,200."

Mr. HUNTER. I move to amend the amendment, by striking out "$13,200," and inserting "$16,760."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

"For defraying the expenses incurred in the improvement, and for embellishing the triangular space on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, $5,150."

Mr. HUNTER. I move to amend that by striking out "$5,150," and inserting "$5,805," to make it correspond with the estimate.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the bill the following words—

"Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That no person hereafter, who holds or shall hold any office under the Government of the United States, whose salary or annual compensation shall amount to the sum of $2,500, shall receive compensation for discharging the duties of any other office."

and insert in lieu thereof—

"Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That where the ministerial officers of the United States have or shall incur extraordinary expense in executing the laws thereof, the payment of which is not specifically provided for, the President of the United States is authorized to allow the payment thereof, under the special taxation of the district or circuit court of the district in which the said services have been or shall be rendered—to be paid from the appropriation for defraying the expenses of the judiciary."

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend the amendment, by adding to it the following:

Provided, That no such allowance shall be authorized for expenses incurred in executing the act of September 18, 1850, for the surrender of fugitives from service or labor, which said act is hereby repealed.

Mr. SUMNER addressed the Senate in support of his amendment for three hours and three-quarters, and a debate ensued thereon, in which Messrs. CLEMENS, BADGER, DODGE of Iowa, HALE, DOUGLAS, WELLER, CHASE, RUSK, TOUCEY, BRADBURY, HUNTER, JAMES, BRIGHT, COOPER, BUTLER, BRODHEAD, PRATT, MASON, and CASS took part, and which will be found in the Appendix.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Chase, Hale, Sumner, and Wade—4.
NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spangler, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, Walker, and Weller—47.

The amendment of the committee was then adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the provisions contained in the fourth section of the act entitled 'An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853,' be and the same are hereby repealed."

That section is rendered necessary by a communication which I have just received from the First Comptroller. In the deficiency bill the following provision was made:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That no estimate or appropriation of money in any bill making appropriations shall authorize the payment of any increased pay, allowance, or compensation in any form whatever beyond the amount prescribed by law in any case, unless there shall first be a specific direction for such extra payment, designating the officers to whom such extra payment shall be made."

It appears that the operation of that provision reaches much further than was intended by the mover of it originally. I am informed by the First Comptroller that it cuts off salaries which a great many clerks have been receiving for a long time past. For instance, there is a chief clerk, receiving a salary of $1,500 by law, but year after year he has been given a larger salary by the appropriation bills. The committee have had no time to look into particular cases, and make them square with this section of the deficiency bill, and therefore we propose to repeal it; and at the next session of Congress we can look into the subject, and make what provision may be necessary.

Mr. HALE. As the provision of the deficiency bill which has been alluded to was introduced on my motion, I wish to make a statement. When I introduced it, I did not suppose it would have that extensive application which I understand the Comptroller feels himself bound to give to it. It was aimed at a case which the Senate will well remember, where an individual had received a salary greater than was provided by law upon a construction given to it by the Second Comptroller, by virtue of which he paid the individual a salary basing his right to receive it upon the estimates; and inasmuch as the appropriation was as much as the estimate, the Comptroller said that Congress must be presumed to have meant to give him that sum. It was that abuse which I wished to reach. As the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance is in favor of carrying out the provision as far as I intended it, and as it seems that the Comptroller has given it a much wider application than it was supposed to be capable of, I am perfectly willing, so far as I had any agency in introducing it, that it should now be repealed, hoping that we may, by next session, devise some remedy for the evil aimed at.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. The Committee on Finance have instructed me to offer an amendment, which is the last one they intend to offer, to insert after the provision providing for paying the annual rent of the building known as Winder's Building, at the corner of 17th and F streets, the following:

"Provided, That the renting of said building shall cease as soon as the Secretary of the Treasury can purchase for the United States, and obtain a clear title to the said building, for a sum not exceeding $200,000; and for enabling him to do so the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. CLARKE. I have a very decided objection to the amendment which has been offered by my honorable friend from Maryland. It will be recollected that some two years since, in one of the appropriation bills, there was a provision made for hiring this building at a rent of about $21,000 a year. It was then said that it was necessary in order to accommodate the public offices at that time; but it was distinctly understood that, whenever Congress should indicate its intention to make the necessary appropriation for building additional wings to the Patent Office, this building would be of no further use to the Government, and that consequently, at the end of five years, its rental would cease.

The building called Winder's Building, in my opinion, is not such a one as the Government of the United States should own. It is not one that the Government of the United States should hold, as a permanent building for its public offices. This Government should have its own public offices, built under its own direction, and devoted to its own uses. You hold now the office of the Secretary of the Interior in a building rented from an individual, because Congress made no appropriation for erecting a public building for that Department of the Government. A portion of the offices—a very large portion of those attached to that Department, are now in the building which it is proposed that the Government of the United States shall purchase. In the bill before the Senate there is an appropriation of $150,000 to commence the building of the west wing of the Patent Office. Since I have been here, appropriations have repeatedly been made for building the east wing of the Patent Office. Objections were made to it, on the ground that it was not wanted for the purposes of the Patent Office; but, on the other hand, it was said that it would be wanted for some of the public offices. I have urged that the western wing should be put up, because it would be required for the Department of the Interior. From my conversations at that time with the then Secretary of the Interior, and from my conversations with the present Secretary of the Interior, I know their desire to be that these Patent Office wings should be built, in order that all the various offices connected with the Department of the Interior should be concentrated in one place.

Now, you have the Department of the Interior proper, in one building. The Pension Office, and some other portions of that Department, are, I believe, in the building now proposed to be purchased; and a portion of the Land Office is somewhere else. In this bill provision is made for erecting the western wing of the Patent Office; yet we are now asked to appropriate $200,000 for the purchase of this building. The lease of the Government already extends for it three years longer; and if, at the expiration of these three years, the Government should want it, the lease could be renewed.

I object to this purchase, also, because this building is not such a one as the Government of the United States requires. It is built according to somebody's taste, and whose, Heaven only knows; but it is one of the last buildings that ever should have been put up with the design that it should be a public building. As to its efficiency and strength I know nothing. I have never examined it, but report speaks unfavorably of it. There is around it no public ground. It is an isolated building from the public grounds. It has no connection whatever with any of the public departments. If the Government of the United States had no place to erect buildings such as are suitable for our uses, it might, perhaps, be necessary to purchase this building; but while the Government has plenty of ground, and is making appropriations from year to year, for the purpose of erecting the wings of the Patent Office, this is not necessary.

Let me say to gentlemen here, that according to the original plan of the Patent Office—which was, I believe, adopted by General Jackson, or at least designed under his special instructions—there were to be not only two wings to the Patent Office, but also a northern front, comparing with the present southern front. Whenever these buildings shall have been completed, and whenever a portion of the deposits in the Patent Office which have been brought by the Exploring Expedition shall have been placed in the Smithsonian Institution, where they are intended to be placed, there will be room in the Patent Office for all the models of inventions which are required to be deposited there, and you will have plenty of space for all the various offices of the Department of the Interior.

Why should this building be purchased? Let me tell you that it will not be more than three years from this day, when the western wing of the Patent Office is built, that you will abandon this building, even if you purchase it at the price now offered. You will abandon it as being a building totally unworthy for the Government of the United States to own, possess, and occupy. I have not examined the building as to its strength and efficiency, but I say it is built in such a style of architecture, and is such a building as the United States should not own. The Government has only taken it as a matter of necessity, it being tendered to it because it removed its archives there from their places of deposit, and placed them in one position there as a sort of partial concentration of the various offices connected with those archives.

The present lease of this building, I believe, has three years to run. When it expires, you have nothing to do but to renew it, if, by that time, you should not have your own buildings constructed with some regard to permanency and character, to which you could remove your Departments. But I do not look upon this proposition as being the direct and proper method of legislation. A proposition is made in the bill as it comes from the House, to pay the rent of this building for the ensuing year, and to that is appended an amendment to appropriate $200,000 for purchasing it. What do we know about the cost of it, and its value? Do any of us know anything of the value of the land? Do we know anything of the cost of the structure? Do we know anything about its architectural proportions? Do we know whether it is such a building as the Government of the United States should purchase as one of the permanent public offices for the execution of any branch or portion of the executive duties? I think not. But if a proposition be made to purchase the building, I should like to see it come up directly, and that a committee be appointed to examine it. Let its locality, its construction, its convenience, the method by which the public offices are to be accommodated, be examined. Let a committee see whether it is such a building as this Government should purchase. I think it is not. I think that when in this bill you are making an appropriation of $150,000 for continuing the western wing of the Patent Office, which, when built, will supersede the necessity of this building, there is no reason why we should purchase it. For these reasons, I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, the opinion which I have in regard to this building I derive from a very unanimous report made by the Committee on Public Buildings of the other House.

There are three considerations which apply to the subject. The first is an economical one. We are now paying for this building a yearly rent of $19,500, and it is indispensably necessary for the service of the Government. The Government is paying other rents besides this. All the rents of the Government in this city amount to about $32,000, of which about $19,500 are for this building; and, I believe, at that rate, it is rather cheaper than any other building which the Government rents in Washington. It is manifest, therefore, that if the Government is to use the building for any length of time, it would save money by purchasing it at once for $200,000 rather than paying rent every year. I suppose that the necessity to continue the renting of the building is likely to last not less than eight years longer; for, although it is proposed to finish the wings of the Patent Office, we know very well that we have been told that the entire wing on the east side, and a portion of that on the west side, of the Patent Office Building will be required for the use of the Patent Office. We have been told so over and over again in the reports of the Commissioner of Patents.

If the Government erects buildings near the present site of the War and Navy Departments, those Departments will require them for their purposes. They require greater facilities to transact the business of the country now than in past years, because there has been a great multiplication of population and business. The demands upon Government therefore are much greater now than formerly.

In addition to that, if the Government had buildings of its own for the accommodation of all the clerical force required in the different Departments, I hold that we should still want this building. We should want it as a depository of our public archives. Those archives are now for the most part kept in cellars, which are damp, dangerous, and destructive to them; or else in garrets, where they are liable to be destroyed by fire at a moment's warning. We shall want a depository of the public archives. They increase in quantity vastly. I have been told that forty cart-loads of them have been burned up to get them out of the way; and I see that the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, says that the archives of that Department, which are of great importance, and should be preserved to the remotest period, are now kept in the basement of the building, where some of them have been destroyed by mildew and moisture. I hold, therefore, that the Government will do well to secure this building as a depository of the public archives, even if it had a building sufficient to accommodate all its requisite clerical force.

Then as to the character of this building: it was erected for the use of the Government—erected on an understanding with the Secretary of one of the Departments, who knew the wants of the Government; who knew its interests; who knew that a fire-proof building was necessary for its use. It was known that a great loss had been sustained by the Government in consequence of the want of such a building. This building is composed of materials which make it almost entirely fire-proof. The doors are of iron, and the stair-cases are of cast-iron. In regard to the solidity of the structure, I would say that I see attached to the report of the Committee on Public Buildings of the House, a certificate from Mr. Walter, the architect, from Mr. Ward, the builder, and from Mr. Mills, the architect, certifying to its stability. It is a building, I believe, of two hundred and nine feet front on the one side, and one hundred and one feet front on the other, and is fifty-three feet deep. There are in it one hundred and thirty rooms, the same number as in the Treasury Building. There is about twice as much land as the building stands upon, and the land alone would be worth $30,000 now. There are 26,000 feet of land. The building is opposite to the War and Navy Departments, and will be for all time very convenient for them. Colonel Graham, of the Engineer Corps, in a letter appended to the House report, says:

"The walls of the building in question are massive; and they appear to be well and securely laid.

"My rooms have always been in the fourth or uppermost story of the building; and I will here add, that all my assistants and I much preferred this story to any other part of the building.

"The stair ways, of cast iron, are of easy slope, causing but little fatigue in ascending; and here we are free from noise, bustle, and dust of the streets, while in summer we enjoy the coolest breezes that pass over the city.

"The draughtsmen engaged in my office, in the most delicate drawings, have never perceived the slightest tremor.* The building has always appeared to us firm and as steady here as upon the ground floor, which is certainly a strong proof of the permanency of its construction, and the solidity of its walls."

This is the best proof of the solidity of the structure. These architects and builders testify that such a building, exclusive of the ground, would cost the Government to build it over $240,000. One of them says it would exceed $250,000. I believe it has been economically erected; that is, I believe as little money has been expended on it as such a building required. I do not believe the owner will make any money by selling it out to the Government at the price he will receive by the amendment, while I believe that the Government would economically do a very good thing, and at the same time secure a suitable building for a depository of the public archives, even if they had sufficient buildings for the accommodation of the clerical force.

Mr. CLARKE. I shall certainly not undertake to controvert the certificate which the honorable Senator from Maryland has produced, but I have only to say, that there is not a man at forty years old, or a boy of fifteen, who cannot get certificates if he chooses that anything is right and proper. If I were to obtain rays of moonshine, and concentrate them, I could get a certificate in four hours that they were indestructible. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, as to this building, how long is it since the roof went off, and went into the yard of the Navy Department, destroying a number of trees there? I think only two or three years since. I inquired, when that occurred, what was the matter? and it was said that the cross-timbers above, on which the rafters were laid, were placed directly on the top of the wall, and that the sheet-iron, or sheet-lead, upon the roof, having been lifted a little, the wind got under it and took the whole thing right off. Not long since, it was said there was an earthquake here, and that some of the walls of this building were shaken. I know not whether that was true, but I have not much doubt of it. I come back, however, to the very ground which I took in the first place, and that is, that unless this is a structure wanted as a charnel-house, in which to put your archives, so that they may be out of the way, you do not want it at all.

Allow me to say that there is already a proposition for extending the Treasury Building. My honorable friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER]—and there is no gentleman with whom I converse and associate in whom I have more confidence—proposed to me, as one of the Committee on Public Buildings, to recommend the addition of a southern wing to the Treasury Building, in order to give to that Department all the room that it requires. It is well known that I dislike calling names; but I must say that the Department of the Interior occupies a building hired of Mr. Corcoran. I know nothing about the rent paid for it, but I do not believe it is rented for less than it could be got for elsewhere. The Department of the Interior is in that building. The Pension Office is in Winder's Building, as it is called; and some portion of the Land Office is also there. Now, I candidly believe it is time that this Government should construct its own edifices for the use of its own Departments. I recollect that not more than two years since, an honorable gentleman, who was then a member of this body, (Mr. Dickinson,) opposed an appropriation for putting an additional wing to the Patent Office—and why? Because it was not necessary. He and I had some contention upon the subject then, and he produced evidence to show that the Commissioner of Patents did not require any more room, and that there was room enough in the present building for all the purposes of the Patent Office. It was then said that a portion of the curiosities that have been brought home by the Exploring Expedition were to be taken to the Smithsonian Institution. But we concluded to go on with the Patent Office Building. It has been gone on with, and one wing has been built; and to look upon it from the outside, it is a very beautiful structure.

There is an appropriation in this bill for the construction of the western wing of the Patent Office. For what is it wanted? The present Secretary of the Interior has told me over and over again, that it would be a great advantage for him to concentrate the Bureaus of his Department, and the clerks and all the branches of it, in one building, and he desires that the western wing of the Patent Office should be appropriated to the Department of the Interior. It strikes me that it is a very proper place for him. I think it is wrong to have him in one building, the Pension Office in another, and some other of the offices of his Department in another. I do not like this. I candidly say I do not like—when the Government of the United States has its $15,000,000 in the Treasury, and its three per cent. bonds worth eighty per cent.—allowing individuals, under any circumstances, to build shells of buildings for it to hire, and then with an indirect appropriation come in and pay for them. The Government does not want this building. It has got its own lands on which to erect its buildings. There is an appropriation in this bill of $30,000 for inclosing some land in the city belonging to the United States, and there is another provision making an appropriation of $5,150 for fencing in that little triangle opposite the Union office. I choose to designate it in that way, because you, sir, [Mr. BACCHER in the chair,] have more occasion to go there than I have, and perhaps you will know it better by that designation than in any other way.

Mr. WELLER. Let me correct the Senator. That was the amount originally proposed, but the chairman of the Committee on Finance proposed to make it $5,900, and when the question was taken on that amendment, nobody voted in the affirmative, and I voted in the negative, and it was declared to be lost. If it had not been for my single vote, being the only vote on either side, the appropriation would have been $5,900.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad to hear that. When the Senator does a good thing, I am willing to give him credit for it. But there was an appropriation made eighteen months ago, at the end of the last session of Congress, for inclosing and improving the public grounds. We know that a great deal has been done. There is an appropriation in this bill, if it has been agreed to—and I know nothing that has not, except the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts—for $13,000 or $14,000 for the Smithsonian Institution grounds. I have no objection to that. I want them improved. But I want the thing done in some sort of a decent, economical manner. There was an appropriation made last year, if my memory serves me right, of $10,000 for improving the grounds on the south side of the President's grounds, between the President's and the Monument. What has been done? There is in that ground at this time a little pond about as large as this room; and inside of it, by way of architectural taste and perspective, I suppose, are two little mounds. I suppose they are for the frogs to come out on to breathe the fresh air. In a little place, like mine at home, if I had no water, it is possible that I might want to see that there was water on the face of the earth, as well as soil, and might make such a pond; but here you stand right in view of the beautiful Potomac, opening itself broad, free, and fresh before you, and there, in that ground, you have a pond, with two little mounds in it, in order to give it a beautiful perspective. If the $10,000 has been expended upon that, I cannot see what good has been done. An appropriation has also been made for Lafayette Square. For that I have a great regard. It is to be the place where General Jackson's equestrian statue is to be erected. I have a great regard for that, too. There is a provision in this bill appropriating $5,000 for the foundation of that work. That has been well done. But that square has a miserable fence about it. I want a good one put there; and yet, at the rate of expense which the fence on the triangular square between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets has cost, it will cost you more than $50,000 to fence in Lafayette Square.

Mr. DAVIS. It will cost four dollars a foot.

Mr. CLARKE. Let me tell you that the mere iron itself for that triangular square cost four dollars a foot, and then you had the foundation of granite to put there.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CLARKE. I am coming to that presently. I generally speak to my point as closely as the Senator from Virginia. [Laughter.] If the fence around that triangular space be, as I understand it, about six hundred feet, and if we are to appropriate $5,900 for it, how far does it come from ten dollars a foot? Such a thing would break any man. If you pay at that rate for Lafayette Square, you had better look out for a raising or a lowering of the tariff, in order to get some more revenue. [Laughter.]

In regard to this building, I think it is not expedient for the Government of the United States to purchase it. They have got a lease of it for three years; and if the Government, with fifteen millions in the Treasury, and a credit unbought, is not able to supply its own offices, ask some State in the Union to do it. My own little State could do it. [Laughter.] I am opposed to it for the reasons stated, and I am sorry to stand alone in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I am with you.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad to hear that I am gaining strength. I am opposed to the appropriation. I think the building ought not to be purchased. If it is required as a place of deposit, as a charnel-house, where things are to be put, and it is absolutely a safe place, let it be bought for that; but let our public buildings be such as comport with the dignity, wealth, and character of the Government. That is what I say. I prefer going on and doubling the appropriation for the Patent Office, rather than purchase a building which would be of no use hereafter, and no credit to the Government.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I desire to amend the amendment. I think we are proposing to give a little too much for the building. I think $150,000, or, at all events, $175,000, would be enough for it. If we are to purchase it, I am not willing to give more than $175,000. No doubt the gentleman who came here to put up this building, put it up for the purpose of selling it to the Government. I do not know that he was invited to put it up; but, sir, it is not to be a permanent building for the use of the Government. The fact that we pay some $19,000 rent for it is no evidence of the actual value of the property. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $200,000 and inserting $175,000.

Mr. BADGER. I have heretofore voted against an appropriation for the purchase of this building, upon the general opposition which I have to the Government's purchasing buildings which have been erected by private individuals; and I was in hopes, when I gave my former votes, that before this time some steps would have been taken by Congress to have suitable buildings erected on a large scale for the benefit of the Government. I am now satisfied that we cannot look forward to any such thing being accomplished in less than ten or a dozen years. Now, if this building is to be used by us at a rent of $20,000 a year for the next ten years, we shall expend as much money as it will cost at the end of the time, and then the building will not be ours. I think, therefore, as a mere measure of economy, it is better, as we have the money, to purchase the building now, either at $200,000, or $175,000, rather than continue the payment of rent for it. If, at the end of that time, we should have buildings sufficient to accommodate us, and this is of no use, we shall be no worse off, but better. But upon looking into the report made by the committee of the House of Representatives at this session, and the statement of the executive officers in connection with it, I am inclined to believe that, erect what buildings we may for the accommodation of offices, this will not be ultimately useless, but will furnish a valuable place at which to keep the public archives of the Government, which are now mouldering away in vaults, basements, and cellars.

Mr. MILLER. Hitherto the Government has erected its own buildings. The public buildings already in this city are highly creditable to the Government. They have been erected with great care, and until five or six years ago, there was no necessity for using any other buildings than those erected by the Government. But, at the time this building was rented, the Patent Office had not been extended. One reason assigned at that time for its being rented was, that the public buildings had not been completed. Since that time a large wing has been added to the Patent Office, and it was stated at the time, that when that was finished there would be no necessity for continuing the renting of this building. However, it may be, and I have no doubt it is as stated by the honorable Senators from Maryland and North Carolina, the public business has so increased as to require the rent of the building; but my objection is to the principle of commencing the purchase of buildings erected by individuals. If you commence it, you will have, from time to time, builders, speculators, coming here and erecting buildings and then getting the Government to purchase them. And then, instead of having your regular system of public buildings erected under the control of the Government itself, we shall have all kinds of buildings put up here by individuals and purchased by Congress. I do not pretend to have any eye with regard to the durability or convenience of buildings, but—I am satisfied in regard to this building, that it will not answer the purposes of the Government, and that, if we purchase it now, as soon as we have prepared proper buildings—and I trust we shall in the course of another year; we have funds enough to erect proper buildings for the accommodation of the Government, for the War and Navy Offices and the extension of the Treasury Building—this building will be abandoned as useless. That is my impression.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a very satisfactory reason in my own mind, for voting against any proposition of this sort. In the first place, there is the Treasury Building which is designed to have two additional wings put to it, which will afford very great accommodation. It is needed by the Government. The original plan of the building requires those wings. It now stands in an unfinished state, and there are two wings to be put up to complete it. I take it that the Government mean to complete it. Then the Patent Office remains unfinished. It has no northern front, and no western front; and if now we have $200,000 to expend, why not go on and complete those buildings? It would be better to do that than to buy new ones. It would be in better taste. It would make that finished which is begun, and which will be suspended if you are going to seek other accommodations. These reasons are enough to induce me to vote against the amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. I did not hear the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, but I am told that he said that the walls of this building are cracked. I have in my possession a letter from the Superintendent of Public Buildings. He says that the stucco on the walls is of a character to show any crack of a destructible nature, and that, if there was the slightest possible crack it would be seen through the stucco. He says further, that there is one crack which is so inconsiderable, that if it were not for the stucco it would not be seen. He has had occasion to look into the walls and they are built of the best hard brick. It is manifest to any one who will look at the building, that it was constructed in a most substantial manner. That is what he says. I have heard no evidence of any crack indicated in the building, which would do any injury. I believe the building is suitable for the purposes of the Government. Indeed, we have the evidence of the officers of the Government upon that point. I mentioned the fact that persons employed in the Topographical Department, executing the finest species of drawing, never found in the most violent winds the least tremble of the walls.

As to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it is hardly worth while to consent to it. If we do not give the $200,000 we had better not make the appropriation at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment to strike out $200,000 and insert $175,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will vote to strike out because I think the building will not answer the purpose; but I will not vote to put anything in.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSK asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask if any gentleman can state what the building cost and what the ground is worth?

Mr. PEARCE. I stated that the ground contained about twenty-six thousand feet, and at the lowest is supposed to be worth over $30,000. The building contains four million bricks. The laying of these is expensive. It has a vast deal of work upon it. It has iron girders, and is covered by a metallic roof. The exact cost I cannot tell. Several architects and builders have said though, that such a building could not be put up for less than $240,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. I will ask whether it proves to be perfectly dry, and whether the basement story of the Treasury Building, containing a large portion of the public papers, is not damp?

Mr. PEARCE. I believe it is perfectly dry. I know it is in the upper rooms. The basement is above ground. There is, therefore, not the same reason for dampness in it as in the Treasury building.

The yeas and nays being taken on the amendment, resulted—yeas 17, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Meriwether, Pearce, Soule, Sumner, Upham, and Walker—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Clemens, Davis, De Sausure, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Mason, Miller, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—27.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEARCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment:

For the payment of the arrears of salary due to the late rural architect, A. J. Downing, deceased, from the first of May, 1852, to the date of his death, and a further allowance to his widow, equal to the salary for one year, $2,500: Provided, That the said sum shall be in full of all claim for the services of the said deceased, and for all models, specifications, and drawings, designed for the benefit of the United States, which are not in his possession.

That amendment would have been offered by yourself, sir, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair,) if you had not been in the chair. The reason for it is, that a balance of $675 is due to Mr. Downing, as a portion of his annual salary. The reason for giving the additional compensation is, that his employment was contemplated for a series of years, and that he had furnished a number of drawings and specifications of improvements to be made upon the public grounds here. For that reason the amendment has been offered.

Mr. CLEMENS. While Mr. Downing was superintending the public grounds, I understand he was the editor of a paper in New York, and that his time here was about three or four days in the month. I want to know if those are the facts in the case?

Mr. PEARCE. I believe he was the editor of a paper.

Mr. CLEMENS. And was in New York attending to his duties as editor. I do not understand why we should make this payment.

Mr. PEARCE. This gentleman was employed by the President of the United States at a salary of $2,500 a year, under authority given by an act of Congress. Whether it was a proper salary or not is not the question now. Two thousand five hundred dollars was his salary. It was contemplated that the work would cover a series of years. He has furnished plans and specifications. He is undoubtedly entitled to the appropriation of $675 on account of his salary, and it is supposed that the drawings and plans which he furnished ought to be paid for, although the carrying out of them, under his superintendence, was cut short by his melancholy death.

Mr. CLEMENS. He was employed by the Government at a salary to attend to duties here, and he went to New York, and attended to his business there. Those I understand to be the facts. I do not understand them to be controverted. In addition, we are now called upon to put his widow upon what is equivalent to the civil pension list. I understand the amendment embraces the payment of a twelve months' salary for services never rendered at all.

Mr. BRIGHT. If the Senator will permit me, I will say a few words. I understand that the gentleman, for the benefit of whose widow the amendment is presented, was lost, lately, upon the steamer Henry Clay; that he was at that time on his way to this city for the purpose of transacting the business for which he was employed by the Government; that he was in the habit, as the Senator states, of spending perhaps a week in each month here; and that, at the time he was employed it was understood that he should not give more than a part of his time out of each month here. He had due to him at the time of his death, between $600 and $700 of his salary. He has, as I am informed by Mr. William D. Breckenridge, agent for the improvement of the public grounds, and I believe the successor of Mr. Downing, furnished valuable drawings and documents as preparatory steps for important improvements in the various public grounds of the city. Mr. Breckenridge addressed me a letter, from which I read the following:

"WASHINGTON, August 23, 1852.
"The subscriber, the successor of the late A. J. Downing, agent for the improvement of the public grounds, having been associated with him for the past eighteen months, in charge of the improvement of the grounds adjoining and surrounding the Smithsonian Institution, and Lafayette Square, honestly believe that the services of the late Mr. Downing in the conception and design of future improvements—the execution of which will now readily and easily be carried out by the subscriber, from his knowledge of the different designs and plans of Mr. Downing—are fairly worth, over and above his salary, $5,000, inasmuch as it would cost at least that amount to obtain new designs, and to revise what was done to correspond with them." &c.

I think it apparent from the statement of this gentleman, who is now an officer of the Government, that the plans which we have in possession and have permission to use are worth more than we propose to appropriate for the benefit of his widow. Under these circumstances the Committee on Finance decided to recommend it to the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I know that my honorable friend from Alabama, if he understood the facts of this case, would not object to the amendment. Mr. Downing devoted his whole life to this department of the arts. Perhaps no man in this nation, certainly no man in the present day, had a larger experience in business of this kind. The paper which he edited was a paper connected with his business. He traveled all over the world, and came here and brought the information to us which he had gathered; and if his life had been spared, my impression is that he would have improved the taste of this capital. I consider his death as a national loss. I have derived a great deal of information from the reading of his papers, and my impression is that his models and plans will be of much more value, if carried out faithfully, than the money we propose to give.

Mr. DAVIS. When I came here last fall I found Mr. Downing going on with the operations committed to him. I had known him before through his periodical, but not personally. He was a man of uncommon taste as a horticulturist, and in everything which related to trees. His taste was happily adapted to embellish and ornament such grounds as he undertook to improve. He was here constantly during a certain season of the year. I saw him every day until the frost became so severe that he could no longer set trees. When the ground was closed up so that he could not set trees he went away until the ground opened again. Then he returned, and was here constantly superintending the transplanting of trees, many of them large, and requiring his own attention.

He was thus here far into the spring. Then he was away, and returned occasionally as his services were required. My own belief is, that he gave all the attention to the business which it required, and with great assiduity. The Government has had the benefit of his taste, and I think we ought not now refuse to make compensation for it.

Mr. CLEMENS. It occurs to me that I heard not long ago a speech from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts against putting citizens upon the civil pension list. Now, sir, without any sort of reference to the qualifications of Mr. Downing, I beg leave to say that we paid him $2,500 a year for three or four days service in the course of a month. That ought to be sufficient. He was here for three or four days in the month. His friends only claim that he was here a week in each month. Put it at a week. For that we paid him $2,500 a year. It now seems that he has been unfortunate, and has lost his life. Is that any reason why we should put his widow upon the civil pension list, and pay her for services which he never rendered? Has it ever been done before? Is there a solitary precedent for anything of the sort? Did not the honorable Senator from Massachusetts himself make a speech against precisely such a case? And why are we now not only asked to pay for services which Mr. Downing never rendered, but to pay for eighteen months' service after he was dead?

A SENATOR. Not so much.

Mr. CLEMENS. How much?

A SENATOR. Eight or nine months.

Mr. CLEMENS. Well, the principle is the same if it were but one month or one week. Why pay his widow for services which he could not render, and did not render? He was here upon a competent salary—a salary which gratified him—which he was glad to accept—and now we are required not only to pay that, although it is admitted he did not render the service, but we are required to pay him for eight or nine months' service after he was dead. Such a case was never heard of before. We have never had such a case, and I am bound to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. "The laborer is worthy of his hire;" and I believe at this moment there is no question of charity to the widow of the late Mr. Downing. The simple proposition submitted by the amendment is, to make compensation to Mr. Downing for services rendered to the United States, and those services, as I understand them, are the preparation of plans, and the giving to the country the benefit of his incomparable genius in a peculiar department of labor, which we now enjoy, though he has been removed. These plans, it appears, on evidence which has been submitted to the Senate this evening, are valued at $5,000. In pursuance of these, his successor will be able to proceed in ornamenting the grounds, and in other ways contributing to the improvement of Washington in a manner which he would not be able to do without the plans, or without the appropriation of a large sum of money to secure others instead. As I said at the beginning, it is not a question of charity, but of compensation; and on that ground I submit that the estate of the departed artist does deserve the small pittance which it is proposed to supply. For myself, I should be much happier to vote for a larger appropriation, believing that these plans are amply worth it, and that we shall all hereafter feel better for such a recognition of our debt. There are few men in the country whom we have employed of late who deserved more at its hands than Mr. Downing. At the age of thirty-seven, he has passed away, leaving behind a reputation superior to that of any other citizen in the walk of life to which he had devoted himself. I know of no man who at that early age had rendered services of such true beneficence to his country as he had done by his various works in his profession, and by his active superintendence of rural improvements wherever in the country his services could be brought into requisition. By the exercise of his genius generally, he is entitled to our regard. And now, sir, by actual services here in Washington, rendered at the call of his country, he has entitled himself, it seems to me, to this small appropriation, not as charity to his widow, but as compensation for labor done. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I am glad that Mr. Downing has found an advocate in the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] because that satisfies me that I am entirely right in opposing this appropriation. What has he said? He has told us that evidence has been submitted to the Senate of the extraordinary capacity of Mr. Downing. What evidence have we had?

Mr. SUMNER. Evidence of his services and plans.

Mr. CLEMENS. Of his services and plans! What evidence have we had? A private letter here from a private man; and who is there in this country so low that cannot get it? And it is by his successor in office at that, too! What evidence, then, have we had submitted of his extraordinary capacity? None. But suppose we had the most conclusive evidence of his capacity—is that any reason why we should go beyond the limits of duty, and put his widow on a civil pension list, for it amounts to that? If we intend to establish a civil pension list, let us establish it openly. If we go beyond the bounds of the amount which we agreed to pay him, and pay his widow for civil services, who is there in the land that may not apply for that? Who is there that may not ask that his widow also may be provided for by the Congress of the United States? And where are these appropriations to end? Who is to pay for them finally? They must come from the pockets of the people; they must come from your constituents, sir, and mine; not from those of the Senator from Massachusetts, because his are a manufacturing constituency, and we pay them a bounty. They get the benefits of all taxes levied by the Government. I am not at all surprised that he wants taxes levied by the Government. His constituents get them. You and I, sir, have to pay them, and it is a very material difference between us. Sir, I insist there shall be an economical administration of the Government. That Senator told us to-day, in one of the most infamous speeches that was ever made anywhere, that he was a Democrat. I deny it. He never had a particle of Democracy in him. None of that breed ever was a Democrat, and you cannot make Democrats out of them. But he said he was a Democrat. If he is, he is opposed to this extraordinary expenditure of the public money. We are all opposed to it, because we who live in the country and have to buy our clothes, and only send occasionally a pound of meat, or a barrel of corn, to market, have to pay all these duties. They get them. I insist that this is one of the most extraordinary propositions that has ever been made to Congress. I insist that it is a great deal more extraordinary than that proposition which was opposed by the Senator from Massachusetts on my right hand, [Mr. DAVIS,] who has the fortune to be a gentleman, which his colleague has not—"Order!" "Order!"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must not indulge in such language.

Mr. CLEMENS. I insist that we have not had before us a proposition so extraordinary as that one which is now made. We are called upon to do what? To pay the widow of a public officer who got more money than he was entitled to any how; who got $2,500 a year for a few days' service in a month, to pay for nine months' service after he was dead. Such a thing was never heard of before. It is worse than that civil pension list upon which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] discoursed so eloquently the other day. I am willing to pay the full amount of salary up to the day of Mr. Downing's death, although it was an extravagant and outrageous contract. He never ought to have had it. It was more than he was entitled to. Still it was a contract, and I am willing to pay all that we are bound to pay. Beyond that I do not intend to go.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I had formed a high estimate of Mr. Downing; that he was unequaled in the line of his profession, and an ornament to his country. His death really was a public loss. Still, in consequence of this fact, I cannot set this example—this precedent of continuing the salaries of public officers after death. It commenced with a President of the United States. This, I believe, is the second instance of it. If it once be ingrafted on the country, there will be no stopping point for it; and consequently I feel bound to resist such an appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. This is a new office which I never heard of before. I desire information of some Senators as to the time it was created. "Rural Architect!" I never found such an officer in the Blue-Book. I desire to know who appointed the officer? When was the office created? The President of the United States has no power to create offices, certainly; and if there be no law of Congress authorizing that office, I cannot tell the authority which the President had for making the contract; therefore I shall be compelled to vote against the appropriation.

Mr. BELL. I understand that Mr. Downing was appointed under some authority of law.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state that an appropriation, of I forget how many thousand dollars, for the purpose of improving the public grounds, was placed at the disposition of the President. He had the sole and full authority to apply that sum under such agency as he thought proper. He could not be expected to superintend it himself; therefore he appointed this gentleman under that authority; and I will state, I believe it was universally understood that the appropriation would not have been passed if it had not been known that Mr. Downing would be employed.

Mr. BELL. I have so understood it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I never so understood it.

Mr. BELL. I had but a brief acquaintance with the gentleman. Though I do not profess to have much experience in the line of the profession to which he dedicated himself; he impressed me most favorably as an accomplished and skillful gentleman in everything he professed to do. I have heard—but I am not able to speak with great confidence upon the subject—that he did not seek any employment at Washington; that he, having sufficient employment at home, accepted the offer of the President on the ground of the strong desire that was manifested by gentlemen, who gave the information of his rare talents and accomplishments in this department of the arts. He accepted the appointment not from any mercenary motive whatever, but to contribute his skill and talent so far as it might be approved by the President, to improve the public grounds in this city in a manner answerable to the public expectation and desire.

I must say that I differ widely from some of the sentiments expressed upon this subject by Senators. I do not remember that I have ever heard of any very decided objection being made to very liberal appropriations for the enlargement and improvement of the parks and grounds that are reserved for the public use—the grounds east and west of the Capitol; the grounds in front of the President's House, and Lafayette Square. Considerable appropriations have been made for them, and for the grounds connected with the Smithsonian Institution. These are public grounds, forever to stand as monuments of the taste of this country. We have made, again and again, improvements such as gentlemen of taste have thought ought not to stand as permanent works under the authority of the Government; and we have had to change them.

Mr. Downing lost his life in returning from his home to his duties in this place. He was in the prime of life; and I concur entirely, from what I have heard of him, in the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Illinois in regard to his rare qualifications as a rural architect and horticulturist. I understand he had no equal in this country in that line. I do not pretend to be any judge of such subjects myself; but I regard his loss as a public calamity, as has been said by honorable Senators. Such things as rural architecture; the improvement of grounds around your cottages, if you please—because the laying off of the small grounds around the cottage, is a part of the wealth even of the poor cottage of the country—are important. Upon every ground, I differ with some of the sentiments expressed on this floor; and it appears to me that there is something exceedingly illiberal in the amendment, even as it came from the Committee on Finance.

We have the statement of Mr. Breckenridge, a gentleman who is said to stand next to Mr. Downing in his qualifications for this situation, certifying that he thinks the designs and drawings left by Mr. Downing, which are original, and such as all gentlemen of taste who have examined them approve, are worth $5,000. The amendment proposes to give him the remnant of his salary, and a small sum in addition, for these designs, upon the proviso that his estate shall relinquish all further claims for these valuable drawings. The question does not stand upon the principle stated by the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS.] It is not an extension of a salary beyond the death of the incumbent. The money is proposed to be given in consideration of the value of these drawings; and I put it to legal gentlemen to say whether, in truth or in fact, these drawings, which have never been given to the public, are not private property? I take it that they are.

Mr. CLEMENS. I would ask the Senator if he has examined these drawings, and if he is a competent judge of them?

Mr. BELL. I do not pretend to any taste or skill in this subject. I have not examined the drawings.

Mr. CLEMENS. Then there is no evidence in regard to them.

Mr. BELL. It will be recollected that the honorable Senator from Indiana read the certificate of Mr. Breckenridge, who is a most competent rural architect, it is said, in regard to these drawings. But I will not detain the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I would vote for striking out the proviso in the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot vote for the amendment as it stands, because it proposes to give the money to the widow, by way of purchasing drawings and designs which belong to the administration. The amendment is worded wrong. I cannot vote for it in that point of view. It seems to be the object to pay the widow, and not the administrator, what of right belongs to the administrator.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand that the widow is the administrator in this case; so that it will be all right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That does not alter the case at all. If you give it to the administrator, if it belongs to his property, it constitutes a part of the administrator's fund to pay the debts, or to go to the children. If you intend to make a donation to the widow, I am opposed to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest, as there is some difficulty about this subject, that we confine the amendment, at present, to the arrears of salary. We can ascertain hereafter the value of the plans. I move to strike out all that portion of the amendment relating to the designs and drawings.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no objection to that. I am willing to vote for that. I therefore withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PEARCE. If the amendment to the amendment be adopted, it will be imperfect; for the ratable proportion of the salary is not stated, and I do not know that we can calculate it exactly now. I would propose that by general consent the amendment be passed over till to-morrow morning, when, having calculated the proper amount, it can be considered again.

No objection was made, and the amendment was passed over.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce have instructed me to offer the following amendment to the bill:

For the erection of a custom-house at Waldoboro', Maine, $12,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, including the site, whose completion shall not exceed the sum of said appropriation; and said custom-house shall be exempt from all taxes assessed by the State of Maine.

The district for which this custom-house is proposed, is the eighth in the United States; it is the fifth in its enrolled tonnage, and the first in its vessels. The appropriation is recommended by the Department, and is limited to $12,000. It was unanimously adopted by the committee.

Mr. BADGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that this is the eighth custom-house proposed to be erected in Maine? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir: the district is the eighth in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is also recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and unanimously approved by the committee. It is to add an additional section, as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the 5th section of the act of March 3, 1851, so far as they relate to the rate of compensation of the deputy collectors of certain ports, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the acting deputy, naval officers, and acting deputy surveyors of said ports: Provided, That no additional appropriation shall be required for the collection of the revenue.

One or two years ago the Senate increased the salary of the deputy collectors at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans.

The amendment proposes to increase the pay of the deputy naval officers and deputy surveyors at those ports, and put them upon an equality with the deputy collectors. It is recommended by the Department, and I think it is just. It has met with the full approval of the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For the purpose of sending a commercial agent to explore and examine the country on the Paraguay, South America, $5,000; and the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to detail one of the small vessels-of-war on the station of Brazil, to convey said agent on said expedition.

I had a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to this. He has sent me a letter. There is no time now to go into the discussion of the subject, but I think I can call the attention of the Senate in a single word to the broad field in South America where the commercial interests of the country may be extended.

The appropriation is simply to detail one of our naval vessels, that are doing little or nothing at Brazil, and send some intelligent merchant into that region, who shall make to us a report, to enable us to send what is wanted into that country, the staple products of the southern States. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. That amendment is for the appointment of an agent to make explorations. I believe this will be the first time we have made an appropriation for that purpose. I doubt the propriety of commencing the policy at this time.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope this amendment will not prevail. What do you propose to do? We have not got one tenth part of Mexico. Here is the whole of Central America, in regard to which we are negotiating in conjunction with England; and she, as usual, will take the lion's share. Here is Brazil, an empire; and now my honorable friend proposes to take Paraguay. Is he going to come in upon us in the rear?

A SENATOR. A "fire in the rear!"

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, sir, a "fire in the rear," and he will not take a "hasty plate of soup" to it. What are you going to do? Send one of the vessels from the Brazil station to explore Paraguay! Why, sir, it is as much as a man's life is worth, and more than a vessel is worth, to undertake to go there. It is a terra incognita. There is nobody there, except a few scattered miscreants, who have run away from the rest of South America. It is the last thing that ever should have been proposed, to go to explore that place. Go to the Cape of Good Hope, to the Bushmen, those little fellows who are not more than three and half feet high—go and open a communication there, if you please, and get a reannexation on that side; but talk about reannexing Paraguay! [Laughter.] It is at the very extremity of the earth, where all the elements are united together for the destruction of human life. Why, sir, I would prefer going over the railroad which is across Panama, and which kills about half those who cross it—and still the stock is worth four hundred and forty per cent.—with the prospect of almost certain death, than round Cape Horn. My honorable friend from Maine, who owns the Aroostook—which we got from Great Britain with the aid of General Scott—and for that I think the Senator ought to vote for him, [laughter]—wants to go down and take the other end of the continent. It is the most extraordinary proposition I ever heard of. If it was for anything within the range of mortal man's conception or knowledge, I would vote for it. [Laughter.] But when you come to go out of the land of the living, I do think it is going too far.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to read an extract from a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

"Great Britain has long since taken measures on the subject, and has now a very extended and valuable commerce in that quarter, a large portion of which should legitimately belong to the United States. The Department is not prepared to recommend that a special expedition should be fitted out for the purpose, but would suggest that authority should be granted by Congress to send a suitable mercantile agent to make such necessary inquiries, and such arrangements as he might deem advisable, or have power to make. This agent might either go out in a private capacity, or, if Congress thought advisable to clothe him with official character, then as chargé d'affaires, or commercial agent. This Department suggests that one of the small vessels-of-war on the Brazil station should be detailed for the purpose of conveying him to the different points which it might be desirous for him to visit. An appropriation of $5,000 or $6,000 would be necessary."

I only desire to say that the English Government are and have been taking very efficient steps towards securing the commerce of South America. They have established a line of steamers, which has but recently gone into effect, from Liverpool to Brazil. We are nearer to Brazil, by steam, some ten or twelve days, and we are almost as near to it by sailing vessels as they are by steam. Brazil, now, is our fifth commercial market. A large quantity of the products of the southern States are taken there. In this view, as a commercial question—one in which the southern States are interested—it is one which I think commends itself to the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I am willing to vote for the amendment; but I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Maine that the latter part of it, about detailing a vessel-of-war, ought to be stricken out. That is the business of the President, and the Secretary wants no authority for it. If we make the appropriation it will have to be done.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to the change; but I thought as this was somewhat of a commercial character, it might be proper to put it in.

Mr. BADGER. I merely suggest that, as it is the proper function of the President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Navy, we cannot authorize the Secretary to detail a vessel.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to striking out all after the appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. I take it for granted that the appointment of the agent to be sent out should not be made exclusively by the President; but that the nomination ought to have the confirmation of the Senate. It is of sufficient importance to send an agent there for any purpose, I think it equally important that the Senate should concur in the selection of the person. I do not know that I have any objection to interpose to the adoption of this proposition. I think it is very well that this Government should send an agent there, especially for the purpose of watching the operations of the British Government. Now, every one who looks at the condition of things on this continent must see that the British Government, despite of all remonstrances, is intermeddling with affairs here.

We have contented ourselves with the reassertion of the Monroe doctrine, that no European Government shall interfere with affairs on this continent. While we are standing upon that abstract declaration, the British Government is practically interfering with them; and I regret very much that the policy of this Administration has been to invite the interference of foreign Governments in the affairs of this continent. So far from carrying out the doctrine avowed by Mr. Monroe, you have found, in 1850, that the Administration now in power invited the English Government to enter into a convention in regard to Costa Rica; and recently the Government of the United States and Great Britain have entered into a convention in order to determine the rights of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, to define the boundaries of those independent governments on this continent. What I object to is this policy of inviting the British Government to enter into treaties with us; for I think the Government of the United States has assumed a position now where she has a right to claim to be the arbiter of all questions which may arise on this continent. I think that the Government of the United States is competent to adjust all those questions, without calling for the intervention of the British Government. But you have had this state of things existing, that, while the Republic of Nicaragua have had a full minister here, properly accredited to the Government, this Government has entered into a convention with the British Government to pass upon the rights of the State of Nicaragua, precluding that minister from any agency in the affair. This, in my judgment, is all wrong. I desire therefore to present this distinct question to the Senate, that, while we are avowedly standing upon the Monroe doctrine, the whole policy of the Government for the last four or five years has been to invite the interference of foreign Governments in questions which belong exclusively to the continent, and which ought to be decided by the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will modify my amendment so that it will read as follows:

For the purpose of sending a commercial agent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to explore and examine the country on the Paraguay, South America, $5,000.

I hope the Senate will allow the question to be taken.

Mr. CLARKE. I see no necessity for inserting the clause "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." I have no objection to it myself, but I do not think it necessary to put it in.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to a question of order. Is there any provision in the rules of the Senate by which we can get to a vote upon this question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. I give it up, then.

Mr. CLARKE. My honorable friend from California has talked about the connection between this country and Great Britain, in regard to Costa Rica. He talks about the Monroe declaration, that no foreign Government should be permitted to establish any new colonies here. Does my honorable friend recollect that that very proposition against foreign Governments colonizing any portion of this continent came from Great Britain? When the Continental Congress was sitting at Vienna, if my memory serves me right, there was a proposition made by Spain, and other Governments—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will confine himself to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. If the President will allow me to take the same latitude which has been taken by others, I should get to Paraguay shortly, but if not, I must stop either at the equator or here. My own point is 32 20. That is the initial point from whence I start. [Laughter.]

I was going on to say that at the time the Congress of Vienna sat, a proposition was made by the Spanish and Portuguese Governments, that the Holy Alliance should combine to restore to them their colonies upon the American continent. To that principle Great Britain objected; and it was by the proposition of Great Britain herself to the American Government, when Mr. Adams was Secretary of State, and Mr. Monroe President, that that declaration was made by Mr. Monroe. It has been established as the American doctrine, and is now proclaimed as the Monroe declaration. It was Great Britain herself which suggested to the United States the impropriety of allowing the Holy Alliance to interfere in any regulations on this continent, or to allow any other arbiter upon it.

Such is the Monroe declaration, and upon such has the Government of the United States continued its policy until the present day. But, it seems that this Administration has entered into some correspondence with Great Britain, (so say the public papers,) in which the boundaries of certain States in Central America have been regulated by a joint convention between this Government and Great Britain. I ask, if such is the understanding, whether it will be proper for the United States, at this time, to proceed beyond the boundaries of civilization, send an agent to look after a place for habitable men, and take possession of it, and introduce commercial relations with a people of whom we know nothing, without any understanding with Great Britain? [Laughter.] Sir, this is worse than the fisheries. I object to bringing in these extreme measures. This is extreme, for it goes to Cape Horn. I am opposed to it. It is not worth $5,000. Not that I am unwilling that some gentleman, a friend of the Administration, should have it as an outfit for this commercial agency. There would be just as much necessity for an outfit here, as in the case of the Commissioner to China. Under these circumstances, I am opposed to it upon every principle of policy. I cannot see that we have anything to do with Paraguay. There is nothing there that you want; and you have nothing that they are able to pay for. Why, then, open this intercommunication with the extremities of the earth? If you want an exploring expedition, send it out. If you want anybody to go there with an army, I know who will command it, and take possession of the country, and then come up and take possession of Brazil. [Laughter.] But, it is not worth while to do it. I am really opposed to the amendment, and hope the Senate will not agree to it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For the salary of the Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, $5,000 per annum, from the time when he assumed the duties of his office at said Islands.

The amendment is designed to make the salary, which is fixed by this bill, apply to all the time that the Commissioner has held his office. It is based on the recommendation of the Secretary of State. The papers were forwarded to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but by some inadvertence they have been lost. Having examined them, however, I believe the chairman will say he concurs in my suggestion. There is also another proposition before the committee, to make an additional payment to the officer who preceded the one who now holds the office. The reason for this may be stated in a few words. The present Commissioner is Mr. Severance, of the State of Maine. He went there soon after the discovery of gold in California; and I think my honorable friend from California will tell the Senate, what I could tell them if I would take the trouble to read a letter which I have received here, that nearly the same prices were paid for provisions in the Sandwich Islands that were paid in California. The extraordinary price of living is so much increased there, that the amount of the salary has not supported the man's family during the time he has been there. These are the reasons why I offer the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I raise a question of order. This relates to a salary for past services. We have decided, in relation to all claims of that sort, that they come under the rule which prevents the receiving of private claims as amendments to general appropriation bills. If we adopt this, and open the door for that class of amendments, I do not know when we shall get through with the bill. I hope the Senate will adhere to the rules for the purpose of protecting the bill from the multitude of amendments which may be offered. If this is received, there will be a large class of amendments coming in, I have no sort of doubt, in relation to other diplomatic agents. The rule which has governed us has been, that the appropriations in this bill are to provide only for carrying out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty, or the current services of the year. The claim for past services comes under the character of a private claim, and ought to be introduced as a separate measure. Unless we adhere to this rule, I do not know when we will get through with the bill. I hope the amendment will be ruled out.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see the ground upon which it can be ruled out. The Secretary of State has recommended the increase of the salary of the Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands. Whether that recommendation has been sent to the committee, I do not undertake to say. I may say, however, that the Department has recommended the increase, and every one who knows anything about the matter, knows that it is absolutely necessary that the compensation should be increased. It is impossible for the Commissioner to subsist in the most common way upon the allowance that is now made to him from the National Treasury.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not object to the amendment, so far as it proposes to increase the salary for the present year. But when we attempt to compensate for past services, it comes within the rule, and is prohibited from being offered as an amendment, whether recommended by a committee or not.

Mr. WELLER. The question is, whether it is to be regarded as a private claim, and whether the fact that it proposes to make allowances for services already rendered, constitutes a private claim within the rule. I think not. I do not see that it affects the principle, whether it be for past services, or for services to be rendered in future. The Chair, however, can decide the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether his objection extends to a case of this sort: The Committee on Foreign Relations had the claims of a good many persons before them, who acted in the capacity of chargés at different points. They were consuls. The chargés at those points, perhaps, were removed, and these consuls performed their duties. They now ask such compensation as is allowed to chargés. As the committee have intended to present an amendment to that effect, I ask, does the objection of the chairman of the Committee on Finance extend to all such cases? Will it rule them out, so that no allowance can be made for the compensation which they have actually earned by performing the duties of the office?

Mr. HUNTER. If the services were rendered within the current year it would not make them out of order. But if they are for past allowances, say four or five years ago, I think they would be ruled out. They would be claims not arising under any law or treaty, but from an equitable consideration. There is a distinction between claims for past services and for services for the current year; because the bill is to make appropriations for the present year.

Mr. MASON. I would suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it would be better not to try the question whether the appropriations which the Committee on Foreign Relations intend to ask for do or do not come within the rule until they are presented. I shall present them presently, and shall endeavor to show that they do not come within the rule.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to say one word upon the question of order, not upon the merits of the case itself. It is of a little importance that we should have some understanding on this subject. I do not understand that any exposition which has been given to the rule by the Senate has excluded the consideration of the amount of compensation due to public officers now holding office, whether that compensation is to be simply prospective, or to go back previous to the bill. If this gentleman were out of office—if he were a private man coming and asking us for additional compensation for services rendered while he was in the employment of the Government, it would be the case of a private claim. But I cannot understand that the legislative enactment of this body respecting the compensation of a public officer of the Government, whether it relates to past or to future compensation, can be considered of the nature of a private claim. I think we had better vote upon the amendment upon its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The amendment is clearly retrospective in its operation. It is for past services. In the opinion of the Chair it comes within the rule, and therefore is out of order.

Mr. RUSK. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I take it to be demonstrable beyond question that this man is in office, and we propose to raise his salary. If any gentleman will read the bill he will find that there are half a dozen such cases in it, as it came from the House.

Mr. HUNTER. No doubt of that.

Mr. RUSK. There are appropriations in it for past services. This amendment is in effect to raise the salary of a public officer. That we have a right to do. We have a right certainly to make the increase of the salary retrospective. The amendment also proposes to pay for arrearages of salary to the officer. It seems to me most clearly that it is not within the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question can be decided by submitting to the Senate whether they will receive the amendment.

The Senate decided to receive the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting at the end of the appropriations for carrying on the public service, the following:

And the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to cause such surveys and resurveys to be made within the space of fifteen miles in width on each side of the Mobile and Ohio railroad, in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, and in all other districts, where the office of surveyor general has been abolished; and that for the length of the line of said railroad through the Chickasaw reservation, in said State of Mississippi, in lieu of alternate sections, for six miles in width through said reservation, an equal quantity may be selected within fifteen miles of the line of said road in the States of Mississippi and Alabama: Provided, That no land shall be granted to one State within the limits of the other, and that said land shall be received on the condition specified in the act of Congress approved September 23, 1850.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any law or estimate for that? This I understand is an additional appropriation of land for a railroad.

Mr. BELL. The Senator is mistaken. It is not for an additional appropriation. It is not the amendment which I submitted to the Committee on Finance. I wanted that, because I found it would meet with opposition. The act of 1852, appropriating a portion of the public lands for the railroad from Cairo to Mobile, which is a continuation of the Chicago and Mobile railroad, provided that an equal quantity of land in proportion to the length of the road, should be granted to the States of Mississippi and Alabama that had been granted by the same bill to the road between Chicago and Cairo. The object of the amendment is, to provide for a deficiency which happens on the line of that road running through the late Chickasaw nation. It does not appropriate an additional acre of land; but that portion of the road which runs through the Chickasaw nation has no public land on either side. The object of the amendment is to remedy that. The act of 1850 gives in express terms an equal quantity for the whole length of that road. I had intended to propose an amendment to extend it to Cairo; but on consulting with the chairman of the Committee on Finance, he thought it would give rise to great discussion, and I therefore thought it better not to present it. This is not to appropriate an additional quantity of land, but it is to take on the line of the road, which lies through Alabama and Mississippi, within the Chickasaw boundaries, a quantity equivalent to that which was granted, but which could not be taken on the ground that the United States owned no land in the Chickasaw nation. By the treaty by which that country was ceded to the United States, the proceeds of the lands belonging to the Chickasaw nation—and there is now but a remnant remaining—is to be applied to their use, and we have no right to touch an acre of them. Then the surveyor general's office is abolished, and one part of the provision in the amendment refers to that as the necessity for the surveys. I hope there will be no objection to it, as it does not appropriate an additional acre of land.

Mr. FELCH. I desire to make an inquiry in order to get accurate information on this point. This road, if I understand it, is already provided for by a grant of alternate sections of land?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FELCH. It passes over a portion of the land known as the Chickasaw reservation. Of course the United States have no control over, or title in that land, to apply it to our use.

Mr. BELL. They have not.

Mr. FELCH. Does the amendment propose to take a quantity of land elsewhere in the State, equivalent to what would have been given if there had been public lands on the railroad line, through that portion of the country?

Mr. BELL. It proposes to lay off other lands of Mississippi and Alabama.

Mr. FELCH. That subject was one to which the attention of the Committee on Public Lands was called, and they investigated it on some bills which have been referred to them, particularly one for a road in California. It will be found in several instances that the line of the proposed road—and this is one which was passed in 1850—will run across many portions of the country which for some reasons are not Government land. Therefore, we cannot give the land within the space of six miles on each side of the road. This, then, involves the general question, when we pass over lands of that description, which are Indian reservations, or which on account of grants from former Governments having jurisdiction over them, or for any other reason, the title to them is not in the United States, whether the bills ought to give land elsewhere. The understanding of the committee was that the bills which have been passed upon that subject, do not give such lands. The principle was urged in one case before the committee, but they thought it advisable for the present, at least, not to adopt it. I think the honorable Senator will find that the bill of 1850, instead of granting the quantity of land through the Chickasaw reservation, gives no land through that portion of the country. If I am correct, then, the grant now proposed to be made is a new grant, and, consequently, if the State is allowed to take land elsewhere for the quantity specified, it will not be as an equivalent for the other land, because it is not granted by the bill. I think I am correct.

Mr. BELL. I desire to correct the Senator. The act of 1850, in express terms, provides that the States shall take a quantity of land in proportion to the length of the road; and that they shall have the same quantity that was given to the State of Illinois. I at first proposed to extend the operation of the amendment to the mouth of the Ohio river, but I have waived that for the present.

The grant is given for the whole length of the road. The Senator from Michigan will observe that there was no reservation of that tract of country. The Chickasaw country through which the road runs was not excepted by the bill; nor was it pretended that any public lands were held by the Government, but the provisions of the act were that they should have a quantity in proportion to the whole length, equal to the quantity granted to the State of Illinois. I consider the proposition to be in exact conformity with the provisions of the act as to the quantity of land provided under the bill of 1852 appropriating public lands for the construction of this road. I think the Senator from Michigan is mistaken in supposing that it did not mean to grant an equal quantity of land for the whole length of the road.

Mr. GWIN. I think the honorable Senator from Tennessee did not state his case as strongly as it deserves to be stated. These Chickasaw lands are lands of the United States, but the proceeds, when sold, go, by the treaty, to the Chickasaws. The United States never gave up the ownership. The Choctaw lands also were sold, and a large portion reserved; and the only difference is, that by the treaty the proceeds of the Chickasaw lands are to be given to the Chickasaws. A portion of these lands have been ceded to the United States at a very recent period. In addition to that, the right to the route of this road through Alabama and Mississippi is a poor country, and I am perfectly confident that the donation of land asked by the amendment would add very little to the capital that has already been granted. I think there is great merit in the amendment, and that it ought to pass.

Mr. BORLAND. I would inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if it is competent for us to do anything of this sort? Are not all these lands specially reserved by the act?

Mr. BELL. There is no reservation, unless in the first part of the bill appropriating lands to the State of Illinois. I do not think, if this amendment were understood by the Senate, that there would be a moment's hesitation in passing it. The only interest I have in it is, that the road is expected, in time, to pass through the western part of Tennessee. There was expressly given, by the act of 1850, a quantity of land, from Mobile to Cairo, equivalent to the quantity of land given in the State of Illinois, in proportion to the whole length of the road. Now, a portion of this road, from Mobile to the southern boundary of the State of Tennessee, runs through the Chickasaw nation; and the honorable Senator from California is right in saying that we own the public land of that nation, but we have no right to appropriate it, because it is bound by treaty to be sold at public auction, and the proceeds to go to the Indians. Of course, we cannot appropriate it; and it is to supply that deficiency in the fund which was actually intended to be appropriated by the act of 1850, that we propose to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have a quantity laid off in Alabama and Mississippi, south of the Chickasaw boundary, equivalent to that to which they would have been entitled according to the terms of the act for the road passing through the Chickasaw nation. As we find that we cannot appropriate the Chickasaw land to this purpose, we ask its equivalent in Alabama and Mississippi. It is only widening the limits within which the survey shall take place.

Mr. FELCH. I have not before me the act to which reference is made, but as I understand the matter, it is this: The bills all grant the right of way through the public domain, and then grant alternate sections of the public domain on each side of the road. Then there is an express provision in all bills of this kind, that any and all land reserved to the United States, by any act of Congress, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or any purpose whatsoever, be reserved to the United States beyond the operation of the act, except so far as is necessary to give the right of way.

Mr. BELL. We do not propose to take anything from any reservation. Not at all.

Mr. FELCH. If I understand it, the proposition is founded upon this assumption: that the land has been granted, in the first place, by an act of Congress, and inasmuch as that land cannot be taken by law on account of its being reserved, the State is entitled to the same quantity of land elsewhere as an equivalent. I have no particular hostility to this amendment, but I deem it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact. My idea is, that there is nothing granted by the first bill for which an equivalent can be given; that the law, instead of giving land where it passes through a reservation, or through lands which have been disposed of—a township of land, for instance, which has been disposed of—does not apply, and the land cannot be taken; therefore, of course, if it is sold, there can be no equivalent given for it.

Mr. SHIELDS. In my opinion, my honorable friend from Tennessee is correct. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands forgets the language of the bill. I was a member of the committee at the time it was drawn up. There was no exception in regard to a reservation as far as I can recollect, except that which related to the canal lands in Illinois. All the other Government reservations were left open in the bill. If so, the principle stated by the Senator from Tennessee is correct; and for the lands which they have lost in consequence of the reservation, they should receive an equivalent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The provision of the bill is, that a quantity of land equal to alternate sections for six miles on either side shall be granted. If there be a reservation, and they cannot get the land in alternate sections, still it does not diminish the quantity granted anywhere along the line. In that part of the road in Illinois, the quantity granted was about 27,000,000 acres. That is a quantity equal to alternate sections six miles on either side; but there were some parts of the road where the lands had been granted for other purposes, or had been disposed of. Still, when they could not get the lands there, they went lower down or higher up, and selected lands equal to the amount. The lands have thus been selected in that State; and now, when you come to Mississippi, the provisions of the bill are simply these: that for the extension of said road from the mouth of the Ohio to Mobile, a like quantity is granted, on the same terms, limitations, and restrictions as in Illinois. So when you find out what were the terms in Illinois, the same terms apply to Alabama; and as the Department have given the construction to that part of the road in Illinois which the Senator from Tennessee contends for, it is obligatory upon us to give the same construction in Alabama and Mississippi to carry out the spirit and intention of the act.

Mr. ADAMS. I will only add to what has been said by the Senator from Illinois, that there are certain obligations imposed upon the proprietors of the road for the benefit of the Government. They are compelled to transport munitions of war, and perform various other services for the Government, in consideration of the grant of public lands, and as that portion which passes through the Chickasaw nation is situated, as has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee, this is merely a proposition to appropriate the land elsewhere.

Mr. BRADBURY. If I understand this proposition, it is simply to make an addition to a certain appropriation of land made for railroad purposes. We have before us the civil and diplomatic bill, and if upon an appropriation bill of this kind we are to go into the consideration of all grants that have been made for railroads to supply deficiencies, it is perfectly obvious that we cannot get through with the bill this session. If there is any deficiency there is no pressing necessity to make it up now. The company can wait until another session of Congress; but it is important that we should act upon the appropriation bills. There is little or no time left this session for other bills. We have a question of privilege to be presented to-morrow, and we have been sitting from morning until nine o'clock to-day, to endeavor to get a vote upon this bill. If the amendment be adopted it is obvious that it must lead to others just as germane as it is. I think, therefore, we had better stop at once. I suggest to the Chair whether the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The Senator from Maine raises a question of order as to whether the amendment is in order. The amendment proposes to appropriate lands. The Chair is under the impression that it is not in order, but will submit to the Senate to say whether they will receive it.

Mr. BELL. The amendment does not appropriate one acre of land. I will not make a question with the Chair, but I will state that in the bill as reported, there are appropriations for miscellaneous surveys to make up for irregularities in the surveys of land, and this is nothing more.

The Senate refused to receive the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer several amendments to the bill, which I shall not debate. The first is to insert in the bill the following:

For grading and graveling Delaware avenue north of the Capitol, from B to D streets, at such grade as the corporation of Washington may adopt, and the President of the United States approve, setting the curb-stones at a distance of thirty-five feet from the building line, paving the foot-ways to the width of five feet next the curb-stones, and paving the gutters with stone, and laying flag-ways wherever necessary, $5,000: Provided, That the owners of property lying along said avenue shall have the privilege, under such restrictions as the corporation of Washington may impose, of occupying and using as court-ways, a space not exceeding twenty feet from the building line of the avenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. The next amendment is to insert the following:

For grading and graveling North Capitol street from B to E streets, at such grade as may be adopted by the corporation of Washington, and approved by the President, setting the curb-stone at a distance of thirty feet from the building line, paving with brick five feet next the curb-stone, and laying flag foot-ways wherever necessary, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. The next amendment is to insert the following:

For grading and paving with round stones the carriage-way of Pennsylvania avenue from Seventeenth street west, to Rock Creek, setting the curb-stones on each side thereof at a distance of twenty-five feet from the building line, paving with brick five feet in width next the curb-stones and relaying flag-ways at the intersection of the cross streets, $30,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. That was one of the most important amendments proposed. It is to improve Pennsylvania avenue, from the Departments to Rock Creek, near Georgetown. The Committee on the District of Columbia have recommended it, but I do not want to debate it. The next amendment is to insert the following:

For the survey under the direction of the Topographical Bureau, necessary to a correct estimate of the cost of constructing a canal basin at the terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, at Rock Creek, near Georgetown, District of Columbia, and of the estimate of said bureau, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have another amendment to offer. It is to add—

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the necessary graduation and repair of the road leading from Maryland avenue, at the boundary of Washington city, to the boundary line of the District of Columbia, in the direction of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, according to its original design: Provided, That all right, title, and interest which remain in the president, directors, and company of the Columbia turnpike road, under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to incorporate a company for making certain turnpike roads in the District of Columbia," approved April 20, 1810, shall be extinguished so far as they affect said road, by legal proceedings or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, before any portion of such appropriation shall be expended for the purpose aforesaid.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the proper grading, graveling, and planting with trees, of the Maryland avenue, from Capitol square to the boundary of Washington city, where the said avenue connects with the turnpike road: Provided, That the graduation, regulation, construction, and repair of said avenue and road, the allowance for the same, and the economy and accountability for all expenditures under this act, be placed under the direction of an officer of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, to be designated by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I ask leave to offer the following amendment:

For defraying the expenses of surveying and marking the boundary line between the States of Missouri and Iowa, under the recent decision and order of the Supreme Court, $11,042 68.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer sundry amendments to this bill, the first of which is to insert—

For outfit and salary of a Minister Resident at Frankfort-on-the-Main, $12,000.

The Committee on Foreign Relations have instructed me to offer this amendment from a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee by the Secretary of State, on the 16th of August, 1852, in which he says:

"By direction of the President, I have the honor to state, that in consequence of the appointments of diplomatic agents now in contemplation, and deemed important to the public service, an appropriation will be needed for the following objects:

"For outfit and salary of a Minister Resident at Frankfort-on-the-Main, $12,000."

I have taken some pains, since the receipt of this letter, to inform myself of the propriety, so far as I could judge, of opening diplomatic intercourse with the German Diet, which meets at Frankfort, as is known to Senators, and I have thought it a matter of public interest that it should be done. At Frankfort, where the Diet meets, all the principal courts of Europe, and most of the smaller courts, are now represented, and matters of great commercial interest are there determined and arranged, in which, I think, we should participate.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. We have appropriated for a large number of outfits. There is a new mission to be created just at the outgoing of an Administration, when in three months we meet again, and can act on this matter then if it should be found to be proper. I think we have already appropriated enough for outfits and for missions at the close of an Administration. This subject was before the Committee on Finance, and I do not believe a member of that Committee was in favor of it. I hope the proposition will not prevail.

Mr. CLARKE. I agree with the honorable Senator from California, in the wish that this appropriation may not be made. Why, the Government of the United States have tried this once. They had a Minister at Berlin, and he was commissioned to go down to Frankfort and undertake to find some German Government there. He went, and when he got there, he found that the whole substratum dropped away from under him. He was there as an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, and no Government could be found near him. He lost his mission to Berlin thereby; and I do not know but that the last printing bill we passed provided for him.

Now, you have got a Minister to Berlin, you have got a Chargé in Austria; and I suppose a Chargé at Denmark, or will have one in a few weeks. Why, therefore, I ask, should a mission to Frankfort-on-the-Maine be created? What is there to call for it? If there is a German Diet to assemble there, the Minister at Berlin, who has very little to do, and who is a man of high talent and acquirement, can go, as Mr. Donelson went, to Frankfort, and he might as well go there as stay at Berlin. The object is simply to provide an outfit and salary for some favorite of this Administration, for the very purpose of drawing so much from the Treasury of the United States.

What great relations have we that can be effected by this mission to the German Diet? There is no Zoll-Verein to be discussed there. There are no other relations of Germany which affect us. I think we have had enough of them within the past few years. I do not believe such a mission is necessary. I do not believe it is proper that the United States, at this time, should make the appointment. If any great international question arose—if there were to be a Congress of Nations there, it might be well enough that the United States should be represented there. But a minister is to go to Frankfort-on-the-Maine and meet with certain delegates from certain German Principalities, who will be allowed to stay there until the Emperor of Austria, or the Emperor of Russia, or the King of Prussia, tells them to disperse, and then the whole substratum of this mission will have sunk to the ground at once. I think it is rather derogatory to the United States to be engaged in such a business. Under these circumstances, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PRATT. I consider Frankfort-on-the-Maine as a very important commercial point, and I think, perhaps, it would be as important as any point at which we could have a minister. I know it is a point in which the constituency which I represent are most deeply interested. The people of that region consume tobacco, which is made in my country, and our present commercial relations with them are very detrimental to our interests. We want a minister sent there that we may have some commercial treaty entered into with the Germanic Confederation, by which our products may be taken without the exorbitant tax which is now laid upon them. I do think that Frankfort-on-the-Maine is as important a point for a mission as any which the bill embraces or may embrace.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer the following amendment:

"For compensation to Peter Parker, as acting Chargé d'Affaires at Canton, China, for two years from the 24th of May, 1850, to the 24th of May, 1852, which shall be in full for all demands for such services for the period named, $4,000."

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any estimate for this?

Mr. MASON. I have here a letter from the Secretary of State in regard to the subject, which I will read, if desired.

Several Senators. It is not necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer another amendment, to come in after the one just adopted. It is to insert:

"For compensation to Theodore S. Fay, Secretary of Legation at Berlin, as acting Chargé d'Affaires at that place, at various times whilst the mission was vacant, between the 18th day of July, 1848, and the 10th day of December, 1851, by direction of the Department of State, the same being the difference in the salary of a Secretary of Legation, and a Chargé d'Affaires, and which, with the sum of $685 54, appropriated by the act approved March 3d, 1851, shall be in full for all services to said 10th day of December, 1851, $3,153 74."

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. MASON. He is now in office as Secretary of Legation to Berlin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am further instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer another amendment, to come in after the one just adopted. It is to insert:

"For compensation to Buckingham Smith, late Secretary of Legation to Mexico, as acting Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico, during the absence of the minister of the United States from that country, from the 20th of January, 1851, to the 8th of October in the same year, being eight months and thirteen days, $1,700 93, which shall be in full of all demands for such service for the period named."

It is proper that I should say, as the chairman of the Committee on Finance has made the inquiry in reference to other amendments, that Mr. Buckingham Smith is not now in office, but I do not consider that the amendment is prohibited by the rule. It is to extend to this gentleman the same pay which has always been extended to a Secretary of Legation who has been placed as Chargé d'Affaires, ad interim, by the Department, and who has incurred the expenses of the station.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer an additional amendment, to come in after the one last adopted. It is to insert:

"For compensation to Charles D. Arfardson, Consul of the United States at Stockholm, Sweden, for diplomatic services, rendered as Chargé d'Affaires at that place, by instruction of the Secretary of State, from the recall of Mr. Ellsworth to the arrival of Mr. Schröder, appointed Chargé, from 24th July, 1849, to the 24th day of April, 1850, a period of eight months and twenty-nine days, being one half of the salary of a Chargé d'Affaires, and in full for all such services for the period named, $1,681 25."

I wish merely to say to the Senate that this is a different class of cases from those which have just been adopted. Here is a case of a consul who, by instruction of the Department, took charge of the legation, in the absence of the Chargé d'Affaires, and to whom the committee has allowed, not the full pay, but one half the pay of a Chargé. The reason for adopting that principle by the committee, was this: We pay a Secretary of Legation the salary of a Chargé d'Affaires when he performs these duties ad interim; and it is done always by deducting from it his salary as Secretary of the Legation. But it is different in the case of a Consul who has no salary; and we have thought that it would be right to consider that his emoluments as Consul, whatever they were, should be set off against the salary of a Secretary of Legation, and we propose, therefore, to pay him one half of the salary of a Chargé.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am also instructed by the same committee to offer another amendment, to come in after the one last adopted:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury cause the accounts of Joseph Balestier, late special agent of the United States in Asia, to be settled in such manner as to allow to him his traveling and other necessary expenses incurred in returning to the United States, after receipt of notice of the termination of his mission; and that his salary as special agent be also allowed, from the time when it was discontinued, until a reasonable time after his return, not exceeding six months—to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.”

The Committee on Foreign Relations made a report, accompanied by a bill to pay this money to Mr. Balestier, who was a special agent sent abroad by a former Secretary of State; and in their report, they stated the reasons for the favorable consideration of the demand. I will read it to the Senate. The committee report:

“That the petitioner, having resided for many years at Singapore, in the East Indies, as consul of the United States, returned home in the year 1849, and tendered a resignation of his office, on the ground that its emoluments were not adequate to the expenses it involved.

“Whilst thus in communication with the Department of State, it was determined by the President to send a special agent to the East Indies, and to various parts of southern Asia, for purposes fully set forth in a letter from the Secretary of State to Mr. Balestier, dated August 16, 1849, accompanying the petition, and the latter gentleman was selected for that service.

“The peculiar qualifications of Mr. Balestier for these duties, resulting from an intimate acquaintance with the countries he was to visit, and the fidelity and ability with which he had served the Government whilst consul at Singapore, are fully admitted in the correspondence of the Department; and it would appear that Mr. Balestier was induced to accept this new service upon a representation that it would be recommended to Congress to place the consulate at Singapore on such footing, in regard to salary, as would enable him to remain there as consul when his special mission should be ended.

“By his letter of appointment, above referred to, Mr. Balestier was to be paid at the rate of $4,500 per annum whilst so employed, and in addition his ‘travelling and other necessary expenses’ were to be allowed him.

“Whilst on this special mission the agent was to be conveyed to the various points indicated in his letter of instructions in some of the public vessels in those seas.

“It appears further from the correspondence of the Department that, after concluding a convention of ‘friendship and trade’ with the Sultan of Borneo, Mr. Balestier was landed in China from the Plymouth, under an arrangement with Commodore Voorhees that after replenishing his supplies he would again put to sea with him, with a view to the completion of his mission. But before being ready to do so, that ship was unexpectedly recalled home.

“By letter of May 16, 1850, Mr. Balestier was informed by the Department of State, (the Plymouth having returned home,) that the steamer Jamestown would be ordered to receive him on board, and to proceed with him to the completion of his mission; and whilst waiting at Batavia her arrival, he received a letter from the Department terminating his mission, and informing him that his salary would cease after a reasonable time (fixed by the letter at little more than sixty days) allowed for the dispatch to reach him.

“Thus his salary was made to cease on the 20th April, 1851, and he claims that it should be paid him from that date until his arrival in the United States, together with his travelling expenses home.

“It appears to the committee that, although at the time of Mr. Balestier’s departure on this special mission, it was intended that at its close he should remain at Singapore and resume his duties as consul, yet that such intention was based upon the expectation, on both sides, that the consulate would in the mean time be made a salaried office. Such not being done, he returned home as specially as circumstances would admit.

“The committee are satisfied that all the duties required of the agent were discharged by him with zeal and fidelity, and entirely to the satisfaction of the Government; and they recommend, therefore, that he be allowed the continuance of his salary as claimed, and his travelling expenses back to the United States, and report a bill accordingly.”

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I have gone through with the amendments which I had to offer by the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I now, of myself, offer the following amendment to the bill:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time after the 1st day of January next, to issue to the State of Texas such portion of the stock mentioned in the first proviso of the fifth article of the third section of the act entitled “An act ‘proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by the said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico,’ approved September 9th, 1850, as shall be equivalent in amount to the releases of the claims of the creditors of Texas against the United States which shall be then filed at the Treasury as in said article is provided; and in like manner from month to month to issue the said stock equivalent to such like releases as may be thereafter filed, until the whole amount of the five millions of dollars reserved by said article is exhausted.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Virginia not to press that amendment. It will lead to hours of discussion. It is one of the most complicated questions that can be presented to Congress. It is well known that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] has reported from the Finance Committee a bill, accompanied by an elaborate report, which bill is entirely different in its provisions from this proposition; and it will lead necessarily to a very prolonged discussion. I hope, therefore, that the Senator will not press the proposition at this late period of the session.

Mr. MASON. I have no disposition in the world to get up a discussion; but I can state in three minutes what will be the effect of the amendment, and the Senate can then determine upon the propriety of adopting it. By the law of 1850, adjusting the boundaries of Texas, the United States agreed to pay to that State the sum of $10,000,000, by an issue of five per cent. stock, redeemable in fourteen years; $5,000,000 of that stock were to be paid to Texas on her accepting the terms of the law; the remaining $5,000,000 were to be reserved at the Treasury under the following proviso:

“Provided, That no more than five millions of said stock shall be issued until the creditors of the State holding bonds and other certificates of the stock of Texas, for which duties on imports were specially pledged, shall first file at the Treasury of the United States releases of all claim against the United States for and on account of said bonds and certificates in such form as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and approved by the President of the United States.”

Some two or three months since I presented a petition on behalf of two ladies, one of them a constituent, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, setting forth that as this law was construed at the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury considered himself prohibited from issuing any portion of that stock until every creditor of Texas of the class described in the proviso had released the United States; and thus it was stated in the petition, that the petitioners, holding an amount of that stock which made it a matter of moment to them to receive the money, never could be paid out of those five millions until every creditor of Texas of that class should file releases.

In considering the subject, I did not see any reason, so far as the United States was concerned, why they should not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue that stock as fast as the releases came in. I am perfectly aware that the State of Texas, since the passage of the law of 1850, has passed an act determining how she will pay her debt.

Mr. RUSK. It was before the passage of the law.

Mr. MASON. I am told, and I have no doubt correctly, that the State of Texas, before the passage of the act, passed a law determining in what proportion she would pay that debt; in other words, that it should be scaled at prescribed rates. I have not felt myself at liberty to enter into the consideration of the subject how Texas proposes to pay the debt. Whatever my opinions may be, they are not to be expressed here. She is to determine for herself, upon her own ideas of propriety, what to do with her creditors. I have nothing to do with that subject. My object alone is to say, that I do not believe the interests of the United States, which I am here to represent, will be affected by authorizing the stock to be issued as fast as the releases come in; and that is the whole object of the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I do not intend to go into the merits of this question at all. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to this fact, that the proposition now made by the Senator from Virginia has been rejected by the Finance Committee. The memorial to which he alludes was referred to that committee, and they have reported against it. The Committee on Finance have brought forward another proposition—one of great importance, and it will lead to a great deal of discussion. I do not pretend to go into the merits of the question; all I ask is that we should go on with this bill. Many of us have amendments to propose which will not lead to discussion; and it is the interest of almost every Senator that we should not introduce into the bill any question of so great importance as this, and one which will consume so much time.

Mr. BRIGHT. If it be the pleasure of the Senator to consider this subject upon the civil and diplomatic bill, I think I hazard nothing in saying that we shall not get through to-night. It involves the expenditure of an immense amount of money, it is vastly interesting to a great number of persons.

Several SENATORS. Let us take the vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. If it is the pleasure of the Senate not to entertain the proposition, I will not consume time. I am prepared to go on.

Mr. CLEMENS. I beg to suggest that we had better pass over this amendment informally. If it be pressed to a vote to-night, it must be discussed. So far as I am concerned, I am interested in this matter, on account of my own State. My State is one of the creditors of Texas. We are willing to trust Texas. We believe that Texas will pay us; at all events, we are willing to trust her. But if this subject is to be gone into now, I know it must be discussed, and we cannot get through with the bill; and if it is intended to insist upon the consideration of this amendment, I shall move an adjournment.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Committee on Finance had before them the petition referred to by the honorable Senator from Virginia—the petition of Mrs. Bonnycastle, who asks the repeal of this proviso. It was considered at length; and the prayer of the petitioner was overruled; and the committee, I believe, were unanimous, with the exception of the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] in favor of the bill reported by the honorable Senator from Maryland, which proposes an entirely different plan from that suggested by the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON.] It was well understood this morning, by the Committee on Finance, that if either the proposition now submitted by the Senator from Virginia, or the bill reported by the Senator from Maryland, was offered as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill, it would exhaust the residue of the session; and the committee came to the conclusion to resist any proposition to place either one of them on the bill.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

Mr. BRIGHT. If that be the pleasure of the Senate, we need not waste time in discussing the subject. And for the purpose of testing that question, I submit to the Chair to decide whether the amendment is in order under our rules.

Mr. MASON. There is an existing appropriation of $5,000,000, but the money, according to the original law, was not to be expended until certain conditions as to the filing of releases were complied with. The purpose of my amendment is to repeal that proviso, and direct the mode in which an existing appropriation shall be expended. I submit, therefore, to the Chair that it is perfectly in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) A question is raised whether or not the amendment is in order. The 30th rule of the Senate is the only one which relates to questions of order on general appropriation bills; and it excludes amendments which propose “additional appropriations” out of the public Treasury, except in certain cases. This amendment, the Chair understands, proposes to make no appropriation; it is, therefore, in his opinion, without going into any further reasoning, clearly an amendment that is not excluded by the rule, and which it is competent for the Senate to entertain.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, so far as the State of Texas is concerned, and so far as I represent it, I have, on this occasion, to express my sincere regret that the subject has not met with the earlier attention of the Committee on Finance, and that it has not been earlier submitted to the Senate for its action. For some reason it has not been presented in any shape, until the present moment. If the Senate were to act upon it, and to adopt the measure now proposed, I believe it would not only benefit the creditors of Texas, but it would obtain all the ends of justice that they can ever expect or that Texas can ever accord to them, which will, I think, be complete. I have only risen to express the sincere desire that the amendment may meet with the favorable consideration of the Senate, and be at once adopted. If it leads to discussion, we have no time further to consider it without interfering with important business; and I shall submit to the decision of the Senate. Whether they will act upon it or not, Texas will take care of herself, and her creditors, too, if she can.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, if the State of Texas and her creditors were the only parties concerned, I should not be inclined to offer the least opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. But the Senate must all know that the United States are concerned—directly concerned; that it was the supposed liability of the United States, which induced us to make that provision in the bill of 1850, by which five of the ten millions of stock, which the bill proposed to grant to Texas, were reserved and retained in the Treasury, until releases should be filed by the creditors of Texas of a certain class. That class of creditors, as the Senate will remember, were those who held bonds for which the revenues of Texas, arising from imports, had been pledged. It had been alleged here, that the United States were liable for the bonds for which these revenues were so pledged. Even during the discussion of the annexation of Texas, I well recollect that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis,] in the course of a speech which he made on that occasion, produced one of the revenue bonds of Texas, held it up, showed it to the Senate of the United States, and urged it as an argument against annexation, that we should be inevitably obliged, at some future day, to pay that class of debts, at all events. That was one of the considerations which induced the Congress of the United States to agree to give to Texas, by the bill of 1850, the large sum of $10,000,000. It was held that the United States were liable—at all events such was the opinion of a great many persons, and probably of a majority of Congress—because, if the United States upon the annexation of Texas took possession of the funds which were pledged by that Republic to one class of her creditors, they must take those funds cum onere; they could not be diverted from the purpose to which they had been pledged by the Government of Texas; and when they were received into the Treasury of the United States, the United States having so diverted them became liable, at least in some degree, to the parties to whom those bonds were pledged.

Well, sir, that being the case, the United States, having that view, reserved the five millions, and declared that they should not be paid over to Texas until the creditors filed their releases. It is manifest, when we come to consider this proposition, that we are considering that which does not concern Texas and her creditors alone, but which concerns the Treasury of the United States. Texas has passed a law proposing the liquidation of her debt, and has classed her creditors variously.

I have not yet ascertained the exact amount of those claims for which her revenues from customs were specially pledged by that name, or generally as revenues, or as being made receivable in payment of public dues. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the opinion which he has filed on this case, has stated that he supposes that the class of claims which came under that description, are not to be confined to those claims for which the revenues from customs were pledged on the face of the bonds, but that other classes, also, are equally pledged, though in a different form. For example, some of these obligations of Texas are made receivable for all public dues. If they are receivable for all public dues, they are receivable in payment of duties on imports; and if so, duties on imports, be may considered as pledged for their payment. Texas, by the act of their Congress, though it does not appear on the face of many of her obligations, pledged all her revenues for the payment of those obligations prior to January, 1840. Of course, a pledge of revenue from all sources, included a pledge of revenue from customs, just as effectually as if that source of revenue was specially named; since otherwise a general pledge of the revenues would be a pledge of no particular item of revenue at all. These are classes of which we were not aware at the time we passed the act of 1850. These classes amount to a much larger sum than the five millions reserved, and hence it is that the United States become interested; for these different classes of claimants amounting to more than the five millions, it follows, that if we allow these claims to be admitted by payment to one portion of the creditors, still we would remain liable to another portion, and so we should not escape that which it was our purpose to avoid when we made the reservation.

Texas has scaled her debts—that is, she proposes to liquidate them by paying some creditors the par value, as we call it, or the ostensible value, as they call it, at the treasury of Texas; others she proposes to pay at the rate of seventy cents on the dollar; another class at fifty cents, and another, I think, at twenty cents on the dollar. With regard to some of these claims, Texas alleges that she received only so much as she is now willing to pay—that those who took her obligations bought them under par, or advanced less than their nominal amount. Then again, in regard to some classes, it is impossible to ascertain what the different creditors have advanced on those bonds—some having given more, and others less. These Texas has averaged. This proceeding is not satisfactory to those who have been scaled at the low rate; and they, naturally enough, are disposed to hold, not Texas only, but the United States liable for the whole amount of what is due upon the face of the bonds. They say—and it is very difficult to deny it—that, at the period when they took those obligations, the affairs of Texas were in a very critical, if not almost desperate, state; that the reduced rates at which they paid for their bonds was but fair, when you consider the risk they run; and they say that they are entitled to all, now that Texas has got out of her difficulties, and especially as the United States have in some measure acknowledged their liability for them. And then, as it has not been the practice of the Government of the United States to scale her debts—to refuse to pay her liabilities in full—it is difficult for us to say that we will sanction any proceeding by which payment for one portion of these debts at one rate should be paid at the Treasury, at a rate which will leave a remainder of the five millions insufficient to pay the other creditors at the same rate.

I wish to say that I trust these remarks will not be considered offensive to Texas. It is impossible to avoid speaking of the effect of the scaling act; but neither in the report of the Committee on Finance, nor in any remarks which I may make, is there any desire to cast any reproach upon that State. On the contrary, I have endeavored to avoid any expression which might justly cause irritation.

I suppose that if you adopt this proposition of the Senator from Virginia, the consequence would be, that something like $1,800,000 would be paid out of the Treasury of the United States in favor of the claimants, scaled at the high rate, and they most probably would be satisfied; but those scaled at the low rates would be utterly dissatisfied; and they would hereafter be calling on the Treasury, and calling, until at last, I have no doubt, we should yield to their demands, and exhaust not only the whole amount of the $5,000,000 left, after the $1,800,000 were paid, but even $6,000,000 or $7,000,000—to which, with the accumulated interest, in the course of a few years, the remainder of the debt would amount. If we adopt this amendment, the amount remaining of the $5,000,000 will not more than one half satisfy these demands.

Now, will the United States, under these circumstances, give their sanction to a proposition by which one class of creditors, having quite an equal claim upon them as the other class, shall be paid at the Treasury out of this reserved fund, at the larger rate at which their claims were scaled, and leave the others to receive the reduced rate at which they were scaled, or wait an indefinite series of years, besieging us all the time for the full rate which they say they have the right to demand, and which, according to our usage, we have not a right to deny? If we are not prepared to say that we will discriminate between the classes who have equal claims against the United States, we must reject this amendment.

The Committee on Finance have, through me, submitted a proposition which we believe will be satisfactory to all the creditors of Texas. That proposition is to appropriate eight millions three hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars ($8,333,000) in bonds bearing an interest of three per cent., to be divided equally among all the claimants according to their claims. I do not propose now to vindicate that bill, but I shall be prepared to do so whenever it comes up properly. We hope that it will prove satisfactory to Texas, as we are sure it will be to the creditors. But while that is pending, it seems to me that we can scarcely, without entering into its consideration, undertake to dispose favorably of this proposition of the Senator from Virginia. I will not pursue the debate further. I have stated these considerations in order to show the difficulties in the way of the adoption of the proposition of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not propose to discuss this amendment at all. I should be in favor of it, if it could be voted on without debate; but I am not disposed to risk the appropriation bills by a long debate on this subject; and how I shall vote on the amendment will depend on circumstances. I reserve my vote for the occasion. If the vote could be taken without debate, I should certainly go for the amendment of my colleague; for I think it a better proposition than the one which has been reported from the Finance Committee. I should not have risen now, but I might seem to have been committed by the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, in relation to that matter. It was my desire that this bill should not be encumbered with either proposition. If there were time to consider it, I believe it would be the duty of the Senate to take up the proposition of my colleague, and contrast that with the one reported by the Committee on Finance, and calmly and carefully to consider them both. I prefer that of my colleague.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, without the reservation having been made in the law of 1850, I should never have supposed for one moment that the Government of the United States were liable for any portion of the debt of Texas. Nor do I believe that by any but an open declaration of theirs can they ever assume the responsibility of her debts. It would have been proper to have ascertained from Texas what was the actual amount of debt for which the revenue arising from imports was pledged. That revenue was especially pledged by Texas for the redemption of loans and for nothing else. It was not pledged as to any issues. Texas has not repudiated any of her liabilities. She has arranged that by her municipal regulations. She had a right to do that. She made several pledges of her revenue for different issues. But she made no special grant or pledge of the revenue arising from imports except for the redemption of her loans. She might appropriate that especially, and she might receive in consideration of the duties what she pleased; and it would not affect the character of the pledges given. She is competent to regulate her own matters, and she will reserve that power let the United States take what action they please.

All that I have to say on this question is, that I regret extremely, that after a session of eight months, this is brought in as a subject of discussion before the Senate within the last nights of the session. Texas would have been prepared, and her representatives in the Senate would have been prepared, to have taken the part which behooved them. We do not want to interfere with the United States. We wish only to maintain the fair construction of the laws of Texas, and her liabilities to her creditors.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I shall certainly vote against this amendment as now proposed; and I shall vote against it, because I think there is no time for a discussion of the principles involved in it, and the relative importance of the two propositions—this and the one reported by the Finance Committee. Now, you have two distinct propositions involving a variety of questions. I have not had time to examine the subject, because the report of the committee was only laid on our desks within the last four or five days. But there is enough known to me to satisfy me, that there is a serious question to be determined. Is this the proper time to do it? Ought this bill to be interfered with? Further; ought you to treat the opinion of the majority of the committee, to whom you referred this matter, and who have made a report adverse to the proposition now under consideration, with so much disrespect as to pass it without full discussion and debate? In my opinion, as this amendment now comes before the Senate, and without reflecting upon its merits, I shall vote against it, because I have no time to consider it; nor do I think the bill ought to be embarrassed by bringing the question now before the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have not now time to say what I would wish to say upon this subject, but I will say one thing pretty decidedly, that I think Texas ought to be the administrator of her own affairs; and when the United States undertook to supervise and correct her and assume for Texas a responsibility which she is not disposed to assume for herself, it is the climax of Federal assumption.

Sir, some gentlemen say there is not time to consider this subject; others say if there were time, it ought not to be considered one way or the other; but I choose to say that there is time enough to consider this in any point of view in which I believe the subject ought to be considered, and that is, to allow those who may be willing to receive their money according to the scale of Texas, to come in, file their releases, and receive their money. What objection is there to that? That is the object of the amendment of my honorable friend from Virginia.

There is now an injunction upon that; and upon what ground? That by delaying this subject, and managing, perhaps, upon a very high consideration of political morality—no speculation, of course; I suppose speculation has nothing to do with this subject—the Federal Government is to rebuke Texas by saying to her, "You have not scaled your debt correctly, and we will assume to honor a draft which you do not choose to pay, on the ground that you have disgraced yourselves." That is the amount of it. We have said to Texas, "Say what you owe, and we will pay it; and to save ourselves from any further liability hereafter, we will give you $5,000,000 positively, and $5,000,000 on certain conditions, that your creditors file releases." Well, all do not come in. Here are women and children absolutely perishing because they have not liberty to come in and take their money; and then, from a high morality—political morality, of course—the United States tells Texas, "You have disgraced yourselves by the manner in which you have scaled your debts; we will save you from disgrace by assuming the debt; we will accept the draft which you have dishonored." I do not stand here to be the guardian of Texas; not at all. But one thing is very certain; and I leave the proposition to the public to say whether there is more political morality or speculation in it.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, if I admitted the obligation supposed to exist by the Senator from South Carolina, I should, of course, agree with him in opinion; but I do not think the obligations of Texas have anything to do with the question presented by this amendment. The simple question for us to consider is, whether the Government of the United States is bound for all these debts. The Senator makes light of the proposition. I know him to be a good lawyer, and I venture to say now that he cannot answer the argument which so humble an individual as myself may make on the subject.

Mr. President, I do not propose to say anything as to the honor of Texas. The question here is, whether the United States are liable for these debts or not? If the United States be answerable for them, then it is the honor of the United States, not the honor of Texas, that we are to consider. Now, I assume, as a legal proposition, which my honorable friend from South Carolina cannot deny, that whenever any State becomes, by compact, amalgamated with another, the State into which the sovereignty is merged is liable for all the obligations of the government thus united with it.

My constituents are deeply interested in this question. I do not intend to say aught against Texas. I am speaking of the obligation of the United States to pay my constituents the debt which I believe is now due from this Government to them.

Texas was a sovereign State; the United States cannot deny that proposition; it must be conceded by us, at least, that Texas was a sovereign State. She has yielded that sovereignty to the United States. What, permit me to ask, was pledged for the payment of her debts? I differ here somewhat from my honorable colleague. I say that the national faith of Texas, her faith as an independent nation, was pledged. She has ceased to exist as a nation. The United States now possess that former sovereignty, which was originally pledged by Texas for the payment of these debts. Now, I say that it is a proposition of national law; running down from the first elementary works to the latest writer on the subject, that where that case exists, where the sovereignty of one State has been merged in that of another, that the State into which it is merged is liable for all the obligations of the other. I hold before me Rutherford's Institutes, who, speaking of the effect of the union by compact of two States into one, says:

"Since both States thus continue in this united body, and neither of them ceases to exist, the rights and the obligations of both will remain, and will become the rights and obligations of the united body; that is, whatever rights belonged to each State separately before they were united, will afterwards be the rights of the collective State; and the same obligations that each State was under separately before, the collective State will be under afterwards."

You will find in all the elementary works, this proposition broadly laid down, and it is, I submit, a proposition right in itself. Texas was entitled to enter into these obligations. She was a nation, existing in the eyes of the civilized world as a nation, when she entered into these obligations.

Mr. BAYARD. Allow me to ask the honorable Senator from Maryland whether he argues that the entire nationality of Texas was all amalgamated into the United States? Did her entire sovereignty pass to the United States? I say the entire nationality of the nation amalgamated with another, must be destroyed, before the nation into which it is amalgamated is liable for the debts of the other.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator says that the entire nationality must be destroyed. Now, I say the entire nationality of Texas was destroyed. I do not mean to say that she is not a State equal to any in this Union. I am proud to consider her as a sister State, equal to any other State in the Union. But I say that Texas has surrendered the entire nationality which was pledged for the payment of these debts.

The proposition of my honorable colleague is, that the United States are bound for that class of debts for which she had pledged her revenue from imposts, and which were, of course, expressly ceded to this Union by her becoming a member of it. No one can doubt that proposition. My honorable friend from South Carolina says there is nothing in it, but he adduced no argument to show it.

Mr. BUTLER. I had not time to do so.

Mr. PRATT. Nor could you, if you had time; nor can any man living refute the proposition, that so far as the obligations of Texas were secured by her revenues from imposts which have been surrendered to this Union, our Government having taken those revenues, took them cum onere, and are bound for the debts for which Texas pledged them. But I go further, and I say that, in reference to all the debts of Texas for which the national faith was pledged, we, having assumed the nationality which was pledged for their payment, assumed the debt.

My honorable friend from Delaware has asked me whether Texas surrendered her nationality, her entire revenue, and ability to pay, which as a nation she possessed antecedently to her annexation to this Union? Well, I say that she has ceased to exist as a nation.

Mr. BAYARD. She possesses a quasi sovereignty.

Mr. PRATT. We have peculiar institutions. The sovereignty which she possesses is a quasi sovereignty; but the sovereignty which she had pledged for the payment of these debts was an absolute sovereignty, and has been surrendered. She entered into these debts as a nation. As a nation she has ceased to exist; and she is now a member of this Union, possessing, as my friend says, a quasi sovereignty; but not possessing the sovereignty which was pledged for the payment of those debts. It is sufficient, however, for the purpose of this argument, to show, what cannot be successfully denied by any one, that the class of debts embraced by the amendment were secured by an express pledge of revenues of Texas which have been surrendered to the United States. In regard, therefore, to the class of debts affected by the amendment under consideration, Texas has surrendered to the United States the revenues which she had pledged for their payment; and in regard to them the Senators from South Carolina and Delaware must admit that Texas has ceased to be sovereign; and by the admission necessarily inferred from their argument, we (the United States) are answerable for them, the thing, the revenue, pledged by Texas for their payment, now belonging to the United States, and she receiving the money arising from it. This proposition, therefore, with due submission to the judgment of others, I say cannot be successfully denied with reference to that class of debts intended to be embraced by this amendment, because, by assuming the means which Texas pledged for their payment, the United States with them necessarily assumed the payment of the debt for which those means were pledged.

I certainly, sir, did not expect to be called upon to enter into an argument on this subject. I agree with those who think we have not time to consider it; and I am informed by my honorable friend from Indiana, that, if this subject is to be considered, he intends to offer, as an amendment to the amendment, the bill proposed by my colleague. Now, sir, for the purpose of testing whether the Senate will consider the amendment or not, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The honorable Senator perhaps is not aware that that motion carries the bill with it.

Mr. PRATT. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BORLAND called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Brooke, Butler, Chase, Clarke, Clemens, Davis, De Saussure, Hamlin, Meriwether, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Charlton, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fish, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Rusk, and Weller—18.

So the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 27, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is reports from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the consent of the House to report a bill. I will not occupy five minutes' time.

Mr. MILLSON. That can be done after the morning hour. I rise to a privileged question. I wish to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House some time ago referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union House bill No. 273, making further appropriation for the satisfaction of Virginia military land warrants.

Mr. PENN. I insist upon my right to the floor for the purpose of reporting from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

JUDGE JOHN C. WATROUS.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman proceeds, the Chair would like to have the indulgence of the House to present a memorial from Judge John C. Watrous. That gentleman has addressed a letter to the House, which he asks may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The letter is very short.

There was no objection, and the letter was read as follows:

WASHINGTON, August 27, 1852.

To the Honorable LINN BOYD, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States—

SIR: About the commencement of the present session of Congress, a memorial was presented, signed by a certain William Alexander, of Galveston, Texas, praying for an investigation into my conduct as Federal judge of the district court of that State. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and a thorough examination of the charges has been prosecuted by the committee. I understand that committee is prepared to report on the subject, and I feel the deepest interest in the earliest practicable report. Cases of much importance, both civil and criminal, are depending in the Federal district court of Texas for trial; but in the present state of the investigation of my conduct, I do not feel justified in acting in these cases. If I am guilty of any of the charges preferred against me, I ought not to sit on the bench, and would feel it incumbent on me to decline to serve. I feel persuaded that the House of Representatives will afford the committee an opportunity to report, both in justice to the people of Texas as well as to myself. Assailed and calumniated as I have been, I respectfully appeal to the House of Representatives for that justice, which I look for to no other source.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. WATROUS.

The question now being upon the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary,

Mr. SCURRY said: I wish to say a word in relation to this matter. During this controversy I have abstained, as far as a man could well do, from taking any part in the investigation into the conduct of this man before the Committee on the Judiciary. I know the fact well, that in my own district, nineteen out of every twenty of my constituents are opposed to him, and knowing that fact, it places me in a situation which is very embarrassing. Now, sir, for my seat upon this floor, or for any considerations whatever, I would not do injustice to a man whom popular opinion was pressing to the ground. I therefore, in accordance with his request, and that justice may be done him, move that the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to report at any time upon this case.

Mr. VENABLE. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this case was referred, I ask permission to make a single remark.

The memorial, which was presented and referred to this House early in the present session of Congress in relation to Judge Watrous, has been considered by that committee. A number of witnesses from the State of Texas have been examined, and the mass of evidence is very voluminous. The examination has been very recently closed. The Committee on the Judiciary referred the papers to me for the purpose of making a report, but I have not had the time or opportunity to make out such a report as I am willing or the committee would be willing to present to this House; nor would it be possible in the few remaining days of the session to analyze the testimony, and investigate the subject, if the committee were to report. While the committee are desirous to do justice to all parties, they are equally desirous that injustice should be done to none; and if the House should agree to the motion permitting us to report at any time, I will say to the parties concerned—and I believe I express the opinion of the members of the committee with whom I am associated—that it will not be possible to make a report upon this subject before the next session.

The question was taken, and the motion that the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to report upon this subject, at their option, was agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I now call up my privileged motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a personal explanation. I will not occupy one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] being upon the floor, the gentleman from Ohio cannot proceed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLSON. I must decline to yield to any one. This is the only day upon which I can accomplish my object.

Mr. STANTON. I had supposed a member had the right to make such explanation at any time.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent alone are such explanations allowed. It is generally accorded, but cannot be regarded as a matter of privilege.

VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. MILLSON. The House will recollect that some time in the month of June, the Committee on Public Lands reported the bill which I now ask the House to take up. My friend from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] the chairman of the committee, would then have moved to put it on its passage, had I desired it; but I deemed it best to let it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order that it might be printed, and examined by such as wished to have an opportunity to do so, intending, however, to keep it within the control of a majority of the House, by entering a motion to reconsider this reference.

[Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bill; which received the signature of the Speaker, viz:

A bill for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad.]

Mr. MILLSON continued: I stated at the time the motion was made to reconsider the vote by which this bill was referred, that I intended to call it up before the adjournment of the present session of Congress, and I should have done so earlier, but for the privileged questions which have had precedence during the morning hour for some weeks past.

This bill provides for the satisfaction of those claims of the soldiers of the Virginia Continental and State lines, which have been adjudicated since the passage of the last act making appropriations to satisfy them. A small portion, however, of those previously allowed, remains unpaid, and is also provided for. Since this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, the Senate have acted upon the same subject. The Committee on Public Lands reported to that body a substitute for the bill which had been referred to them, and which was similar to the bill now pending here. The Senate bill thus reported as a substitute, provides for the revision, at the Department of the Interior, of the cases allowed by the Executive of Virginia, and provides that no claims shall be satisfied which, upon such reexamination, shall appear to have been incorrectly adjudicated. I confess, sir, I was exceedingly reluctant to accept this modification. I regarded it as in some degree an injurious imputation upon the authorities of Virginia. In 1782—a year or two before the cession by Virginia to the United States of the Northwestern Territory—her Legislature passed a law establishing a tribunal for the adjudication of these claims. That tribunal was the Governor, her highest executive officer. When the cession of this Territory was accepted by the United States upon the conditions imposed by Virginia, by which they expressly agreed to assume the liabilities which she had incurred to her revolutionary officers and soldiers, they knew that the Governor of the State was the tribunal appointed to determine upon those claims, and that they were to be bound, as Virginia would have been, by his decisions. I deemed it, therefore, an injurious reflection upon the Executive of Virginia, that their decision should be revised at any of the Departments in Washington; and so, I believe, did my colleagues, both in the Senate and in this House; but, for the sake of a final settlement of these claims, it was thought best to acquiesce. The bill, in the form in which it was reported to the Senate, passed that body unanimously.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Virginia proposes to adopt the Senate or the House bill?

Mr. MILLSON. I propose to amend the House bill by substituting the Senate bill in its place.

Mr. STANTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I will make one remark. Upon a former occasion I examined with some degree of care this subject of Virginia military land warrants. It will be recollected that in the early part of the session, my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR] and myself had a discussion upon the subject. In that discussion I insisted that a large amount of fraudulent warrants had been issued. But it is claimed, whether that be true or not, that there are honest, valid warrants still outstanding. That I do not intend to controvert. The bill of the Senate, which has been passed, as I understand it, requires a reexamination of the proofs upon which the warrants issued under the authority of the State of Virginia. I myself can see no objection to it, and I can entertain no reasonable doubt that the General Government is under the strongest moral obligation to satisfy valid outstanding warrants for military services in the war of the Revolution. I believe, myself, that this bill ought to pass. It cedes to the Government lands which lie in Ohio, and will relieve us from any difficulty thrown about the location.

Mr. MILLSON. I am glad to hear that the bill is acceptable to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON.]

Mr. HALL. I believe the proposition now is upon the motion to reconsider the vote. If the motion to reconsider shall prevail, then the motion will be upon recommitting the bill; and I will withdraw that motion. The Committee on Public Lands, who had charge of this bill, gave it some examination; and they believe that it is proper to make an appropriation of 750,000 acres of land, to satisfy the outstanding Virginia military land warrants, without any reexamination of the proofs upon which they were granted by the Government of the United States. The Senate, however, have thought proper to require that, before they are satisfied, proof shall be reexamined by the proper Department here at Washington. The ground upon which this appropriation is asked is simply this: When Virginia ceded to the United States the Northwest Territory, she stipulated that if the land on Green river, in Kentucky, known as the Green River Country, should not be sufficient to satisfy the claims of the soldiers for their military services during the revolutionary war, then that they should be satisfied out of the lands between the Little Miami and the Scioto rivers.

Mr. HENN. I wish to ask the gentleman, if the Senate have not already passed a bill upon this subject?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENN. Why not then take that bill up and pass it?

Mr. HOUSTON. By universal consent, let us take up that bill and pass it.

Mr. MILLSON. I have examined this subject, and this is the shortest way to get at our object.

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] will allow this motion to reconsider to lie over a few minutes, I will ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the Senate bill making an appropriation for satisfying the outstanding Virginia land warrants.

Mr. HENN. I object. I am opposed to allowing one bill to take precedence over any other in this House.

[Cries, "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. HENN. On the solicitation of gentlemen, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. JENKINS. I renew the objection.

Mr. MILLSON. I did not intend to detain the House ten minutes upon this question, and I will not now detain them five minutes further. I only wish to say, that the case, as stated by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] is certainly very strong, and it might have been stated even more strongly; for the State of Virginia, in 1792, by an act of her Legislature, pledged all her western lands to satisfy the bounties promised to her officers and soldiers, thus creating a lien on her whole northwestern territory. The object of reserving that portion of this territory lying between the Miami and Scioto rivers, and that lying in Kentucky, was not so much to restrict the soldiers to these districts, as to preserve and secure to them good lands for their exclusive use against those holding Treasury warrants, who might otherwise have taken up most of the good lands, while our soldiers were in the field fighting our battles. The Government of the United States have already received more than $76,000,000 into the Treasury from the sales of these lands bestowed by Virginia; and yet, while millions of acres have been given away by the United States, for various objects, the claims of the revolutionary officers and soldiers of Virginia, who hold an equitable lien upon these very lands, have been heretofore scrutinized, disparaged, and refused. It has been seventeen years since any bill was passed for their relief. The amount required to satisfy the outstanding claims will not, it is supposed, exceed eight hundred thousand acres. I earnestly hope that justice to these claimants will be no longer delayed, and that the House will agree to my motion and pass the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will allow me a few moments, I will make a few remarks about this bill. The provisions of the bill are of great interest to my section of Ohio, and to my district.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has reported to Congress, that of the 4,000,000 acres of land, reserved by Virginia at the time of the cession of the Northwestern Territory to the United States, there now remains about 85,000 acres of refuse or unsurveyed land, of little value, being the residue of the land lying between the Scioto and Little Miami rivers, and being all that remains, except that which is surveyed, occupied, and well-improved. The lands so reserved, are known by the name of the Virginia Military District, in the State of Ohio; and the 85,000 acres of unsurveyed lands alluded to by the Land Commissioner, all lie in my district. They are estimated at an average of from twenty to fifty cents per acre, and being very hilly, are not sought for except for the timber, though these refuse lands border upon the Scioto valley, one of the most fertile and beautiful portions of our country. The Land Commissioner further reports, that there are about 80,000 or 100,000 acres of Virginia military land warrants on file at the General Land Office, besides a considerable amount in private hands. These were issued for services in the Continental line. There are besides a considerable amount of land warrants issued by Virginia for services in the Revolution, in what was called the State line. And this bill, which has passed the Senate, proposes to appropriate about 800,000 acres of the public land, subject to private entry, to pay in full these land warrants, issued by the State of Virginia to those who served in the Continental and State lines during the revolutionary war. The bill also contains a provision that Virginia shall release to the United States all claim to the lands remaining unsurveyed in that district.

Now, sir, I think this bill ought to pass. It has passed the Senate at the present session; and I believe the Senators from Ohio, as well as those from Virginia, concur in a favorable opinion as to this bill. I again say that I think this bill ought to pass without further delay, that justice may be done to the holders of those warrants, and that Virginia may release all further claim to lands within the State of Ohio. I therefore move the previous question.

The previous question then received a second.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question to be put.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question then recurring upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it was put, and agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider prevailed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I wish to propose an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No proposition to amend is in order until the motion to commit is disposed of—that being the question now before the House.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw the motion to commit.

Mr. EDGERTON. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HALL. I am entitled to the floor. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] to offer his amendment, I still holding the floor.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"That in settling the claims of the State of Ohio, under the acts of March 2, 1827, and May 24, 1828, granting lands to said State for canal purposes, the same principles shall be acted upon as have been applied under the provisions of the act of May 9, 1848, entitled 'An act in addition to the act therein mentioned for the settlement of the claims of the State of Indiana, accruing under the said act of March 2, 1827.'"

Mr. HALL. I wish to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON:] I design to offer a substitute, which I hold in my hand, for this bill, and I presume it will be adopted. I suggest that he shall propose his amendment as an amendment to the substitute I intend to offer.

Mr. EDGERTON. My object in offering that amendment was to have it attached to this bill, in whatever form it should pass, and I can explain it to the House in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to modify his amendment by adopting that proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON.]

Mr. HALL. I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Then the proposition is made, by way of amendment, by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL.]

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, I will take up as little of the time of the House as possible in explaining the necessity of agreeing to the amendment I have offered.

By the act of 2d March, 1827, a quantity of land was granted to the State of Indiana for the purpose of aiding that State in opening a canal to unite the navigable waters of the Wabash river with those of Lake Erie, a portion of which lands so granted were in the State of Ohio, and were afterwards, by virtue of an act of Congress passed May 24, 1828, granted by the State of Indiana to the State of Ohio, to be held by that State on the same conditions upon which they were granted to the State of Indiana. There was, also, by the said act of May 24, 1828, granted to the State of Ohio, for the purpose of aiding said State in extending the Miami canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, by the Maumee route, a quantity of land equal to one half of five sections in width on each side of the canal, from Dayton to the Maumee river, at the mouth of the Auglaize; and also 500,000 acres of land within the State for the purpose of aiding the State in the payment of the debt or the interest thereon, which had been or which might be contracted by the State in the construction of canals within the same, undertaken by the authority of the laws of the State then in force, or which might thereafter be enacted.

In the grant to Indiana, the lands were to be selected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the President of the United States. After the selections were made the State had power to sell and to give a title in fee-simple, and Congress guaranteed that the title to the purchasers under the State should be valid. These provisions were, of course, extended to Ohio under the grant from Indiana.

The act of May 24, 1828, contained similar provisions as regards selections and sales, and it required that the Miami canal should be commenced within five and completed within twenty years, and that the canals commenced and to be benefited by the 500,000 acre grant should be completed in seven years from the approval of the act, otherwise the State should stand bound to pay to the United States the amount which any lands sold by her within that time had brought; but the validity of the titles derived from the State was not to be affected by the failure of the State to comply with the provisions of the act, thus clearly showing it to have been the intention of Congress that the purchaser of the lands from the State should have a good title in fee-simple which was not to be disturbed by any errors or failures on the part of the State. By the act of the 2d April, 1830, that part of the act of May 24, 1828, which required the completion of the Miami canal within twenty years, or that the State should be bound to pay to the United States the amount of any lands previously sold, was repealed, and the State was authorized to build a railroad instead of a canal; and it was also provided by that act that if the canal should pass over any lands previously sold by the United States, the State should locate other lands in lieu of those sold; but the locations should not exceed the number of acres necessary to complete an aggregate quantity of land equal to one half of five sections in width on each side of the canal.

Under these several grants selections of lands were made by the United States and State authorities; and the State went on and sold such as had been selected and supposed would be confirmed to her and completed her canals.

It has been for several years a matter in dispute between the General Government and the State authorities, whether the State had obtained all the lands to which she was entitled by a fair construction of the grants, and whether some of the selections had not been informal or illegal, and whether the State had not selected more under some of the grants and less under others than she was entitled to. It is not at all surprising that errors should have been committed and conflicts of title arisen in selecting so large an amount of lands, frequently in less quantities than a section; and often to make up the quantity to which the State was entitled, selections had to be made outside the five miles.

Nearly all of the entire grants having been sold by the State, and in the occupancy of and highly improved by actual settlers, her authorities were anxious for a final settlement and confirmation of the title to all she had selected and sold, or still retained. Several ineffectual attempts have been made to procure a settlement, but none has as yet been fully effected. Within the past two years an agent was appointed by the State to make this settlement and final adjustment, and the title to all the lands selected by the State, under all the grants, was confirmed except to about sixty thousand acres, which could not be confirmed without further action on the part of Congress. To protect the rights of the purchasers from the State and actual settlers upon the lands, the Secretary of the Interior has directed the sixty thousand acres unconfirmed to the State to be withheld from sale until after the adjournment of this session of Congress. The absolute necessity, therefore, of some action of Congress, either granting the lands directly or enabling the Secretary of the Interior to confirm these selections made under former grants, is perfectly apparent.

In the expectation that the entire quantity of unsold United States lands in the State would be granted to her during this session of Congress, I have delayed pressing this matter upon the House until it is now certain that some action must be had to quiet the title of the purchasers and occupants. I should, of course, much prefer the grant of all the lands of the United States within the limits of the State, and a bill for that purpose did pass the Senate at this session, but was defeated in the House. At this late day of the session, I could have no hope of securing my object by reviving that proposition, and must, therefore, rely entirely upon this amendment. I am advised that the Secretary of the Interior is of the opinion, that this amendment will cover the case, and enable him to confirm the title of these lands to the State. It is simply applying to the grants to Ohio the provisions of the act of May 9, 1848, for the settlement of the claims of the State of Indiana, accruing under the act of March 2, 1827, and I hope no member of the House will object or vote against it.

Mr. HALL. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. After the Chair has heard the amendment, as modified, read, he will be able to determine the point of order.

The Clerk then read the substitute of Mr. HALL for the bill, as follows:

That all unsatisfied outstanding military land warrants, or parts of warrants, issued or allowed prior to the 1st day of March, 1852, by the proper authorities of the Commonwealth of Virginia, for military services performed by the officers and soldiers, seamen or marines of the Virginia State or Continental lines in the Army or Navy of the Revolution, may be surrendered to the Secretary of the Interior, who, upon being satisfied, by a revision of the proofs, or by additional testimony, that any warrant thus surrendered was fairly and justly issued, in pursuance of the laws of said Commonwealth, for military services so rendered, shall issue land scrip in favor of the present proprietors of any warrant thus surrendered, for the whole or any portion thereof yet unsatisfied, at the rate of $1.35 for each acre mentioned in the warrant thus surrendered, and which remains unsatisfied, which scrip shall be receivable in payment for any lands owned by the United States subject to sale at private entry; and said scrip shall, moreover, be assignable by indorsement, attested by two witnesses. In issuing such scrip the said Secretary is authorized, where there are more persons than one interested in the same warrant, to issue to each person scrip for his or her portion of the warrant; and where infants or feme covert may be entitled to any scrip, the guardian of the infant and the husband of the feme covert may receive, and sell, or locate the same: Provided, That no less than a legal subdivision shall be entered and paid for by the scrip issued in virtue of this act.

Sec. 2. And he it further enacted, That this act shall be taken as a full and final adjustment of all bounty land claims to the officers and soldiers, seamen and marines, of the State of Virginia, for services in the war of the Revolution: Provided, That the State of Virginia shall, by a proper act of the Legislature thereof, relinquish all claim to the lands in the Virginia military land district in the State of Ohio.

Sec. 3. And he it further enacted, That in settling the claims of the State of Ohio under the acts of March 2d, 1827, and May 24th, 1828, granting lands to said State for canal purposes, the same principles shall be acted upon as have been applied under the provisions of the act of May 9th, 1848, entitled "An act in addition to an act therein mentioned, for the settlement of the claims of the State of Indiana, accruing under the said act of March 2d, 1827."

Mr. HENN. I now press my point of order upon the substitute, and ask that the 55th rule be read.

The rule was accordingly read, as follows:

"55. No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment. No bill or resolution shall, at any time, be amended by annexing thereto, or incorporating therewith, any other bill or resolution pending before the House."

I would now ask the Speaker whether this substitute is not the same as a Senate bill pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order, upon the ground that the substitute materially differs from the bill passed by the Senate. One entire section has been added, and it is therefore not the Senate bill. The Chair is clear in his decision.

Mr. HENN. Is not the Senate bill now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is a Senate bill pending upon the same subject, many provisions of which are embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The call for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken, and the substitute was adopted.

The question then recurred upon ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Is it in order for me to move that the bill be laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I then submit that motion, and demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 150.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to:
The bill was then read the third time.

Mr. HALL. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENN. Has the bill been engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and has been read the third time, and the gentleman's objection comes too late.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The business in order is reports from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

POSTAGE BILL.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the postage bill, which has been returned from the Senate with several amendments.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up for consideration.

The Clerk read the first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Strike from the first section of the bill the following rates:
"Each newspaper, pamphlet, periodical, magazine, book, bound or unbound, circular, catalogue, and every other description of printed matter unconnected with any manuscript or writing, and of no greater weight than two ounces, shall be charged with one cent postage, and one cent for each additional ounce or fraction of an ounce, for any distance under three thousand miles; and for any distance over three thousand miles, double those rates. All newspapers and periodicals not weighing over one ounce, and published regularly as often as once in three months, and sent from the office of publication to actual subscribers, shall be chargeable with only one half the foregoing rates: Provided, That all newspapers and periodicals not weighing over two ounces, when sent to actual subscribers within the State where such papers and periodicals are published, shall be entitled to the reduction provided for in this section. The postage on all printed matter shall be prepaid at the office where it is mailed, or paid quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery; otherwise, double the foregoing rates shall be charged thereon."

—and insert in lieu of them the following:

"Newspapers, periodicals, and all other printed matter, not exceeding three ounces in weight, shall be sent to any part of the United States for one cent; and for every additional ounce or fraction of an ounce, one cent; and when the postage is paid quarterly, or yearly, in advance, either at the office where the said newspaper or periodical is mailed or delivered, one half of said rates only shall be charged. Newspapers not weighing over one ounce and a half, when circulated in the State where published, shall be charged one half of the rates before named: Provided, That small newspapers, published monthly, or oftener, when sent in packages to one address, and prepaid by affixing stamps thereto, shall be chargeable at half of a cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce. Postage on transient matter shall be prepaid, or shall be charged double the foregoing rates."

Mr. OLDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to move to strike out that Senate amendment, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Each newspaper, periodical, unsealed circular, or other article of printed matter, not exceeding three ounces in weight, shall be sent to any part of the United States for one cent, and for every additional ounce, or fraction of an ounce, one cent additional shall be charged; and when the postage upon any newspaper or periodical is paid quarterly, or yearly, in advance, at the office where the said periodical or newspaper is delivered, or is paid yearly, or quarterly, in advance, at the office where the same is mailed, and evidence of such payment is furnished to the office of delivery in such manner as the Post Office Department shall by general regulations prescribe, one half of said rates only shall be charged. Newspapers and periodicals not weighing over one ounce and a half, when circulated in the State where published, shall be charged one half of the rates before mentioned: Provided, That small newspapers and periodicals published monthly, or oftener, and pamphlets not containing more than sixteen octavo pages each, when sent in single packages, weighing at least eight ounces, to one address, and prepaid by affixing postage stamps thereto, shall be charged only half of a cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce, notwithstanding the postage calculated on each separate article of such package would exceed that amount. The postage on all transient matter shall be prepaid by stamps or otherwise, or shall be charged double the rates first above mentioned.

That merely changes the phraseology of the amendment of the Senate, which the Postmaster General says would leave a doubtful construction. The words are left precisely as the Senate sent them to us, only periodicals are put upon the same footing with newspapers. I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the second amendment of the Senate, as follows:

"Insert after the word 'matter,' in the second section, the words 'and shall be chargeable with postage at one cent an ounce for all distances under three thousand miles, and two cents an ounce for all distances over three thousand miles, to which fifty per cent. shall be added in all cases where the same shall be sent without being prepaid; so that the section shall read:

"Books bound or unbound, not weighing over four pounds shall be deemed mailable matter, and shall be chargeable with postage at one cent an ounce for all distances," &c.

Mr. OLDS. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. OLDS. I will now ask that the post route bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. BROOKS. I will state to the House, that the Senate have put upon this bill from fifty-four to sixty pages of new matter without any debate. I desire time to read it.

Mr. OLDS. When the bill was passed before the question was asked me, whether the bill contained other matter than post routes, and I replied that it did not; but since it went to the Senate, they have put upon it three or four bills, reported from the Post Office Committee of this House. I deem it proper to state such is the fact; because, when they have been read by members, I shall move the bill be taken up, and call for the previous question. The amendment can then be rejected or agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to taking up the bill.

SURVEY OF LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HALL. There is a bill upon the Speaker's table relating to the public lands in the State of California. It provides for the sale of lands and for granting preemption rights. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up that bill. If there is any objection, I will move to suspend the rules.

Mr. PENN. I object.

Mr. HALL. I move to suspend the rules if it be in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order during the morning hour.

Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the petition of Thompson Barnett, made a report thereon, accompanied by a joint resolution for his relief; which was read a first and second time, committed to a committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the resolution and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENN, from the same committee, reported bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, viz:

A bill for the relief of Samuel F. Butterworth;

A bill for the relief of James H. Jenkins;

A bill for the relief of John Think;

Joint resolution for the relief of the legal representatives of Wade Allen, deceased; and a Joint resolution granting the petition of William and Matthew Moss; —which bills and joint resolutions were severally read a first and second time, and committed to a committee of the Whole House, and made the order of the day for to-morrow; and ordered, with the reports accompanying, to be printed.

Mr. PENN, from the same committee, made an adverse report upon the petition of Joseph C. Stoll; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIMMICK asked the unanimous consent of the House to take up Senate bill No. 389, for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Daniel W. Davis, deceased.

Leave being granted, the bill was then read the first and second time, and ordered to a third reading.

[The bill refunds $250 paid by Mrs. Davis for a substitute in the Post Office Department, during the sickness of her husband.]

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up Senate bill No. 429, for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts. I think there can be no debate upon this bill, as it is a clear case, and appeals to the justice of the House. I have the report of the Senate upon the subject, from which it appears that it passed there unanimously, and I think that there can be no question about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Edgerton] asks the unanimous consent of the House to take up bill No. 429.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I object, and call for the regular order of business, whatever it is.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman insists upon his objection, so satisfied am I that this House will pass the bill, if they will hear it read, or understand it for a moment, that I feel myself called upon, as an act of duty, to move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order during the morning hour. Reports are in order from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

BONDED GOODS—TRADE TO MEXICO.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to ask the consent of the House to take up a bill which permits our citizens to take bonded goods through Texas into Mexico. It has already passed the Senate unanimously, and has been approved by the Committees on Commerce in both the House and Senate. It has been recommended by the Department, and drawn up in pursuance of their recommendation. It is necessary to pass it now, or our citizens who are trading to Mexico will lose the whole benefit of the fall trade.

The bill was then read as follows:

"An act authorizing goods, wares, and merchandise, entered and bonded for warehousing in pursuance of law, to be exported by certain routes to ports or places in Mexico."

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. Not during the morning hour.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This year they lost the whole benefit of the spring trade, because I could not get the floor to report a bill from the committees in the early part of the session, and unless the House pass this bill, they will lose the benefit of the fall trade there. The goods are purchased, and all they ask is the same privilege to take their goods into Mexico that we enjoy at the North to take them into the British Provinces.

Mr. CABLE. I withdraw my objection pending the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON inquired—has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of finishing the Indian appropriation bill. It will take but a few moments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit that motion before this bill is disposed of?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I hope that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] will not insist upon his motion. Let the bill be read through. Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. MOLONY. This is private bill day, and objection day. But little time, as is well known to the House, has been given to that class of business this session. We can go to the Private Calendar, dispose of that business to which there may be no objection, and in a half hour we can return to the House again. I therefore move that we go into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The table is full of private bills which ought to be passed.

Mr. MOLONY. I submit my motion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Has the morning hour expired? I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Molony] will withdraw his motion that this bill may be passed. I move to recommit this bill.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MOLONY. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. SEYMOUR. There is no objection to the bill. I hope gentlemen will let the bill pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Stuart] rises to a question of order.

Mr. STUART. I understand that both the motions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Molony] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] are withdrawn, and if they are, I am not disposed to make the question of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw my motion.

The bill was then read by the Clerk.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to say, in regard to this bill, that its object is to put the trade passing through Texas into Mexico upon precisely the same footing as that which passes into the British Provinces, allowing goods to be taken in there under bond upon the same restrictions. I ask the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentlemen who were contesting the last amendment in the Indian bill yesterday evening have agreed upon a substitute. It will not take five minutes to consider it in committee. I move, therefore, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOLONY. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It being private bill day, a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House will be first put.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no disagreement to the amendments remaining on the Indian bill.

Mr. EDGERTON. This is private bill day, and I have a private bill of great importance to the person interested at least, and as an act of justice on the part of the Government it should be passed. The gentleman who made objection to its coming up withdraws it, and there will be no objection, I hope, on the part of the House to this case.

The SPEAKER. Do the gentlemen from Alabama [Mr. Houston] and Illinois [Mr. Molony] withdraw their motions?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will not withdraw my motion.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a privileged question. The report of the Printing Committee was up sometime ago, and was postponed until some day this week. I wish to give notice that I intend to offer some amendments, and I am ready to proceed with that bill whenever the House will determine to do so.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House, or the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that would be the first business in order in the House, but it is competent for the House at any time to leave other business and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. I only wish to say, that I am ready to proceed with this business whenever the House are disposed to do so, and I wish only to offer some amendments.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Molony's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to go into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. King, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ORR. I have prepared an amendment as a substitute for the amendment which the committee were considering last evening, when it rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Orr,] that an amendment was pending when the committee rose, which had been spoken to upon both sides.

Mr. ORR. The amendment may be considered as withdrawn, if there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriations herein made, or that may hereafter be made, for the benefit of any Indian, or tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such Indian, or tribe, or part of a tribe; but shall in every case be paid directly to the Indian or Indians themselves, to whom it shall be due, or to the tribe, or part of a tribe per capita; unless the imperious interests of the Indian or Indians, or some treaty stipulation, shall require payment to be made otherwise under the direction of the President; nor shall the executive branch of the Government, now or hereafter recognize any contract between any Indian, or tribe, or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, under this act.

Mr. ORR. I offer this amendment, sir, as a substitute for the second section. I believe that it meets the conflicting views and opinions of all those who were debating this question yesterday evening. It is the substance of a proposition that was introduced by my colleague, [Mr. Woodward,] and passed the House as an amendment to the deficiency bill. Upon an examination of the deficiency bill, there are very strong reasons to believe that the clause will be construed to apply to no appropriations, except those contained within the deficiency bill. The amendment which I offer, by way of a substitute, makes it apply to the appropriations contained within the present bill, and all future appropriations, and carries out the sense of the House to make it a permanent law. I will add that the amendment meets the approbation of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I want to ask whether the provision in that amendment, which says that unless the interests of the Indian may demand that it shall be paid otherwise, would not place it within the discretion of the President to supersede and obviate all the other provisions, if, in his judgment, the interests of the Indians required it?

Mr. ORR. There is a provision to that effect giving the President a discretion, and throwing the responsibility upon him if that discretion is not judiciously exercised. That was the only way by which the difficulty suggested yesterday evening by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] could be obviated. By adopting this amendment all objections are obviated, and the Indian has protection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In any event, can the money be paid to agents?

Mr. ORR. It cannot be paid to them in any event.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. This amendment has been considered generally by the gentlemen who engaged in discussion yesterday, and there is no objection to it. It is a repetition, but better guarded, to carry out the objects then in view, supposed to be effected by the amendment adopted to the deficiency bill.

Mr. MOLONY. I desire to ask one question. I desire to know whether, in any event, this money could be paid to agents, and at the discretion of the President?

Mr. JOHNSON. In no event can it be paid to anybody but to the Indians themselves, and in no event can any officer of this Government recognize or enforce a contract with an Indian, but it leaves it for the Indian to do it for himself as he chooses.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. Orr as a substitute for the amendment of the Senate, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate as amended; and being put was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. A considerable saving of time will be effected if the committee would take a test vote upon taking up the fortification bill, and if they decline doing so, I will agree not to ask them to take it up any more. I do not want to annoy the House.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the debate upon the Indian appropriation bill was closed by order of the House. Now, the committee have no right under that resolution to take up any other bill before this bill is reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to sustain that point of order, unless the motion of the gentleman from Alabama can be maintained by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALL. I object to it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise, and report the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 42, and sundry amendments from the Senate made thereto, some of which they had agreed to, and others they had not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move the previous question upon the amendments to the Indian appropriation bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JOHNSON. I propose now, for the purpose of facilitating business, that the amendments be agreed to, excepting in the instances where a separate vote is called for.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

There being no objection, the amendments were then read over, and separate votes were called for upon the following amendments, viz:

On the second clause of the first amendment by Mr. McMULLIN; on the fourth amendment by Mr. Fitch; and on the eighth amendment by Mr. Houston.

Mr. McMULLIN. I intend to call for a separate vote upon the appropriation made for payment of the claim of David Taylor, and I ask now for a separate vote upon that.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If we can go back at all, we can go back indefinitely, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done except by unanimous consent, the House having by unanimous consent agreed that the amendments shall be read over, and separate votes asked for as the amendments were reported.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, I object.

The question was then put upon agreeing to all those amendments upon which a separate vote had been asked for, and they were concurred in.

The question now being upon agreeing to the second clause of the first amendment of the Senate, viz:

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriation heretofore made for removing the Choctaw Indians from Mississippi, as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

Mr. McMULLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bissell, Bockoe, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Brackinridge, Briggs, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Clingan, Colcock, Conger, Dean, Dinmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gilmore, Goodnow, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Harper, Hawes, Hebard, Henn, Howard, Ingersoll, Geo. G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Mann, Martin, McNair, Mende, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Robie, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoicraft, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stone, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Venable, Walsh, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—92.

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Babcock, Bibbighaus, Bragg, Brenton, Buell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Cobb, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dunham, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Powell, Robbins, Ross, Schoonmaker, Frederick P. Stanton, Stuart, Wallace, and Watkins—69.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the fourth amendment, as follows:

"At page 17 strike out all after line fifteen, to the end of line twenty-seven, on page 17½, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the redemption and final extinction of the annuities to the Eel River Indians, under the provisions of treaties of August 3, 1795, August 21, 1805, and the 30th September, 1809, $15,000; to be paid per capita: Provided, That before paying such sum, or any part thereof, to the said Eel River Indians, they shall relinquish, in such form as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct, all claim and demand on the United States, for all further annuities and payments: And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, before the payment of said sum of money, as before directed, to ascertain who are the individuals composing the said band, without regard to the places of their residence, and to pay to said individuals so ascertained per capita the sum of money hereinbefore appropriated."

THE SPEAKER. To simplify the action of the body, the Chair will put the question upon agreeing to the Senate amendment. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommended the rejection of this amendment, but the question will be put upon agreeing to the amendment.

MR. FITCH. What will be the effect of the vote?

THE SPEAKER. To disagree to the amendment of the Senate.

The question was then taken and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment of the Senate was not agreed to.

The question now being upon agreeing to the eighth amendment of the Senate, to strike out the following, viz:

"For payment to the Shawnees the moneys due to them, under and by virtue of the treaty of the 7th November, 1852, and 8th August, 1831, between the United States and the two divisions of said tribe of Indians, the same being the net balance received into the Treasury from the sale of their lands in Ohio, $63,246 21: Provided, however, That said tribe of Indians shall first express their assent that the payment of the above sum shall be made equally to the whole tribe, rather than to either division thereof."

MR. HOUSTON demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will those voting "no" send this question to a committee of conference? Will they not be disagreeing to the Senate amendment, which strikes out the House amendment?

THE SPEAKER. It is not for the Chair to say what will be the result of the vote. A negative vote will non-concur in the action of the Senate.

MR. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask a question, if it is in order, and it is this: Can we expect to get through with these appropriations if the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, calls for the yeas and nays upon every proposition?

MR. HOUSTON. I call for the yeas and nays upon this one vote, because it is an important one. I have attended to business quite as regularly as the gentleman from Tennessee.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the eighth amendment of the Senate; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Babcock, Briggs, George H. Brown, Busby, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Colecock, Curtis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Edgerton, Ficklin, Floyd, Fowler, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Hebard, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Price, Reed, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Abraham P. Stephens, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—91.

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Barrere, Bibbighaus, Bowie, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Ewing, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gorman, Green, Grey, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Jenkins, Robert W. Johnson, Landry, Letcher, McCorkle, Newton, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Schermerhorn, Scudder, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Walsh, Ward, Welch, and Addison White—53.

So the amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

MR. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of MILLARD P. FILLMORE, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had approved and signed the following bills, viz:

House bill No. 299. An act to provide for executing the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes; and House bill No. 258. An act to reduce and define the boundary of the military reserve at the Saint Peter river, in the Territory of Minnesota.]

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to reconsider the votes upon agreeing to these amendments collectively, and to lay them all upon the table.

THE SPEAKER. The reconsideration must be had in detail.

MR. JOHNSON. Then I will not make that motion.

GRANTS TO ARKANSAS AND MISSOURI.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to suspend the rules of the House, and take up Senate bill No. 233, granting alternate sections of the public land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, for railroad purposes.

MR. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield me the floor for a moment.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I cannot possibly do so.

MR. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to say that it is a matter in which parties are deeply interested. The select committee appointed by the House with reference to the Gardiner claim desire to make a brief report.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I cannot yield. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 233.

The Clerk then read the bill as follows:

"An act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Lake Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith."

MR. ALLISON. I object.

MR. JOHNSON. I move to suspend the rules.

MR. ALLISON. Upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

MR. WASHBURN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. BRECKINRIDGE, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—yeas 97, noes 29.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The question recurred upon the motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill.

MR. JOHNSON demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

MR. JENKINS moved to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

MR. JOHNSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

THE SPEAKER. That being a privileged question, is first in order.

The question was then taken upon MR. JOHNSON's motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, and it was agreed to.

MR. AVERETT. Is it in order now to move to lay the bill upon the table?

THE SPEAKER. It is not. The House has made an order that the bill be read the third time, which has not yet been done.

The bill was then read the third time.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

MR. JENKINS. I now move that the bill be laid upon the table, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon MR. JENKINS's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Bibbighaus, Babcock, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Brenton, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Caskie, Chastain, Colecock, Curtis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Duncan, Floyd, Fowler, Goodenow, Goodrich, Hamilton, Hammond, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, McLanahan, Millson, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Andrew Parker, Powell, Price, Robbins, Ross, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Thompson, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—62.

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Barrere, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Breckinridge, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, John G. Davis, Disney, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Howard, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, McCorkle, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Richardson, Riddle, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Wilcox, and Yates—83.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?"

MR. VENABLE demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Barrere, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, John G. Davis, Eastman, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodrich, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Howard, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, McCorkle, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Richardson, Riddle, Sackett, Scurry, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, A. P. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Wilcox, and Yates—79.

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thos. H. Bayly, Beale, Bennett, Bibbighaus, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Caskie, Chapman, Chastain, Colecock, Curtis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Duham, Floyd, Fowler, Goodenow, Hamilton, Hammond, Haws, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, Geo. W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McLanahan, Millson, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Powell, Price, Robbins, Ross, Savage, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Thompson, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wildrick, and Woodward—71.

So the bill was passed.

MR. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

MR. STANTON, of Kentucky, obtained the floor.

MRS. MARGARET HETZEL.

Mr. KING, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to give way, so as to allow me to call up a motion to reconsider, which I entered the other day, at a time when I had no opportunity to have it considered.

Mr. STANTON. I will give way to the gentleman, if I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. KING. Then I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 83, "for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Hetzel, widow and administratrix of A. R. Hetzel, late assistant quartermaster in the Army of the United States," was reported to the Committee of the Whole House.

The question was put upon the motion to reconsider, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to commit the bill, and being put, the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. BISSELL. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama, that this is a Senate bill. The Committee on Military Affairs of this House have given to it a careful consideration, and have reported unanimously in favor of its passage. This is the third session at which it has been passed by one House or the other, but heretofore it has always failed for want of time. About the justice of the claim, there can be no question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand—and if I am wrong, I desire to be corrected—that this bill proposes to give to an officer, or to the widow of an officer, which is the same thing, a percentage upon the money which he disbursed at the time when he was an officer of the Government, and drawing his pay and compensation as such. If that principle is involved in the bill, it is a new one, and one which will lead to the expenditure of $40,000,000. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, it will be read.

Mr. STUART. I object to the reading of the report.

Mr. HOUSTON. Can objection be made? Have I not a right to the reading of the report? I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has no such right.

Mr. HOUSTON. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. Not for any legitimate purpose, under the rules, unless it be to move that the bill be laid upon the table, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. HART. Then I call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] a question. I understand that Mr. Hetzel was a captain in the Army of the United States, and as quartermaster, in the receipt of all the pay and emoluments of a quartermaster; that he disbursed some money, perhaps in Florida, prior to his death; that this bill is to pay his widow a percentage or commission upon the money which he thus disbursed, while he was in the receipt of his pay as a captain in the Quartermaster's Department; and that the amount is some $10,000 or $12,000. Am I correct?

Mr. BISSELL. I will answer the gentleman's inquiry with a great deal of pleasure. The deceased, Captain Hetzel, was a captain in the Quartermaster's Department, discharging the duties of quartermaster, and receiving his pay as such. In addition to that, he performed duties so responsible and important as, in the opinion of General Scott and General Wool, under whom he was serving, and in the opinion of the War Department here, entitled him to the amount now claimed by his widow, and they only regretted that the law, as it stood, did not authorize the Department to allow it. Upon the files here, are letters from General Scott and General Wool, both certifying in the strongest manner to the justice of this claim, and requesting that Congress shall make the allowance.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object to further debate.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order, the previous question having been sustained.

Mr. POLK. I desire, if it is in order, to ask a question, that I may be able to vote with a knowledge of the facts of the case.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. POLK. Then I hope the House will allow me to propound it.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. BISSELL. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?" it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BISSELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK obtained the floor.

PROPOSITION TO ELECT A PRINTER.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rises to a question of privilege, which is a question of a still higher order.

Mr. STANTON. The question which I desire to present relates to the organization of the House.

A bill providing for the election of a public printer passed this House, and afterwards the Senate. It has been approved by the President, and his approval communicated to the House. The resolution I now desire to offer relates to the election of that officer.

APPEALS FROM THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. CARTTER. I desire to make an appeal to my friend from Kentucky. I want to ask the permission of the House to introduce a bill merely formal in its legislation, but of great importance in connection with the Patent Office. The whole business of that office is brought to a stand by the infirmity of the Chief Justice of this District, to whom appeals are made under the existing provisions of law, and it is of the highest importance that some authority of an appellate character should be substituted in his place. I have drawn up a bill, and have assurances from the Senate that it can be passed there, providing facilities for these appeals by simply charging the duty upon he associates of the Chief Justice of the District; and I hope the House will unanimously consent that it may pass.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the bill is not to give rise to any debate or to consume much time, I have no objection to it.

Mr. CARTTER. I will withdraw it, if it gives rise to any debate. But there is no gentleman upon the floor who will not see the necessity of passing the bill.

Mr. STANTON. Then I will give way to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to introduce the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was received, and read a first and second time by its title, viz:

"An act in addition to 'An act to promote the progress of useful arts.'"

Several MEMBERS. "Read the bill."

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, having been engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STANTON. I now call up my privileged question.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to submit a question of order. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] rose and was recognized by the Chair. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] then rose to a question of privilege, to proceed to the election of a public printer. The Chair thinks that is a question of privilege which, as it relates to the organization of the House, must take precedence of all others.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand it is in order for the Committee on Printing to make a report at any time, but that the House is not necessarily obliged to take up that report to act upon it. I think it is in order to make a motion to take up the report and have the sense of the House taken upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has been led into an error as to the nature of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky. It is not to make a report from the Committee on Printing at all. It is not upon that ground that the Chair decides that his proposition must be considered now. Congress has passed a law authorizing this House to elect a public printer and make him an officer of this House. The gentleman from Kentucky now submits a proposition that the House proceed to the election of a public printer, and the Chair decides that it is a question of privilege which overrides all privileged questions.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not in order to move to suspend the rules and go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Not if the gentleman from Kentucky presses his proposition.

ELECTION OF PRINTER.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I now submit the following resolution, which I ask may be read.

The resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That this House will now proceed to the election of a public printer for the House of Representatives to serve during the remainder of the present Congress.

Mr. STANTON. Upon the adoption of the resolution I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. GOODENOW. Is it in order to move that the resolution do lie upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. GOODENOW. I make that motion. I ask that the resolution may again be read.

It was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. BARRERE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put, and the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. STANTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

The House then proceeded, in the execution of its order, to the election of a public printer.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, nominated General Robert Armstrong.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. As there seems to be no further nomination, I move that General Robert Armstrong be declared elected the public printer of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

Mr. SCURRY. It is but seldom that I have ever troubled the House with a single remark, but I ask permission to say one word. Since I began to know anything of the relations between man and man, the name of General Robert Armstrong has come down to me as one of the purest patriots the world has ever produced.

The following gentlemen were then nominated as candidates:

By Mr. CLINGMAN—John T. Towers.

By Mr. PENNIMAN—John C. Rives.

By Mr. CONGER—Gales & Seaton.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania—George S. Gideon.

By Mr. MARTIN—Horace Greeley, of New York.

By Mr. GENTRY—Rev. William G. Brownlow, of Tennessee.

By Mr. FLOYD—William C. Bryant, of New York.

By Mr. DURKEE—Dr. G. Bailey.

By Mr. SACKETT—Henry D. Raymond, of New York.

By Mr. WEIGHTMAN—Patrick Kephart, of Santa Fe.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know by what authority the name of John C. Rives is presented here? I understand that he did not wish the appointment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to be informed by the gentleman who nominated Mr. Rives, whether he did it by Mr. Rives's authority?

Mr. PENNIMAN. I claim the right to nominate him without asking any man's consent.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am informed by Mr. Rives's friends that he does not wish the nomination. I think it is important that the House should understand that fact.

The SPEAKER then appointed Messrs. FOWLER, STANTON of Kentucky, JOHNSON of Arkansas, and CHANDLER, as tellers.

The roll was then called, with the following result: Whole number of votes, 187; necessary to a choice, 94. Of which—

The SPEAKER then declared General Robert Armstrong to be duly elected the public printer for the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK obtained the floor.

IOWA RAILROAD.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me for one moment. I desire to appeal to the House to go into Committee of the Whole and take up the river and harbor bill.

GARDINER CLAIM.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I rise for the purpose of making an appeal both to the gentleman from Iowa and to the gentleman from New York. The Select Committee appointed by the House to investigate the Gardiner claim, and the connection the Secretary of the Treasury had with that claim, have performed their duty and they wish to make a report to the House. The report is not long, and the House can dispose of it in a very few minutes. It is a very important question, in which Congress and the country feel a very deep interest. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow us to make that report, that it may be disposed of.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. CLARK. I am appealed to on all sides to give way, and I think it would not be right to make a distinction. I therefore decline.

Whatever may be the result of the application I now make to the House, I have at least the gratification to know that I have an opportunity to present a certain measure of importance to the House. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—and if it be not granted, which I hope it will be, I shall move to suspend the rules—for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 155, which provides for granting the right of way from Wabash river to the Missouri river, for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad between the points designated in the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to present this suggestion to the gentleman from Iowa. A great many members desire to have an evening session. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor, and I suggest to him if we are going to have an evening session, we had better adjourn now for that purpose, and he can still hold the floor. If the gentleman will give way I will move that the House take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. CLARK. I would not set myself in opposition to the sense of the House. If the House desire I will give way.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CLARK. Then I decline to give way for that purpose. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the bill I have indicated, and I presume I may now be allowed to make a few remarks by way of explanation of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope that the gentleman will allow me to make the motion that the House take a recess. It is the wish of many members that we should hold an evening session, and if we are to do so, I think we had better adjourn and adjourn at dinner time.

Mr. CLARK. If that is the wish of the House I will give way.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Alabama can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. AVERETT. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask the gentleman from Iowa if in case the rules are suspended he will accept as an amendment to his bill that proposition which he will recollect was discussed somewhat at length a short time ago to aid in the construction of a railroad to Pensacola.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn; but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were, on a division—ayes 63; when

Mr. HAVEN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and DAWSON appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 70.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 27, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the order requiring to-day to be set apart for private business, was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Daniel W. Davis; and

An act authorizing imported goods, wares, and merchandise, entered and bonded for warehousing, in pursuance of law, to be exported by certain routes, to ports and places in Mexico.

Also, that the House of Representatives concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1851, with an amendment, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

Also, that the House of Representatives had passed a bill entitled "An act making further provision for the satisfaction of Virginia military land warrants."

A subsequent message was received from the House of Representatives, announcing that it had passed the following bill from the Senate:

An act for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Hetzel, widow and administratrix of A. R. Hetzel, late Assistant Quartermaster in the United States Army.

Also, that it had passed a bill entitled "An act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it agreed to the first, second, third, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30th, 1853; that they agree to the tenth and eleventh amendments with amendments, and disagree to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the said bill.

PATENT APPEALS.

Also, that it had passed a bill entitled "An act in addition to an Act to promote the progress of the useful arts."

REPORTS FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported back the same with sundry amendments:

An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1853; and

An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853, reported back the same without amendment.

RANDOLPH COYLE.

Mr. PRATT submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Public Lands, to which had been referred the report of the Secretary of the Interior on the conflicting claims of Randolph Coyle, John Delafield, and the corporation of Cincinnati, to certain lands in that city; which was ordered to be printed in connection with the report of the committee on the subject.

ISLAND OF ST. DOMINGO.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 14th ultimo, requesting a copy of the correspondence of Mr. R. M. Walsh, while he was employed as a special agent of this Government in the Island of St. Domingo, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State and the documents by which it was accompanied.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30th, 1853.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a report.

Mr. HUNTER. I would give way but for the fact that the report will give rise to debate, and I think we had better go on and dispose of the important and pressing business before us.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think my report will occupy more than three minutes. It is the steamboat safety bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Other gentlemen also wish to make reports. My aim is to have the civil and diplomatic bill disposed of immediately, and therefore I must insist on my motion.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senator from Virginia will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts. I regard the bill which he desires to report as more important than the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. HUNTER. The bill which the Senator from Massachusetts desires to report is one that will give rise to opposition, and we cannot act on it this morning. I have received a remonstrance against it, and I must look a little more into it before I consent to have it pass. I must insist on my motion to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. GWIN. I call for the yeas and nays. I want to know whether or not we are to go on with the business of the country. I want to see upon the record the names of those who are opposed, to going on with the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I am opposed to taking up the civil and diplomatic bill, because the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts desires to report is of great importance to every one who may be engaged in traveling on water. It is the bill in relation to the security of the lives of passengers.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am as anxious to take up the civil and diplomatic bill as any gentleman here; but I think it is more important than to dispose even of that now that we should take up the Florida election case. I think that question should be decided at this session, or be postponed until the next session, and I shall vote against taking up the civil and diplomatic bill with a view of getting up that case.

Mr. GWIN. It is well known that the Senator from Virginia is willing to take up that case as soon as we get through with the civil and diplomatic bill. All that we want is to get one of the appropriation bills put through to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. If I believed that the civil and diplomatic bill could be put through within the next six hours, I would not object to taking it up; but there was an amendment pending when the adjournment took place last night, which will, in all probability, lead to a long debate.

Mr. RUSK. I know that the bill proposed to be reported by the Senator from Massachusetts is more important than all the appropriation bills before Congress; at least, that is my judgment from the most deliberate examination of the matter. There is no danger of the passage of those bills. I have seen just such a squabble as we are in now on the last nights of the session, and I never yet saw an appropriation bill fail. I have been alarmed heretofore with regard to their fate, but I have got over all that, and intend never to be alarmed again about the danger of getting appropriation bills through. The bill proposed to be reported by the Senator from Massachusetts—and which cannot occupy ten minutes, because every Senator must be well acquainted with it—is for the protection of human life. It has come back from the House of Representatives with amendments which I think will be concurred in immediately by the Senate. If it falls now, it is gone, and gone forever; and upon the petition of persons who are interested and making money, that bill is to get its quies. Sir, we have sacrificed human life enough. It is time that some guards should be thrown around it.

Mr. HUNTER. Is it in order to go into the merits of the bill?

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order to go into the merits of the bill. The question now pending is on postponing the previous orders to take up the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. GWIN. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the combination which exists here against the civil and diplomatic bill. The Senator from Indiana gets up and wants the Florida election case taken up, and the Senator from Texas wants the steamboat bill taken up. Here are combinations against the appropriation bills on the presumption that we are forced to pass them anyhow. I tell you, sir, we shall soon have an experiment here. These bills will be defeated if more time is not given for their consideration.

Mr. RUSK. I am in no combination anywhere. I am here as a Senator of the United States to do my duty; and I will do it. I have said I shall discharge that duty, and I would do it at the last moment of the session. We have three or four days yet, and I have had just such apprehensions as these on the last night of the session, and yet the appropriation bills got through, and reached the President, and were signed.

Mr. GWIN. I charge what I saw on the face of the Senate. The fact is evident that those who want the Florida election case taken up oppose this motion, and those who are in favor of the steamboat bill oppose it.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to postpone the previous orders with a view to take up the civil and diplomatic bill. Senators must confine their remarks to that motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion, resulted—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Brooke, Charlton, Clemens, Douglas, Gwin, Hunter, James, King, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Upham, Wade, and Walker—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Fish, Hale, Hamilton, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, and Weller—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

FLORIDA ELECTION CASE.

Mr. WELLER. I now move to dispense with the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the report of the committee on the contested election of Senator from Florida.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to make a report.

Mr. WELLER. I am very anxious to have this matter disposed of. It has been pending for nine months. I think it ought to have been settled long ago.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I would like to inquire of the Senator from California, whether he proposes to dispose of the Florida election case without giving the contestant an opportunity of answering the report of the committee?

Mr. WELLER. It will be time enough to decide that question when the consideration of the report comes up. I am not certain that the contestant desires to be heard; but I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the only arguments I have heard on the subject, are those in favor of the contestant, and I think I understand the question as well as I would after hearing him. I must ask the yeas and nays on the motion. I wish the Journal to show who is in favor of postponing this case until next session.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. I will vote for taking it up as soon as the report of the Senator from Massachusetts is made.

Mr. WELLER. If I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, he simply desires to report that bill. If that is all, I will suspend the motion until he makes his report.

Mr. DAVIS. I mean to report the bill, and to ask the Senate to act upon it at once.

Mr. WELLER. Then I cannot withdraw.

Mr. DAVIS. I would say to the honorable Senator, at the same time, that I do not expect it will occupy three minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. I apprehend the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken. There are now committees here remonstrating against that bill, and he will find opposition to it.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce reporting the bill. I have had no opportunity of examining it since it came from the House of Representatives. I would like at least from now till to-morrow to look into the bill before it is acted upon.

Mr. BRADBURY. If we could have an understanding that at twelve o'clock the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the Florida election case, I would, for one, consent to the time being occupied in making reports, and if that can be the understanding, I would ask my friend from California not to press his motion till twelve o'clock, in order that reports may be made, with the common understanding that at that hour we will proceed to decide the case which concerns the right of a member, who has occupied a seat which has been contested, thus placing him in an unpleasant condition for eight or nine months.

Mr. GWIN. If gentlemen are making their arrangements for the balance of the session, I would like to know when they intend to take up the appropriation bills.

The question being taken, by yeas and nays, on the motion of Mr. WELLER, to postpone the prior orders to proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee on the Florida contested-election case, resulted—yeas 23, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Charlton, Clemens, Dawson, Felch, Gwin, Hale, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Seward, Stockton, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Borland, Broadhead, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Fish, Hamlin, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Rusk, Smith, Spruance, Underwood, and Upham—21.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on the case of the contested election from Florida.

Mr. BADGER moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. MORTON, to allow the contestant, Mr. Yulee, to be heard in support of his petition; and after being amended on the motion of Mr. PEARCE, so as to limit the contestant to two hours, it was agreed to.

Mr. YULEE addressed the Senate for two hours; and, on motion by Mr. BADGER, the time was extended one hour longer.

Mr. BADGER also addressed the Senate on the merits of the case, the pending question being on the following resolution, which was reported by the select committee:

Resolved, That the Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY was duly elected a member of the Senate of the United States from the third day of March, 1851.

Mr. HUNTER. I must appeal to the Senate to take a vote upon this matter, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. MORTON. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to excuse me from voting on this question. It is unnecessary for me to state the reasons why I make this request. The Senate will readily comprehend the delicacy of my position.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and resulted—yeas 41, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mason, Menwether, Miller, Norris, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, and Weller—41.

NAYS—None.

So the resolution reported by the committee was adopted.

[The debate upon the above case will be found in the Appendix.]

SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE OF GOODS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 22d of January last, a statement of the seizure and forfeiture of goods under the tariff act of 1846, on the ground of undervaluation or fraud in the invoices; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY LINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 2d instant, a copy of the report made by Lieutenant Colonel Graham, of the Topographical Engineers, in relation to the boundary line between Mexico and the United States, stating that at the date of the resolution, no report, such as is described in the resolution, was on the files of the Department; that on the 19th instant such a report was filed in the Topographical Bureau, and that on the following day a copy was sent to the War Department, of which the Secretary of War was not aware until some days afterwards.

Mr. WELLER. At the time that that resolution was offered, I understood the report was filed in the War Department. It seems that it has been filed there subsequently. I move the reference of the communication, with the accompanying papers, to the select committee to whom the other documents have been referred which relate to this matter.

Mr. RUSK. That is a very important document. I move that it be printed.

Mr. CLARKE. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas that it is impossible to have that document printed in time for use during the present session. It may be important to gentlemen who wish to discuss the matter to which it relates, and I hope it will not now be sent to the printer.

Mr. MASON. That report will doubtless contain information of great interest to the American people. It refers to the question of the boundary of the United States and Mexico, and to questions that have been passed upon by this Administration in reference to that boundary. I trust that every word of it, without abating a line or a letter, may be printed, so that the American people may know its whole contents.

Mr. CLARKE. I perfectly agree with the Senator from Virginia that every line of that document should go before the American people. I agree with him that everything therein contained should be known; but if it is put into the hands of the printer, is it possible that we can see it for the next two or three days? We may want to look at it in the mean time.

Mr. RUSK. I am in no hurry to send it off to the printer. I am quite willing that it should remain here for a week, if it is desirable. All I wished was to make the motion that it should be printed, so that we might all have an ample opportunity of reading it.

Mr. CLARKE. I make no objection to its being printed—none in the least. I am perfectly willing—yea, anxious to have it printed. I have not the slightest wish that so valuable a document should for a moment be screened from the public eye; but if we order it to be printed to-day, and to-morrow we should happen to want it, it will be in the hands of the printer, and we shall not be able to obtain it. If gentlemen will allow it to be referred to the Select Committee, we can look at it in the mean time, and it can be printed afterwards.

Mr. RUSK. Very well. In order to save time, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. WELLER. I have moved to refer this communication and the accompanying papers to the Select Committee, and I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the chairman of that committee to report upon it and the other communications which have been referred to that committee in relation to this subject.

The communication was accordingly so referred.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT. The amendment pending is that offered by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] as follows:

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury at any time after the 1st day of January next, to issue to the State of Texas, such portion of the stock mentioned in the first proviso of the fifth article of the third section of the act entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by the said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico," approved September 9, 1850, as shall be equivalent in amount to the releases of the claims of the creditors of Texas against the United States, which shall be then filed at the Treasury, as in said article is provided; and in like manner from month to month to issue the said stock equivalent to such like releases as may be thereafter filed until the whole amount of the five millions of dollars reserved by said article is exhausted.

Mr. RUSK. I do not rise for the purpose of protracting this debate. I know that any lengthened discussion would hazard, if not defeat the passage of the appropriation bills.

At an early period of this session, the question raised by that amendment was brought to the notice of this body by various petitions from the creditors of the State of Texas on that occasion. I expressed a hope that we should have a report from the committee in a few days, for I was anxious to discuss the question, and, in connection with that subject, I stated that the United States were in equity bound for more than half the original debt due by the State of Texas, in consequence of the failure of this Government to comply with the stipulations of its solemn treaties.

The question comes upon us now, at a time when it is utterly impossible to discuss it. I feel anxious that it should be discussed, for I am convinced that the question is not understood. Although much has been said and written, it has nearly all been on one side, and my State has not had an opportunity of being heard. For this reason I have felt great anxiety to obtain an opportunity to lay the facts before the Senate and the country, but, pressed for time as we are now, I shall not attempt to do so. No one, I apprehend, is more desirous than I am that this business should be settled in such a manner as to do justice to the creditors of Texas, and to do justice to her reputation and standing as a State of this Union. When the question does come up for discussion I will redeem the pledge that I have made on two or three occasions, that I will show conclusively that through the neglect of the United States to fulfill her treaty stipulations, and to prevent the Indians from depredating on the territory of Texas, more than half of her present debt has been incurred; and that the United States would in equity be held liable for it by any court of equity or disinterested arbitrator in the world.

I have thought that it was right I should make these remarks, but I will not protract them on the present occasion. I could well ask those who are so urgent on this subject, what country under the sun has ever paid her revolutionary debt in twenty years? But, sir, pressed as we are for time, I shall pursue the subject no further now.

Mr. MASON. I offered the amendment, now under consideration, last evening, at an hour when I thought it would be acted on. In justice to the United States, it is only right that I should not now persist in it. I now withdraw it, not through any want of confidence in the justice of the amendment, but merely in consequence of the want of time to consider it.

The amendment was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment I offered last night:

For additional compensation as late Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, being the same amount allowed by the act of September 30, 1850, to Charles Eames's successor, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to offer the following amendment:

To enable the Architect to pay the workmen engaged on the extension of the Capitol thirty days' pay during the suspension of the work, the sum of $19,000; to be paid out of the appropriation authorized by the joint resolution approved April 14, 1852: Provided, That no workman shall be paid who was not employed at the time of the suspension of the said work, or who was discharged for incapacity or irregularity of conduct.

That part of the bill which I wish to amend increases the pay of the clerks in the several departments. We have classified these clerks, and determined to advance their salaries according to a certain ratio, giving some an advance of twenty per cent. on their salaries, others ten per cent., and others five per cent., giving the largest increase to those who receive the smallest salaries. These are all employees of the Government. The workmen for whom I wish to provide by this amendment were four months out of employment. The amendment which I offer has been well considered, and is well guarded. It is founded upon an estimate made by the Architect, and is to be paid out of the $500,000 which we appropriated last winter for the extension of the Capitol. It only proposes to pay them for thirty days, when, in point of fact, they were out of employment for four months. The objection to this proposition, in the early part of the session, was that we provided for them during the suspension of the work. I do not see that there can be any reasonable objection to this amendment, because it only provides for the payment of a fraction of the time which they lost; and they were all employed under the Government. It was an inclement season. These are poor men, and I think the provision I propose is both an act of justice and an act of charity. I think that those gentlemen who go for an increase of pay to the clerks employed under the Government, cannot object to give these poor men some little compensation for the time they then lost.

Mr. CLARKE. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania may be perfectly correct in principle; but, at this hour, I conceive that it is impossible for the Senate to give it due consideration. There are one or two reasons why I consider that this motion should not be adopted by the Senate without some deliberation. It will be remembered that in a discussion which took place, some time since, in this body, it was stated that the workmen who are engaged on the extension of the Capitol were informed, by advertisement, previous to the commencement of the work, that they would be employed until the month of December; and it was also stated that they were employed during the month of December, until the weather became so severe that it was necessary to discontinue operations. It was found that there was a deficiency in the appropriation for the erection of these wings; and, in consequence of the delay that took place before the necessary funds were placed at the disposal of the Executive by Congress, the work was not resumed in the spring until much later than had been anticipated. These men were, undoubtedly, engaged to work on the extension of the Capitol, and the work during the spring months was somewhat delayed, for the reason I have assigned, and they may by that means have incurred some loss of time; but, sir, although it is a matter of little importance to the United States, in a pecuniary point of view, whether they receive a little more or a little less, I am of opinion that there was no sort of obligation incurred to remunerate these men during the time they were unemployed. The advertisement in the public prints, through which they were invited to come here, stated that they would be employed until the month of December, and again in the spring of this year; but I know of no contract entered into with them, by the Superintendent or the Architect, which would authorize a demand on the Government of the United States for employment at an earlier date than it was possible to pass the appropriation; nor do I know of any contract which would authorize them to demand compensation for the time that they remained unemployed. That is one reason why I shall object to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania at this moment; but, in addition to that, I have another. I understand that there is something else connected with this transaction, which should entitle it to the serious consideration of the Senate. I understand that a system of black-mailing has been carried on towards the employees, which will enable certain persons, in some manner or shape, to avail themselves of the influence or advantage which may be gained from the support of other men. I understand that contracts are existing at this moment which will redound immensely to the advantage of those who are the contractors. And I understand that there is a singular proposition afoot now, relative to certain portions of this work, which would have been much better left undone. For instance, look at the arches recently erected—

Mr. BRODHEAD. I rise to a question of order. The amendment which I offer is to pay these men each for thirty days' lost time during a suspension of nearly four months' work. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island is not discussing the amendment, but the question whether the walls of the Capitol are substantially made. I apprehend that is not the question, and that the Senator is not in order.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg pardon of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I think he is as wide of the mark as the two poles. I am speaking to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor.) The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My question of order is, that the gentleman from Rhode Island is not confining himself to the question.

Mr. BRADBURY. I rise to another question of order, and that is, whether this, being strictly a private claim—supposing that there is any claim at all—can be attached, under the rule, to a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order. It is not permitted under the rule.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The amendment was ruled in order last evening, because it does not propose a new appropriation, but merely a partial disposition of an appropriation already made. It is to come out of the $500,000 appropriated for building the wings of the Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There can be no discussion on the question, unless the Senator from Pennsylvania appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think my amendment is in order, but I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to offer an amendment. In page fifty-five, line eleven, after the words "per cent." insert the following:

And the same per cent. or additional compensation shall be paid to the clerks and employees in the Washington city post office.

This amendment gives twenty per cent. additional pay to these employees. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have another amendment:

For the temporary employment of additional clerks in the Auditor's Office of the Treasury, for the Post Office Department to complete the postmasters' commissions, rendered necessary by the act of Congress reducing the rates of postage, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to offer another amendment:

And that the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department shall be allowed a salary equal to that of the head of any other bureau, to commence from and after his appointment to office.

So that the whole clause will read:

"For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks, messengers, and assistant messenger in his office, $34,800; and that the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department shall be allowed a salary equal to that of the head of any other bureau, to commence from and after his appointment to office."

Mr. HUNTER. I think that we have not time now to go into this question of the deficiency of salaries. The scale now in existence contains many inequalities, and is a subject of much complaint; but we have not time to take it up now. We propose to take it up next session, and endeavor to form some general system.

Mr. RUSK. I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I think that if I make a very short statement there will scarcely be a dissenting voice to the amendment. I have had a long personal acquaintance with the Second Auditor, who is the object of this amendment, and I can speak of my own knowledge of his skill and usefulness as a public officer. When he commenced his duties, there was a large amount of business growing out of the Mexican war in an unsettled state in that office; forty-five clerks were employed then, and for some time past; the annual appropriation for the pay of clerks was then $51,057; now the business has been all brought up, the number of clerks has been reduced to twenty-five, making a saving of some $40,000 or $50,000 to the Government, and this year the appropriation will probably be only $34,800. I believe it is the only instance within my knowledge, in the history of this Government, of a diminution, instead of an increase, in the expenses of the office and the number of clerks employed; but although this is the case, the business of the office is promptly and well done, as I believe every one who has business connected with it can testify. I do hope that there will be no objection on the part of the Senate to this amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the business of that Department is diminishing, and that the large amount of business which accumulated there, grew out of the Mexican war. However, I shall not say anything to disparage the abilities of the Second Auditor. I will merely say that the Senate should remember that there are other public officers who ask for an increase of pay; and that it is scarcely right to take any step which would bear the appearance of inequality of treatment.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not suppose that it is necessary to say a single word in advocacy of this proposition. My experience of the skill, promptness, and extraordinary capability and fidelity of the officer referred to, prompts me to express a hope that it will be passed without a dissenting voice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I move further to amend the bill, by striking out the following words:

"For the completion of the light-house of the third class at Red Fish Bar, Galveston Bay, Texas, $500,"

—and insert:

For the construction of three light-houses in Galveston Bay, to wit: one at the head of Red Fish Bar, one at Half Moon Shoal, and one at Clopper's Bar, to be respectively of the fourth, fifth, and sixth order, in lieu of three light-houses provided for in the appropriation bill of March 3, 1851, $5,000.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the Senator will withdraw that amendment. I understand that the House of Representatives has adopted a new policy in reference to light-houses, and that there will be a general bill before the Senate on the subject; and when that bill comes up, the amendment of the Senator from Texas can be put into that bill.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that the Senate Committee on Commerce have unanimously recommended the rejection of this light-house bill, and it will therefore be necessary to act upon the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PRATT. But it may be that the Senate will not concur in the report of the committee, and the bill may be passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say, that whatever may be the action of the Senate in regard to the adoption of that system, it will not preclude appropriations from being made for light-houses. This, however, is the first time I ever heard of a civil and diplomatic appropriation bill being made into a light-house bill.

Mr. RUSK. I did not make the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill a light-house bill. The appropriation was in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and I desired to amend it. I withdraw the amendment, however, for the present.

Mr. MANGUM. I move to amend the item making an appropriation for clerk hire, &c., for the completion of the census, $50,000, by adding:

Out of which the Superintendent of the Census shall receive $3,000 per annum.

It will be remembered that this matter was fully discussed some time ago. The Senate at that time obviously acted under a misapprehension that the Superintendent claimed two salaries. He never did claim them. He has received that sum hitherto, and I only ask that it may be continued.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no particular objection to that amendment, but it was my purpose to strike out the whole appropriation, on the ground that no necessity exists for it now. I dislike to occupy the time of the Senate by entering into a discussion; but I will say that there are circumstances connected with this matter which should be known to the Senate and the country. I repeat that I have no particular objection to this amendment per se, nor to the receipt of this increase of salary by the person for whose benefit it is proposed; but I am opposed to the whole appropriation, and I may as well make my remarks on it now as at any other time. I intend, sir, to move to strike out the whole of this appropriation of $50,000 from the bill; and if it be in order—though I presume it will not, be—I will make that motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to discuss or make any motion affecting the original proposition. The consideration of the Senate must now be given to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM.]

Mr. BORLAND. Then I will wait for another opportunity.

Mr. DAVIS. What is to become of the census bill already passed, which was designed and intended to give a salary of $3,000 to this individual? If this amendment should pass, it will be an additional appropriation for the same object.

Mr. MANGUM. Not at all. The bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers is now pending in the House of Representatives, and there is no probability that it will be acted upon.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire to offer an amendment to the second section, which provides for an increase of the salaries of certain clerks, by inserting the words—

And also the clerks in the city post office.

It will be seen that in this section provision is made for an increase of pay to the clerks in the various Departments of the Government. It is hardly necessary to say a single word in support of this amendment, for it is well known that there are no persons in the employment of the General Government that are so constantly in the exercise of duty as those persons who are engaged in the city post office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remind the Senator from Rhode Island that these persons have been provided for by an amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARKE. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I made an effort on a former occasion to include in the provision providing for extra pay to the clerks and others employed under the Government in this city, those who are employed in the arsenal and navy-yard. I propose to insert in the second section the words "and the arsenal and navy-yard." That part of the section will then read:

"That the clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers employed at an annual salary, or in temporary positions in the executive and legislative departments of the Government, and the arsenal and navy-yard in the city of Washington," &c.

The section, if thus amended, will include the clerks, messengers, watchmen, and laborers in these two branches also with the others. It is not necessary for me to say that the same causes which rendered this increase of pay necessary in the one case are equally operative in the other.

Mr. BRODHEAD. When I proposed a similar amendment in regard to the laborers employed on the wings of the Capitol it was ruled out of order. I think this is precisely a similar case to mine, and I ask that we may have a similar decision in regard to it.

Mr. GWIN. It is only to give a fair compensation to these men. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHIELDS. All I ask is, that men performing similar duties in the same city may be put upon the same footing. I think we ought not to have special and partial legislation. I do not know that I would have undertaken the responsibility of recommending any such increase of pay generally; but as it has been determined upon in some cases I think we should deal equally and fairly with all.

Mr. PRATT. I propose to add to that amendment these words:

And the workmen employed on the public buildings.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope that the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] I object to these sweeping propositions for additional compensation to "all creation and the rest of mankind." The effect will be to suck the last dollar out of the Treasury.

Mr. PRATT. It was precisely my object to bring in "the rest of mankind." "All creation" was already provided for.

If the clerks in the Departments, and the people employed in the arsenal and navy-yard are to be taken care of, I see no reason why the working men on the public buildings should be neglected. I am in favor of that sound Democratic doctrine which entitles all to equal favor from Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. That is right. That is right.

Mr. PRATT. I repeat that all classes in the employment of the Government should be put on the same footing; and for that reason, I hope my amendment will be carried.

Mr. CLARKE. I am a democrat by birth, a democrat by education, a democrat by practice, a democrat in principle; I have lived a democrat, and I will die a democrat, so that no man can filibuster beyond me in that sort of regard for "the rights of the people" for which he does not care a snap of his finger. I have as much regard for the working man as any one. I was one of that class. I was a laborer myself.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. On the Capitol.

Mr. CLARKE. No, sir; on a capital infinitely more interesting to me. On my own capital, and if I had no more than my own, I should have failed long since and gone into liquidation.

We have made provision by law for building two monstrous structures, the very outside of which is an enormity, the inside of which will be an abortion, and the totality of which will be a fatal blow to anything like public decency and public taste in this country. [Laughter.] You have appointed an architect, somebody has appointed a superintendent, and somebody else has appointed another officer who figures as a sub-superintendent; and these officers have invited a number of mechanics and laboring men to come here, and have given them employment on the extension of the Capitol. There is no provision by law to regulate the wages of these men. The superintendent pays them just as much as he chooses, after making a deduction, which is reserved for some especial object; and now you propose to make an addition to the wages of these men without ascertaining what rates are now paid, and not even excepting those who came at the eleventh hour, and who have not borne the heat and toil of the day! Why, sir, if you pass this proposition, and grant an additional remuneration to that man who stipulated that he should receive a dollar per day for his work, he will remain lost in astonishment at a degree of beneficence on the part of the Government, which utterly passes his comprehension! I think that there is no necessity shown by the Senator from Maryland, and I do not think that it is a fair amendment. Those persons working at the arsenal and the navy-yard, to whom it is proposed, by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] to grant an increase of compensation, must bring to the execution of their task a large amount of mechanical skill, and no inconsiderable degree of knowledge and science; and if it should be apparent that an increase of pay is essential for their maintenance and comfort, what reason is there that we should go abroad into the streets and call on all men to come to us, as we are ready to grant them a bonus in addition to what they conceive to be the true value of their labor? The cost of these buildings will be sufficiently large without adopting any such extraordinary means to drain the Treasury; for I will mention to gentlemen a fact with which they may not be acquainted—that although the estimates make the probable expense appear something like $3,000,000, the Architect himself says that it will not be less than $6,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to know whether these laborers are not engaged under a contract made by the superintendent?

Mr. PRATT. I would state to the Senator from Mississippi, that I have offered this amendment in accordance with a petition signed by these laborers. A committee of their number, deputed by them, waited on my colleague and myself, and presented their memorial, asking for extra compensation. This amendment is offered in accordance with that memorial.

Mr. ADAMS. I have not had an answer to my question. I asked whether the superintendent does not make his contract with these laborers, and whether he has not power to increase their compensation, if he should think proper?

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not know why the laborer is not entitled to increase of pay as much as the clerks and other employees of the Government. The unusual price of provisions in this city, certainly renders it as necessary in their case as in that of the clerks that they should have larger pay. The argument urged for this increase in regard to clerks and messengers, applies with much greater force to the laborer and mechanic, for we all know that a much greater proportion of their earnings has to go for the necessities of life than that of the clerks, who receive higher pay. If this is not a sound argument in favor of increased pay to the laborer, it certainly shows that the whole thing is wrong. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WELLER. A very short answer to all this argument in favor of the laborer is, that the contractors who employ these laborers have the power to increase their pay whenever they choose; but the head of a Department who employs clerks has no such power. The salary of each clerk is fixed; and let his merits be what they may, the head of a Department has no power to reward them. He is in no better position than the most idle or inefficient, and in this respect has no inducement to put forth his energies. It is not so with the laborer. To him competition is open, and he can at all times find the value of his labor.

Mr. SHIELDS. The object of my amendment is to increase the pay of those whose salaries are regulated by law. I take it for granted that the superintendent has the power, whether you legislate in regard to this matter or not, to increase the pay of these men, according to their merits and the necessity of the case. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, although I scarcely think it is necessary.

Mr. DAWSON. Do I understand that this amendment is to increase the compensation in all the workshops and arsenals and navy-yards in the United States, or is it only to apply to the city of Washington?

Mr. SHIELDS. Only to those in the city of Washington.

Mr. DAWSON. And what is the difference between those engaged in the arsenal and navy-yards here, and those engaged in similar establishments elsewhere? Again, Mr. President, I suppose we are now about to carry out the principle which has been adopted by the present Congress—I mean the abandonment of the contract system, and to pay every man according to the imagined value of the services he has rendered; that hereafter no man can enter into a contract with the Government, unless he reserves the right of having his pay increased. As I understand it, these laborers are paid by the day. If they do not receive sufficient compensation, the agent who employs them ought to be instructed to pay what is reasonable and just. How can we here undertake to pay an individual who hires himself by the day? If he agrees to work for $2 per day, it is supposed that that is the full market value of his labor; and how can we undertake to increase his remuneration twenty per cent. above that? There seems to me to be an incongruity about this, and in my judgment it will be the means of introducing much confusion. I go for full pay to all the laborers who are employed on any of the Government works. But this is a bad way to attempt to establish it; and if this rule is to be applied to the arsenal and navy-yard in the city of Washington, I think it should extend to every similar establishment in the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely wish to ask whether it is right that the Government of the United States shall give more for labor than individuals are able to pay? and whether the whole tendency of this system is not to disturb the arrangements of the laboring community, and induce working men to come here because this is a privileged place in which labor is paid at a higher rate by the Government than it is possible for individuals to pay? The whole operation of this amendment, in my opinion, is to disturb the condition of the laboring men, and to press them into the service of the Government. This is a species of rivalry with private employers that I am not disposed to encourage.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected; the question then recurred on the amendment, and on a division there were—yeas 18, nays 20.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I offer the following amendment:

For grading and paving with round stones the carriage-way of Pennsylvania Avenue from Seventeenth street west to Rock Creek, setting curb stones on each side thereof at a distance of twenty-five feet, and placing foot-ways wherever necessary, $20,000.

That amendment proposes to improve the avenue from the War Department to the western limits of the city, which now, you may say, is nothing but continuous mud-holes.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I believe that this amendment was rejected last evening. I wish to inquire whether it can be in order now?

Mr. BRIGHT. That is not the same amendment at all. This proposes to improve the main avenue by paving and curbing it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I offer the following amendment, as an addition to the item of $125,000 for printing and binding:

Provided, That in settling the accounts for the printing of the Thirty-first Congress, one half of the prices given by the joint resolution of 1819 be allowed, not exceeding the amount that would be paid under the respective contracts if settled by the prices named in the bill of the House of Representatives, which passed on the 31st of July last, in regard to the public printing, estimating the paper at the actual cost thereof, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to know under what authority that amendment gets in here?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Under the rule. I offer it to the appropriation in the bill for the contingent expenses of the two Houses—part of these contingent expenses is for printing—for work now being done for the current year. The work is still going on.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise to a question of order. I am under the impression that this amendment is not admissible, as it relates to a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I desire to say that, if the amendment passes, it will give the contractor of last year an increase of more than $200,000 beyond the contract prices. I know what I say. I have the papers in my possession to prove every word of it. And I say, further, that the contractor has never presented an account of his debit and credit, or an exhibit of the cost of the work, either to Congress or to the committee; and from my own knowledge of printing, I can state that, although he may have lost a small sum of money, a careful printer would not have lost a single dollar under his contract, in my judgment. If the Senate, however, at this late hour of the session, persists in paying over this sum of $200,000, I desire to wash my hands of the whole affair.

Mr. CLEMENS. The Senator from Maine says he has the proofs in his pocket.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir.

Mr. CLEMENS. I want to see them. Let the Senator produce them in the Senate. I want to see them.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not say I had them in my pocket. I said I had them. They are in the committee-room.

Mr. CLEMENS. Then I say, let the Senator go to his committee-room, and get them. We want them all. If there is such proof here, I want to see it. I do not believe it can be produced.

Mr. PEARCE. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair. The Senator from Maine rose directly after this amendment was offered, and when the Chair decided it to be in order, I supposed he was going to take an appeal from that decision. I found that he did not make an appeal, and I endeavored to get the floor; but the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] got it before me, and he was not inclined to give way for that purpose. As soon as I could obtain the floor, I rose to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I did so, and now I ask whether I cannot take an appeal under such circumstances?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly. The gentleman can take an appeal.

Mr. PEARCE. Then I will take an appeal. The amendment introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is an indirect method of evading a rule of the Senate. We have had a petition pending here, asking the Senate to make an allowance to the contractor for the printing of the last Congress beyond the amount for which he stipulated to do the printing. That is strictly a private claim, if it be a claim at all. And now, instead of inquiring into that private claim as all other private claims are inquired into and disposed of, we allow, if we allow the decision of the Chair to stand—and I must say that I think the Chair did not perceive the object of the amendment when he made the decision—that to be done in an indirect manner which could not be done directly. We allow, under a peculiar phraseology, the introduction of a private claim of a very doubtful, and certainly of a disputed, character. I will not detain the Senate further than to state that I think this is strictly a private claim, and that it ought not to be brought into this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] was admissible under the rules of the Senate, and from that decision the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] has appealed. The question is now whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The question was taken on the appeal, and, on a division, the decision of the Chair appeared to be sustained.

Mr. CASS. The Chair must have been in error in the count.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WELLER. I ask for a recount, for several reasons. One is, that I believe the question was not understood by the Senate; and another is, that the Chair must have been in error in the count. I, at least, was of opinion that the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. SMITH. I object, decidedly, to a recount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it due to itself, and to the Senate, that a division on the appeal should be again taken.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Cass, Charlton, Clemens, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Stockton, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Fish, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Mangum, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—22.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SMITH. I cannot but regard it as a matter of a great deal of regret that a question of this character should be brought before the Senate at this period of the session, and particularly that an effort should now be made to settle what I have regarded as a mere private claim by way of an amendment to an appropriation bill—an amendment introduced to the consideration of the Senate without having been printed; without having been considered or reported by any one of the standing committees of the body; not having been considered by the Printing Committee, nor even having been referred to it—a mere amendment brought in here in the handwriting of one of the honorable members of this body, under circumstances which make it extremely difficult for me or any other member of the body to ascertain what is the purport of it, and what will be its operation. If I understand it, it corresponds substantially, and I do not know but exactly, to an amendment which was obtruded upon the Senate, or rather offered in the Senate—I will not say obtruded—by way of an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill two years ago. It proposes to give to the printer of the last Congress, for all the printing he did during that Congress, one half the prices given by the joint resolution of 1819. Then it goes on to provide that the amount to be allowed for that printing, whatever it may be, shall not exceed the amount that would be paid under the respective contracts, if settled by the prices named in the bill of the House of Representatives which passed on the 31st of July last in regard to the public printing.

I have to say, in the first place, that this is a very remarkable reference. I desire to know what it is that is referred to in the latter part of this amendment. It refers to some bill which passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLEMENS. Read the whole of it.

Mr. SMITH. The latter part of the proviso is, "that the amounts to be paid shall not exceed what would be paid under the respective contracts if settled by the price named in the bill of the House of Representatives, passed on the 31st of July last." What does that refer to? To a bill that has passed the House. I do not know what that bill is. I suppose it refers to the bill which we passed in the Senate, I believe, day before yesterday. This is a very awkward reference at any rate. If it refers to that bill, why not say so? If you refer to an act of Congress, why not put in it when it was approved by the President? But this proviso says that Mr. Ritchie—for that is the amount of it—shall have one half of the prices specified in the joint resolution of 1819. Then it goes on to say, that although we agree that he shall have one half of those prices, he shall not have, at any rate, more than is contained in the act of Congress to which I have alluded. I would inquire of my honorable friend from Alabama, why not refer to the act of Congress? The way it is expressed now is no limitation at all. The prices contained in the bill which recently passed the two Houses of Congress, as I am informed, though I have not particularly investigated the subject, are altogether more than one half of the prices named in the joint resolution of 1819. I am told so by a practical printer, though that bill was carried through the Senate so rapidly, and I may be permitted to say, with so little consideration, that it is quite impossible for me to say precisely what the prices are that are specified in it; but I have this to say, that this enactment, by the way of a proviso, corresponds, I believe, with the proviso that was offered towards the close of the last session of Congress. I unite with my friend from Maine in saying that the Committee on Printing have investigated that proposition. We thoroughly investigated it. We have looked into all its details. We have caused all the calculations to be made, and I do not hesitate to declare, in the broadest terms, that I unite in what my honorable friend from Maine says. I desire to hear my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] on this subject. I tell the Senate that it was the judgment of every member of the Senate Committee on Printing that the amendment proposed at the last session, which I suppose to be the same as the one now under consideration, would hand over to Mr. Ritchie a fortune of no less than $100,000. I repeat here, that this amendment, over and above covering all the outlay Mr. Ritchie has incurred in this regard, will amount to that. I say it is the deliberate judgment of every member of the committee. If the honorable Senator from Arkansas entertains a different opinion from what I now express, I do not know of it. I ask the honorable gentleman to declare, in the face of the Senate and country, whether we did not make minute calculations—whether we did not take document after document, volume after volume, page after page, and go through all the items, and make out the result? Yes, sir; we went into the calculations. I cannot produce them here. If you will report a bill to relieve Mr. Ritchie, and give me the chance to bring the calculations and all the details, I will demonstrate that you are about to put $100,000 into his pocket.

A SENATOR. How much did Mr. Ritchie lose?

Mr. SMITH. God only knows whether he ever lost a penny. But, sir, I would be glad to get rid of Mr. Ritchie. I want to buy the peace of Congress. I want to buy him off; and I am going to propose an amendment to the amendment. I will give $10,000 to get rid of his clamor. He is not entitled to one penny. He broke his contract from beginning to end in the most outrageous manner. Now, individuals sometimes buy their peace, and nations sometimes buy theirs, and I do not know why Congress should not buy its peace. I would agree to pay Mr. Ritchie what would be a good fortune for me, to get him out of Washington, and get rid of his claim. In place, therefore, of the miserable limitation proposed in the amendment, which is no limitation at all, I propose to strike out all after the word "allow," and add the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount to be allowed under the foregoing provision shall not exceed the sum of $10,000.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to obtain information. This question has been presented to Congress before. I think at the first session of last Congress, after a long debate upon the same question, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] offered an amendment which met with the concurrence of the Senate. If I recollect the proposition which then passed, it provided that two or three persons who were named in the bill itself—practical printers—should ascertain the actual expense to which Mr. Ritchie had been put in doing the work of Congress for which he claims compensation, and that we should pay him that amount, together with ten per cent. profit upon it, with the proviso that it should not exceed a sum specified in the resolution. I have endeavored to find it, but have not as yet succeeded in finding what was the action of the Senate upon that occasion. My object is to inquire of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, or the honorable Senator from Connecticut, or some other Senator, whether I recollect correctly.

Mr. BORLAND. I think I can relieve the Senator from Connecticut from some difficulty if he will yield me the floor. I will make a suggestion in the form of an additional proviso, which I will read directly, but which, if the Senator will permit me, I will preface with a few words.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. It will be recollected that in the last Congress a bill or resolution passed the Senate allowing to this printer ten per centum upon the whole amount of his expenditures in the execution of the public printing. That was based upon the consideration that he had taken a contract by which he had lost money, and that it was not proper for this Government in any of its Departments to receive a valuable consideration from any individual and refuse to allow him an adequate compensation. An estimate perhaps not precisely accurate, but approximating as nearly as was practicable at that time to accuracy, assumed that the printer had lost from $20,000 to $30,000 by his contract, and that the resolution if adopted, would approximate to, if not pay him the full amount of $20,000 over and above his expenditures, leaving him for returns to himself upon his large investment and several years' labor about $20,000 profit, which was not deemed extravagant. That resolution failed in the House. The consequence was that no allowance at all was made.

Now, I deem it due to myself and to the Committee on Printing and to the Senate to state why I cannot support the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. It became my duty as chairman of the Committee on Printing, to make an estimate of the amount which would be paid to the printer under the bill of the last session which came here and failed, and which the Senator from Illinois now proposes to revive in substance by his proviso. I found, after the most thorough examination and accurate calculation, that the increased amount which would be paid to the printer by that bill, and which will be paid under this proviso, if adopted, would, over and above the amount which he would receive under his contract, be about $214,000. This was no conjecture. It was the result of actual calculation in figures, put down by men whose business it is to make such calculations, and whose accuracy ought not to be, and will not be, questioned, when I state that the same persons who made them have for the last three years and more had accounts passed at the Treasury Department for more than $320,000, and not an error to the amount of three dollars in that whole time has ever been detected. Sometimes, when an error was supposed to have been detected at the Treasury Department, after they had compared it with the estimate, the officers of the Treasury Department have receded, and admitted that they were correct. I state this as evidence of the character and competency of the individuals upon whom I have relied for this estimate. I could not in conscience, in the performance of my duty, agree to pay to any contractor over and above his contract that large amount of money. At the same time I admit that the contractor, for whatever cause I am not able to say, did actually take a contract which was unwise, and upon which, in my opinion, he lost between $20,000 and $30,000. The contract was a very large one, involving several hundred thousand dollars. Then, believing that he has actually lost that amount, and being unwilling to take his labor and the proceeds of the investment of capital for the use of the Government, without allowing him a fair compensation, I have estimated the amount that ought to be allowed him as nearly as I have been able to do so, and embodied it in the form of an additional proviso. I propose to allow the settlement to take place as proposed by the Senator from Illinois, and to add:

Provided further, That the amount to be paid said contractor shall not, over and above what he would receive under his contract, exceed $50,000.

This will allow him between $20,000 and $30,000 for his loss. It will cover that, and allow him for his whole investment of labor for several years in the service of the Government a profit of about $20,000. I think this is fair and reasonable. I think it is as much as any one ought to ask. I think it is not more than the Senate ought to be willing to give. Here was an investment of many thousand dollars in a large printing establishment. A heavy responsibility was incurred, and a great deal of labor for several years given to the public service. I do not think a compensation of $20,000 for that is too much. Considering that the individual voluntarily took the contract, to the exclusion of others who would have taken it at a higher price, in a fair competition, he ought not to ask more than $20,000, when at the same time he is released from all obligation by the contract, which, if strictly enforced, would not only subject him to the losses already sustained, but the loss of many thousand dollars besides, being the penalty of his bond. With these remarks, without going more into detail, to show the grounds upon which I base my statement, I submit this additional proviso, and hope the Senator from Connecticut will say no more on the subject, but let it pass.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have not delayed the business of this Senate, nor have I prevented the civil and diplomatic bill from being taken up at any time. I was desirous of taking it up this morning. I desire now that it may progress in the proper way; but I doubt very much whether it will ever pass, if amendments of this kind are constantly offered. I see Senators around me who are constantly asking that the civil and diplomatic bill may be considered, who voted to sustain this amendment. What is it Mr. Ritchie claims? About $200,000, according to the statement of the honorable Senator from Maine. And he has slept upon this claim for nine months this session. A poor pensioner, or any man having a small claim, must go before the committees of this body and have it fairly examined. Where is the petition in this case? Where is the report? Where is the evidence upon which we are to give $50,000, according to the statement of the Senator from Arkansas? We have heard a great deal about economy and reform during this session, and many charges have been made against the Whig Administration for wantonly squandering the public money. I state fearlessly here, that the Senate of the United States is the most prodigal in the expenditure of the public money of any Department of this Government. Sir, we complain that this Whig Administration has expended some fifty millions a year, but to that the Senate of the United States has added ten millions. Not only have we voted the fifty millions which the Administration has demanded, but we have gone far beyond it. We have voted some four or five millions to extend the Capitol. We have voted an appropriation to the Collins line. That commenced here.

Mr. WELLER. We did not vote so much for the extension of the Capitol.

Mr. BRODHEAD. A proposition was made to discontinue the work on the Capitol. My honorable friend from California voted with me, and I say that the proposition which I made upon that occasion to discontinue the extension would have saved $4,000,000. We have, in addition to this, voted an addition to the Collins line of $1,000,000. We have voted $5,000,000 for French spoliation; and if there was improper work about the Mexican Board to get $3,350,000 on claims get fifteen years old, how much will there be to $5,000,000 upon claims sixty years old? Not only that, there are a great many other projects, which always originate in the Senate. Why is all this? and why should the claim not be investigated? This gentleman has had nine months to bring his case before this branch of the Legislature in a proper way. But it is now urged almost upon the last day of the session as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill. Sir, I protest against it. It is an improper way of legislating. It brings the Senate into disrepute. I hope it will be voted out altogether. A little while ago I offered an amendment for an appropriation of some few thousands of dollars to the laborers on the extension of the Capitol, but it did not stand any chance at all. It was declared out of order; but, sir, when an appropriation of $200,000 is asked, or $50,000, of which the Senator from Arkansas says he will have $20,000 profit, it is ruled in order. Why are we to look to his profits? There was his contract. Let him stand by it. If he loses, was it our fault? If he made, let him have it. Mr. President, these are my views. I do not wish to detain the Senate. I did not come here merely to make a speech to consume time; but, sir, I protest against this kind of legislation. I protest against this kind of amendments—these big amendments, after voting down the little ones.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to say a few words in explanation of this amendment, as it has been assailed on all sides. I had no idea of waking up such a rage and passion all around me. I am satisfied of one thing: that if this amendment be a wasteful expenditure of public money, it will be difficult for figures to count up the amount which we have been squandering heretofore. The public printing had been done by Mr. Ritchie for more than twenty-five per cent. less than any man on the earth has ever done it. Talk about the present contractor being below it! The present contractor has done no work according to his contract. It is a mockery upon printing to call it work; and we have abandoned it upon the ground that he had violated his contract, and not done the work according to it.

Our prices of 1819 are well understood. After a series of years, when it was supposed that the work could be done for less than those prices, you reduced them so as to make them twenty per cent. below the prices of 1819. That was done, if I recollect, under a Democratic Administration. Blair & Rives performed the work at twenty per cent. below these prices. When, in 1840, the Whigs came into power, they thought they would imitate the Democratic example, and they passed a resolution to bring the prices twenty per cent. below those of 1819; but, at the end of that Congress, after their printers had enjoyed the work during the whole two years, and upon the suggestion that Gales & Seaton, the editors of the Intelligencer, had lost money in doing it at twenty per cent. below the prices of 1819, the two Houses of Congress repealed the proviso, and paid them the full prices of 1819. Now, sir, if, as the Senator from Connecticut says, this is squandering public money, what are we to think of him and his friends, who paid double the amount to their printers when they were in power? It is an admission that they paid double the prices which this amendment proposes to pay Mr. Ritchie. How is it that you paid the full prices of 1819 to Gales & Seaton, the Whig editors, when they did the printing, and then talk about extravagance when we propose to pay half these prices to a Democrat who has done the public printing, and lost his fortune by an unfortunate contract? I believe that Blair & Rives once did the printing subsequently, at twenty-five per cent. below the prices of 1819, and that, according to my recollection, is the lowest at which the public printing has ever been executed by any public printer since the beginning of the Government. No Whig gentleman has ever done it short of the full prices of 1819. Democratic printers have executed it at twenty-five per cent. less.

Now, sir, on this amendment to settle the accounts of Mr. Ritchie, who we know is a man old in the public service, who has retired from the press, and ceased to be a partisan, and is now ruined and bankrupt, by having executed our work for less than it could be done, at one half what you have paid the Whig printers whenever they executed the work—and twenty-five per cent. less than any man, Whig or Democrat, ever did perform the printing for—I do not understand this outbreak of extravagance. Again, we passed a law only two days ago appointing a public printer to do the work hereafter, and we fixed a scale of prices in that law. Now, let us look and see what that scale of prices is, for the amendment provides that the prices to be paid Mr. Ritchie shall not exceed half the prices of 1819, and shall also not exceed the prices which are to be paid to the public printer under the law which was passed the day before yesterday. What are the prices of the public printer that is to be appointed under the law? I cannot tell precisely what they are, but I know this to be the history of them: First, a select committee was appointed in the House of Representatives to ascertain what were fair and reasonable prices for the public printing, and that select committee, composed of Whigs and Democrats, indiscriminately, with a distinguished Whig as its chairman, called before them all the leading printers of this city, and took their testimony as to what were fair and reasonable prices; and after having consulted all the different printers, Whigs and Democrats, and all the different papers in this city, and the job offices, they came to the conclusion that the tariff of prices fixed by them was a fair and reasonable rate to be paid to whoever should be the printer, whether Whig or Democrat. They reported that bill to the House of Representatives. It also received the sanction of the standing Committee on Printing. After thus being introduced by two committees, one the standing committee of the House, and the other the select committee appointed for the purpose—after having carefully examined every item, the House took up the bill to act upon it, and that House, upon the motion of a Democrat, still, out of great precaution, lest too much should be paid, reduced the prices twenty per cent. below those fixed by the two committees, and in that shape they sent the bill to us. The Senate took it up and passed it as it came from the House.

Now, in providing to settle the account of Mr. Ritchie, I put two limitations upon the amount to be paid. First, it shall not exceed one half the amount paid to the Whig printers heretofore. Second, it shall in no event exceed the amount which you are to pay, under the existing law, to the public printer who is to execute our work in future. How it is that gentlemen can denounce this as being a wasteful extravagance of the public money—as being favoritism to an individual, after the two Houses of Congress have passed that law, I am unable to understand. It is a charge against the Senate and the House of Representatives—it is a charge against Congress. It is a charge of infamy against their own conduct, when passing a bill upon which the ink is scarcely dry at this moment; and if the charge be true, I would like to know what excuse any Whig upon this floor is to have for having paid twice this amount for every particle of work which has ever been executed by any Whig printer since the beginning of the Government? If these charges be true, what punishment would be adequate for them? I do not believe a word of them. Sir, I believe the prices are fair and reasonable. I believe the present law gives fair and reasonable prices to the public printers who are to do the work in future. I believe that these are only fair and reasonable prices to Mr. Ritchie, for work which he has executed. I find this explanation necessary in justification of myself for bringing forward this amendment. My object was to get rid of this old claim. Let us pay up, and begin anew. I thought that I was getting within bounds if I got it at half the price for which the work had heretofore been done. To guard it still further, I have restricted it to the prices in the bill which we have passed. If this is wrong, we ought to repeal that act. There is no excuse for continuing it a moment, if these prices are too high for Mr. Ritchie. Then, I apprehend that the remarks which I have made have shown that this is, by all the inferences that can be fairly drawn, a fair settlement; and that the charge is not well founded, that these prices have not been considered by the committee, because it had the sanction of the two committees of the House of Representatives which reported the bill. In that point of view, I think we have all the safeguards that could be asked, against paying extravagant prices for this printing.

Mr. PEARCE. I was not aware that this proposition was pending after the vote upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair, until I heard it read a second time. I had supposed that when that question was whether the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the Senate, the affirmative could scarcely be maintained by a tie vote. If I had heard the announcement of the Chair, I should have taken an appeal from that. I was too late, however, to do so.

And now, sir, what is the proposition before us? Three years ago Mr. Ritchie contracted to do the public printing at certain specified prices, and upon certain specified terms. He was to furnish paper of a particular sort. The printing was to be of a certain quality, &c. For all that he was to receive the prices for which he had offered to do the work. I believe it is not contended that he was ever refused the prices for which he contracted to do it. I take it, that every dollar due him under the contract has been paid, or is ready to be paid whenever he chooses to demand it. But after he has entered into that contract—after the period for the execution of it has elapsed, he comes before Congress, and asks—what? That Congress will give him a gratuity, over and above that for which he had contracted, to become the printer of the proceedings of Congress. He asks a gratuity from the Treasury of the United States. He asks you to do that which never was done before—he asks that which you have positively refused to do in the case of the contractors for the public printing who preceded him. Wendell & Van Benthuyzen were contractors for Congress before. After they had completed their work, they came before Congress, made an exhibit, and, so far as I know, a fair and honest exhibit of their receipts and expenditures, showing a loss of $18,000, and asked Congress not to make them a large gratuity, but to indemnify them from loss. That, to be sure, would have been a gratuity; but not such a one as is asked for now. They asked indemnity for losses, and appealed not to the justice of Congress, but to their liberality; and what was the answer? We turned a deaf ear to their request. I believe that not a single member of the Senate favored their petition. Why is it that we thus make fish of one and flesh of another—that we refuse to do equity to one party, and shower it in superabundant liberality upon another? Why is it that we, who never pay for a contract for cannon, powder, or provisions, or anything else more than we stipulate for, desire to pay to this printer an enormous gratuity? What particular merits had he? Did he perform his contract exceedingly well? Has he a particular claim upon the liberality of Congress? Recollect what was said in a report made by the special committee in the other House, upon this subject. It may be useful to recall the statements of that report. I beg leave to ask the attention of the Senate to the facts which I propose to state. A part of Mr. Ritchie's contract was to furnish paper of a given quality, and a certain weight per ream. The testimony of a person employed in his office was, that he did furnish paper of that quality and weight for the numbers of the documents which were laid upon the desks of the members; but that, for the long numbers—far exceeding in amount those laid upon our tables, sometimes one hundred fold—he furnished inferior paper, costing several dollars less. This was a systematic business. For the number placed upon our tables, a certain kind of ink called "book ink" was used, which, I think, cost forty cents a pound; but for the long numbers, which were to be sent to our constituents, without our inspection, for whom anything was good enough, twenty-five-cent ink was used. That is the testimony, and that is the sort of performance of his contract—the exact and faithful performance of the contract, for which he now demands this gratuity!

The Senator from Illinois has asked, how can we condemn this, who, when some nine or ten years ago, we had a majority of Congress, gave to the printers of that Congress a larger compensation than they were entitled to? I will tell you how. The printers, in 1841, were elected under the joint resolution of 1819, which was, in every essential, the law of the land. This law fixed the rates at which the printer to Congress should be paid. It was alleged, when the resolution to which the Senator has referred was made, that the joint resolution being a law, it could not be repealed or diminished in its force, except by law. It had never been repealed by law. It is true that, at the commencement of the session of 1841, we had elected printers to the two Houses of Congress, and that we stipulated that the rates of compensation should be twenty per cent. under the prices of 1819. That was the stipulation made by the Senate for itself, and by the House of Representatives for itself. But this agreement was not in conformity with law. The law of 1819 was still outstanding. I do not deny that I think, according to the spirit of fairness and the arrangement by which the printers were elected, they ought not to have received the twenty per cent. They had a legal technical claim to it; but I also think, in fairness, it should have been considered as waived, because they had made a special contract for doing the work. I do not complain that the Senator condemns that transaction; but what justification does that which is pronounced an outrage ten years ago, offer to what is pronounced to be and is a much greater outrage now? Shall we set off one piece of Galphimism with another? It is common, now-a-days, to talk about Galphimism, and I shall talk of it, if this resolution passes, with much more propriety and force than those who denounce the transaction which originated the term. In that case a sum of money was paid out of the Treasury in pursuance of a law passed by Congress, and upon the decision of the Attorney General. A large amount of interest was paid; and it is to be observed in that case, if one of the parties had been an individual instead of the Government, a court of equity would have enforced the payment of the interest. Nay, more; they would have enforced compound interest, because there was a trustee, who held the fund, who had misapplied the fund—who had received the profits of the fund, and, in all such cases, a court of chancery, holding the party liable, would have made him pay compound interest. That is declared to be a monstrous outrage; and Galphimism is now a cant word among party men. But I ask what is there in Galphimism half so outrageous as this proposition, which is to take from the Treasury a large amount of money—we know not how much—upon no pretense of law, but in the teeth of a contract not meritoriously performed? The Senator from Maine estimates the amount of gratuity which Mr. Ritchie will receive under this amendment, at $200,000. I do not know whether that is too large; but whether it is so or not—whether the amount is only half that sum, or, if we take $50,000 out of the Treasury—nay, if we take anything to give to a contractor who is not entitled to it according to the stipulation of his contract—not entitled to it, because of any meritorious performance of his contract, we will do that which is quite as serious a wrong as anything which is implied in the term "Galphimism." If it had been common for Congress to make gratuities—if it had been common for Congress to relieve from hard contracts those who entered into them unadvisedly, and that cannot be said in this case, there would be some sort of justification for this; there would be the justification of precedent and usage; but there is no such precedent, certainly, in the case of public contractors. In the case I have mentioned, that of Wendell & Van Benthuysen, you refused the application as if it had been a trifling impertinence, and not a serious appeal to your liberality.

The honorable Senator from Alabama says, where is the proof that this large sum of money will be given to Mr. Ritchie if this amendment passes? Sir, we can but reason from what we know. Is it reasonable to think that we should have a demand made upon us at all, unless he was to get something to which he was not entitled? He does not pretend that there is any money due him which the Government will not pay. He asks for that to which he is not entitled; and as to the amount of it, we must get it from men competent to inform us. If I had expected this debate to come up to-night, I should have been prepared to show something about it; but I have in my hand a paper, the "Daily Globe," of the 26th of August, from which I will read. From the editorial, I read the following:

"3d. I will undertake to establish before any competent tribunal that the heavy claims, scarcely less than $100,000, and the more than $10,000 which Mr. Ritchie proposes to throw in, to get Congress to give him his new terms, are utterly unfounded in every just construction of either his bid or his contract. The bills which he has presented have been reported against by the Committee on Printing of the Senate, and although Mr. Ritchie may have induced the 'best jurists in the country' to pronounce in favor of them, from an ex parte representation and false statement of the terms of his contract, yet he cautiously abstains from asking Congress by law, to authorize the decision of these claims to be made by the judicial tribunals, to which questions, purely legal, between the Government and a citizen, are usually submitted. Mr. Ritchie avoids a trial where both sides can be heard.

"4th. I will prove that Mr. Ritchie's constant clamor, that 'the immense quantity of public work done under his contract' is a grievance, is sheer hypocrisy—that the extra quantity which his friends voted him, and which he exclaims against as the cause of his ruin, has been the real source of his profit, and should have saved him from loss under his contract. He pretends now, that he refused my offer to give him a premium to let me take the burden complained of from his shoulders, because he 'had no confidence in my doing the work well. I offered to give him bond and good security, and take the journeyman in his office, in whose name he (Ritchie) held the contract, to superintend and see it well done. Knowing that this was too shallow a pretext, he adds, that he had every reason to believe that I would shape my accounts so as to operate against his claim for relief.'"

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to ask if there is any proof attached to that publication?

Mr. PEARCE. No, it is the statement of John C. Rives, editor of the Globe.

Mr. CLEMENS. Then it is a personal controversy.

Mr. PEARCE. There is something more than that. There is nobody here prepared to give an account and show how much Mr. Ritchie lost. What does the honorable Senator from Connecticut propose? That we shall pay Mr. Ritchie $10,000, over and above what he would receive from his contract.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. Rives is one of the very men who has executed the printing for Congress. Did he ever do it for less than thirty per cent. below the prices of 1819?

Mr. PEARCE. His contract some years ago was for twenty-five per cent. under these prices, and Mr. Ritchie made a contract of a different sort, under the law of 1846, which required it to be let to the lowest bidder. He made it with full experience, for a part of the public printing for the prior Congress, under this same act of 1846, had been executed at his office; and because Mr. Rives made a contract some years before, under a different law, at prices rather better than Mr. Ritchie's, therefore we are now to disregard the contract and the law, and put a fortune into the contractor's pocket. That seems to be the argument. I confess I do not understand the force of it. I said that the honorable Senator from Connecticut, in a spirit, I think, of liberality, proposes to give Mr. Ritchie $10,000 more than the contract prices; but that is not enough. One would think it would satisfy a horse-leech; but it is not enough, it seems. My honorable friend from Arkansas, who is not usually given to extravagant liberality, if I understand his proposition, proposes to give him $50,000 more than his contract allowance. He has more of a practical knowledge of printing than I have, and perhaps more than most of us have, and he thinks that these would be very good terms for Mr. Ritchie. I am informed that the Senator added, that by giving the $50,000, Mr. Ritchie would have $20,000 clear profit. It seems, then, that we are, in this case, although we refused indemnity heretofore, to give more than an indemnity to Mr. Ritchie. We are to indemnify him for all his losses, and fill his pockets when, as I said before, he is not entitled by meritorious services to any particular favor at our hands. I never heard the statement denied that the long numbers of the documents contained paper vastly inferior to that of the sample which his contract bound him to furnish. He made large sums of money by using that inferior paper. This fact is not denied, and yet we are called upon to give him indemnity for his alleged losses, and to put at least $50,000 into his pocket. How much the proposition of the Senator from Illinois will yield to him, no one can tell.

Mr. SMITH. I will remind the Senator that the Senator from Maine says that the amendment will give Mr. Ritchie $200,000 over the contract prices. The Senator from Arkansas says it will give him $214,000.

Mr. CLEMENS. We want the proof of that. Mr. PEARCE. These are opinions which I am glad to have. We cannot always have proof, and it behooved those who introduced this proposition to bring the proof. They who maintained the affirmative of the proposition, those who are ready, as a "measure of justice," or liberality, to pass this amendment, ought to be prepared to show the amount of the liberality which they intend to bestow. It is for them to bring proof, not for us who object to that course and stick to the contract. They have failed to produce the proof. We have the opinions of two Senators, of whom one is now chairman of the Printing Committee, as was the other at the beginning of the session, and one of whom, I believe, was once connected with the press. They tell us what they think the amendment will give to the contractor. We are entitled to look to the opinions of those gentlemen, instead of that proof which ought to be furnished on the other side. If there has been a loss they should show it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to ask the Senator a question. I recollect that a proposition was introduced by a Senator from Missouri, who has not now a place upon this floor, (Mr. Benton,) to elect a public printer and pay him twenty per cent. less than the prices of 1819. My recollection is that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Maryland both voted for it. It is a matter of recollection with me merely. Now we propose to put it at fifty per cent. less than the prices of 1819. I ask the Senator if he did not vote for that proposition?

Mr. PEARCE. If the gentleman alludes to any contract, all I have to say is, that I remember nothing about it. If he alludes to a proposition some two years ago to make compensation to Mr. Ritchie, or extra allowance to him, I did not vote for it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do not refer to that. I refer to Mr. Benton's resolution.

Mr. PEARCE. I have not the slightest recollection of any such proposition. I do not know when it was made. This I do know, that just before Mr. Ritchie made his contract, I endeavored to obtain in this Senate the passage of a resolution, by which we should suspend the operation of the act of 1846, and delay the new contract, then about to be made, until we could so arrange its terms as to make its faithful execution more certain. Many of us were dissatisfied with the working of the contract system. Members of the Senate who are now present, will recollect that I produced samples of the miserable paper and execrable printing which was furnished under it. I fell under the displeasure of some gentlemen on the other side, for the course which I pursued; particularly a Senator from Pennsylvania charged me with endeavoring to put an end to the contract system, and to restore the prices of 1819. Of course I entertained no such design, but I desired to see something done by which the public printing might be compelled to be furnished according to the contract. It was thought that my resolution might interfere with the contract that was afterwards obtained by Mr. Ritchie; and so, though I think the resolution was passed, it was reconsidered and rescinded; and then the contract was made by Mr. Ritchie, who was eager to get it—as eager as he is now to throw it off, and demand more than it allows him.

I shall not consume any more of the time of the Senate on this subject; but I mean that the people of this country shall know that although it has never been our practice to give gratuities to those who enter into contracts, and suffer losses by them, that when we have refused to indemnify one contractor who brought before us a statement which we had every reason to suppose to be fair, showing a loss, yet now, when another contractor comes who does not show the amount of his expenditure and losses, but urges general losses, which may be, and no doubt are, to a large extent, losses upon his newspaper publication, instead of leaving him to be contented with his losses, as Dogberry was, we intend that he shall be a gainer by them, that he shall have a "fortune buckled upon his back," and treat the contract and the law as if they were nullities. It is right and proper that this thing should be discussed, that everybody may know that what "justice and liberality" refuses to accord to one losing contractor of the Government, is readily and profusely granted to another, and for no good reason that any one can assign.

Mr. TOUCEY. I have not been involved in any question with regard to the public printing, nor am I in the midst of the heat of any controversy of that kind. I think the proposition that is now made is a fair and reasonable one. A committee of the Senate and of the House have inquired into the fair prices that should be paid for printing throughout this country. We have gone into that inquiry and have inquired of the most experienced men, and both Houses of Congress, acting upon the results of it, have made out a tariff of prices. Now the proposition is, that for the printing of the last three years or longer, a compensation shall be made not exceeding the tariff that has thus been established; for if I understand the proviso annexed to the amendment, it limits the compensation to these prices. Is it not just? Is it not right? Is the Congress of the United States, which needs a large amount of printing executed, unwilling to pay fair and remunerating prices? If any man has entered into a contract with us, in times past, by which he has sunk his fortune and been ruined, I ask if now, when we are called upon to make an adjustment for the work done, whether we should not do what any fair and honorable man would do in settling a contract with another which had proved ruinous to him? Does the Government of the United States—does the Congress of the United States—wish its printing to be done at less than a fair and reasonable price? And if, through accident, or mistake, or in any way, you have a bond by which you throw the reasonable expenses of printing, for this and the other House, upon a private individual, which has brought him and his family into bankruptcy, are you to exact the penalty upon that bond?

If I understand the proposition which is made, it is general. It is not confined to one man. It extends to the case of Hamilton, and to all the public printing which has been done under contract. I say, it is unbecoming the Congress of the United States to impose the burden of the public printing upon any private individual, whoever he may be, or of whatever party he may be. We are bound, as employers, to pay those who are engaged to do a necessary service for us, a fair and just compensation. We are bound to pay just and remunerating prices. Now, we have passed a law, upon full inquiry, establishing a reasonable rate of prices for our printing, and I understand the proposition is, that you should settle the existing contracts of those who have done the public printing for two or three years upon the same terms. I must confess it strikes me as a fair and reasonable proposition. With regard to the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, as to the deficiency of the paper, the amendment provides for that by requiring payment to be made according to the actual cost of the paper, and if any portion of the printing was done upon paper that is of less value than any of the rest, it is to be paid for according to the actual cost.

I regret that a question of this kind should become a political question. It ought not to be so. It is a question of justice to individuals, and if there is any class of men in the country who ought to be compensated it is the working-men—it is the class of men who are engaged in this business. I repeat, I think the proposition now before the Senate is just and reasonable, and what an honest and just man would be ready to do in his own affair.

Mr. HALE. I rise to gain information. I was out of the Chamber when the amendment was read. I desire to ask if the account which the honorable Senator from Connecticut has just given of it is correct; for if it be it will commend itself to my judgment more favorably than I had supposed. I understood him to say that this is a general proposition—that it is not special, applying to Mr. Ritchie alone, but includes Mr. Hamilton, and I suppose Wendell & Van Benthuyzen. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The amendment was accordingly read.

Mr. HALE. I see, then, that it is not so. The Senator from Connecticut is mistaken. It applies only to the Thirty-first Congress, and does not apply to the former contractors. Then, if there is anything in the argument of the Senator, it is obnoxious to the very charge from which he endeavored to vindicate it, and that is, that it is special and applying to one individual.

Mr. TOUCEY. It ought to be general. I thought it was.

Mr. HALE. Then I suppose, as the Senator was mistaken, he is not in favor of the proposition, for he condemned it if it was special.

I will say now, as I have always said, that I desire not only to do justice to Mr. Ritchie, but to be liberal to him. I have always desired to be so. I have said so to friends in the Senate, and out of the Senate. But, sir, I do want to see, before I vote for this, a report of a committee, or a statement of Mr. Ritchie, or somebody for him, by which I may see that he has lost money, and how much he has lost. If anything of that sort has been submitted to the Senate, I have not seen it. If there be any such statement, I am ready to act upon it. I am not governed by any consideration, except a desire to do justice to an old man. Mr. Ritchie is an old man. He is a gentleman, who stands very high with a great party in this country, and so far as I have known anything of him, I have had no reason to find fault with him. He used to rub me pretty hard sometimes, it is true, but it was nothing more than was fair in politics. I have no animosity to him. I desire to be just and liberal to him, but I desire, as a Senator, that I may have the data by which to determine whether he lost anything, and what he lost. I will take Mr. Ritchie's word for it, or I will take the statement of any committee who may investigate the matter. But I am unwilling to vote in the dark. It is said that this amendment will give Mr. Ritchie $100,000 or $200,000. I say again I am unwilling to do anything in the dark, but I am willing, if a statement is submitted by which to aid us in our action, to be just and generous.

Mr. TOUCEY. I supposed that the language of the amendment was broad enough to include the compensation of those who have held contracts before. I thought it would include Mr. Hamilton. I think it ought to do so. I will vote for any amendment, or any proposition that will place him or any other contractor upon the same ground; because I hold that it is the duty of this Government and of Congress to pay those who are engaged in its service fair and remunerating prices; and if they have entered into a contract under a misapprehension, or in any other manner, and do not obtain fair and remunerating prices, I will give them to them, and especially to those who, notwithstanding the ruinous nature of their contracts, have gone on and met our demands, so as not thereby to impede the public business. That is the principle upon which I act; and I should not shrink in the application of it to any case whatever.

Mr. BORLAND. I will not repeat what I said before as to the considerations which actuated me in the suggestion I made to the Senate; but remarks have been made which call for a few words in explanation of my proposition. My proviso provides further, that the amount to be paid for said printing over and above the amount which would be paid under the terms, and at the rates of the contract for the same, shall not exceed $50,000. Some Senators have said that they could not act, for want of data; others have said that they wanted the calculation in figures, upon which I and the Senator from Maine had stated the amount which would be paid to the printer, under the proviso of the Senator from Illinois. I do not pretend to be accurate to a dollar. I do not pretend to any precision of calculation. I stated the result, however, of a very long and patient calculation, which I believe to have been as accurate as it is in the power of any man in this city to make; and I did state, and I repeat, that the figures are here. If any Senator desires to look at them, they will convince him, beyond a doubt, that if this printing be paid for at one half the prices of 1819, the printer will receive $214,000 more than the contract would give him.

The Senator from Illinois called our attention to a further limitation in his amendment as to the price, which did not strike my ear at the moment it was read. It brings the amount to be paid within the prices allowed by the printing bill which we passed a day or two ago, but against which I voted. I admit, that restricting it within the rates provided for in that bill, it would be something less, but I do not believe that the prices provided for in it will be a great deal less than fifty per cent. off the prices of 1819. As I stated the other day, previous to giving my vote, an exact comparison cannot be made between the prices of 1819, or any deduction from them, and the bill which we passed, because the paper is excluded in the bill that passed the other day. It is a difficult matter to separate the paper, which has heretofore, under the prices of 1819, been included in the press-work, folding, stitching, &c.

My proposition is a practical one, a specific one, which it seems to me there is no difficulty in understanding, and no necessity for data and calculations to make it intelligible to the Senate. The proposed object of the proviso of the Senator from Illinois, is to save the contractor from loss, and allow him a fair compensation for his labor. Will that Senator, or any one else, say that he desires to pay more than $50,000 to cover that loss? I apprehend not. I have never heard it pretended that the losses were so much. It may be so, but it has never come to my ear in a way in which I could understand or appreciate it. I stated that I believed Mr. Ritchie had lost more on his contract for this reason: In 1849, when I entered upon the duties of chairman of the Committee on Printing, I took up his contract, and carefully examined it. I took up Wendell & Van Benthuyzen's, who had been the contractors of the preceding Congress, and I found that Mr. Ritchie's contract—or Trenholm & Belt's—provided for rates below those of Wendell & Van Benthuyzen. Wendell & Van Benthuyzen, in the latter part of the session of 1848 and 1849, presented a memorial to the Senate, which had been referred to the Committee on Printing, which proved, beyond a doubt, that they had lost $17,000. There was a loss proved. I had no doubt of the amount, and I found that Mr. Ritchie had taken the work at a less price. I believed then, from what I thought would be the amount of work ordered under his contract, that he could not possibly lose less than $25,000 or $30,000. What did I do? I drew up a letter, as chairman of the committee, which met with the concurrence of the committee, to the contractors, telling them "that Wendell & Van Benthuyzen's contract has proved a loss of $17,000. I find, by comparing your contract, that you have undertaken the work for less. To my mind, the result is inevitable. If you go on

"under the contract, you must lose a great deal of money, and I propose to you now, before Congress adjourns, that you come forward and surrender your contract, and let a new arrangement be made, because the committee have determined, if the contract is maintained, they will see that it is faithfully executed in every particular, and will let no personal considerations influence them to receive work below the contract; and unless you do inferior work, and furnish inferior paper, you must sustain a ruinous loss." After consultation, they agreed with me, that such was the fact, and they would be compelled to lose money if they went on with the contract. No alteration, however, was made.

I do not state this for any other purpose than to show the foundation upon which I base the opinion I have expressed, that they have lost money. They went through with the contract—it is not necessary for me to say how. That would involve a great deal of statement and discussion, which I am not disposed to go into; but I state it as the basis of my opinion, that they have lost money. My estimate is that they lost from $20,000 to $30,000—not less than $20,000, and I do not believe more than $30,000. I think it is a fair basis upon which to make the estimate. Then, as I stated when up before, I do not think these contractors, or any contractors who have made a bad bargain with their eyes open, in the face of competition, have a right to claim any extraordinary liberality on the part of the Government to release them from their obligation, and pay them a profit upon what would otherwise be a loss; but, on the other hand, I am very far from being willing, either as an individual or as a member of the Senate, to receive work at the hands of any man and refuse him a fair and living profit on it. For that reason I have fixed upon the sum of $50,000, allowing $30,000 as the maximum of the loss which I think Mr. Ritchie may have sustained. That will allow him a profit for four years' labor of $20,000.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I desire to ask the Senator, as he was chairman of the committee, whether Mr. Ritchie was not paid all that his contract called for, and whether Wendell & Van Benthuyzen were not paid all that they could claim under the contract? If so, if one sustained a loss of $17,000 and the other a loss of $20,000, why did he not put them all in? Why not put Wendell & Van Benthuyzen in the proviso—the Senator asserts that they incurred a loss of $17,000—if we are going to pay all these losses? I know very well my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD], never agrees to pay upon a contract where the Government has not been in error, and where the contractor incurs a loss through his own fault.

Mr. BORLAND. My friend inquires if Wendell & Van Benthuyzen, and Mr. Ritchie, have not been paid the full amount which their contract would give them? Of Wendell & Van Benthuyzen I know very little as to what was paid them. The last of their accounts was settled about the commencement of my service on the committee, as they were the printers before I came here. With regard to Mr. Ritchie, I have no certain knowledge; though there can be no question, as the accounts will show, that most of them had been settled. But I must state this: During the time that I was chairman of the committee, I never had brought to me to be audited a single one of Mr. Ritchie's accounts. None were presented while I was present in the committee. In my absence, during the recess of Congress, many of them were audited by the board, consisting of the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, and the Clerk of the Printing Committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I stated, when this debate commenced, what was the sum which would be paid to Mr. Ritchie upon half the prices of 1819—I stated that it would be over $200,000. I thought then, that the detailed statement prepared by the clerk of the Printing Committee was in my desk here; but it was not. I went to the Printing Committee room. The clerk had furnished to one of the members of the House the statement which I had. I am, therefore, not able to furnish the details; but I will furnish figures, with which I trust my friend from Alabama will be satisfied.

The whole amount of printing received by Mr. Ritchie under his contract was $145,000. Now, take the documents upon which these sums were paid, and estimate document by document upon the prices of 1819, and then take one half of that, and it leaves $384,000. The Senator from Alabama is not quite satisfied with this. Perhaps other Senators may be. I will state the manner of estimating it. I hold in my hand a detailed estimate of one document in four parts, for the purpose of showing specifically just how the sum is arrived at.

Mr. CLEMENS. The point is, was the $145,000 the value of the printing which Mr. Ritchie did?

Mr. HAMLIN. I raised no such question. I stated to the Senate what I now stand here prepared to prove. The statement was made out by the clerk of the Printing Committee, and not by myself, though it was examined by me. I stated that half the prices of 1819 would add to the price of Mr. Ritchie's contract more than $200,000. I am proceeding to prove it. He has received $145,000 on the contract, and on these documents he would have received under one half of the prices of 1819, $348,000. That makes a difference of $203,000. There are Espy's Report, and some other minor matters, which, when paid for under the contract, and these scaled by the resolution of 1819, would make the amount, as near as can be calculated, $214,000. That is the difference between half the prices of 1819 and the contract. How do I derive it? I hold in my hand a detailed statement of one of the documents, in four parts—the Patent Office Report—and I find that, under the contract for that report, he did receive $65,182 50. One half of the rates of 1819 would have amounted to $158,939 83, showing that he would have received for printing that single document, under the prices of the resolution of 1819, $93,757 33 more than he was entitled to under the contract. The details of that document are as follows:

1st session Thirty-first Congress.—Under the prices of 1819, fifty per cent. off, Patent Office Report, 130,000 copies, would amount to.....	$54,753 04
Second part of same, 65,000 copies.....	30,104 54
Mechanical part of Patent Office Report, 2d session Thirty-first Congress, 45,000 copies.....	15,903 95
Agricultural part for 2d session, 135,000 copies.....	58,274 00
	$158,939 83
For same work under contract price, Patent Office Report, 130,000 copies, would amount to.....	$22,243 75
Second part of same, 65,000 copies.....	23,985 00
Mechanical part of Patent Office Report, 2d session Thirty-first Congress, 45,000 copies.....	6,548 25
Agricultural part for 2d session, 135,000 copies.....	12,405 50
	$93,757 33

What is his actual loss? I answer, we cannot tell; but it is one of the easiest things to tell what was the cost of his work; what the paper cost; what the composition cost; what the ink cost; and what were the rents. An account current can be stated of the cost of every item that has ever been done; but the committee have never seen any such account; consequently we are left to form the best estimate we can as to what was the cost. In my judgment, a prudent, careful printer would have executed the work, in the manner in which it was done, without the loss of a single dollar. I have no doubt of it. That it was so executed, I do not believe; but that there was a loss upon it, and that loss varies somewhere from $20,000 to $30,000, I have very little doubt. I think the Senator from Arkansas is probably nearly right in his estimate. If we are to settle this matter upon equitable terms, it would seem reasonable that we should be presented with an account, to enable us to determine properly what we should give. I have been to the committee room since this discussion commenced; but had I supposed that it would have taken place, I would have been ready to furnish more definitely the precise figures; but I am now able to state that the bill which passed this Senate the day before yesterday, gives higher rates than one half of the prices of the rates of 1819. They are probably ten or fifteen per cent. higher; and if you adopt the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, the latter clause will make no deduction from the amount.

Mr. SMITH. It has been stated over and over again, that the rates introduced into the bill, which has recently passed the two Houses of Congress, were carefully investigated by the committee of which the honorable Senator and myself are members. I want to know if that is so.

Mr. HAMLIN. That matter never underwent an investigation before the Committee of the Senate. I was opposed to the whole system. The Senator from Connecticut did not fully agree with me. The Senator from Texas was disposed to favor the bill; consequently we made no investigation of the prices in it when it was committed. There was never any investigation of the subject.

On two occasions when the committee met, the Senator from Texas was, from sickness, unable to be there, and when he did come there we were desirous of reporting the bill back to the Senate, and never went into an examination of the prices in the bill. The committee disagreeing as to what should be done, and no two agreeing, there was no investigation made, or opinion expressed by the committee as to the prices fixed upon in the bill.

Mr. RUSK. There was no time.

Mr. HAMLIN. Besides there was no time, as the Senator says. But one word in relation to another point that has been raised. It has been said that other contracts have been made, and other sums paid in addition to the contracts. That is no rule by which I can be guided. Other Congresses may have made a contract, and then abrogated it; but that furnishes no guide for me. If they have done wrong, it is not a rule for me. If they have done right, be it so. I mean to do in this case what I believe is just between the parties and the country. Comparing the contract with the prices of the resolution of 1819, if the paper cost five or six dollars a ream, and if the printers and presses worked at night, the resolution of 1819, with twenty-five per cent. off, would pay less profit than it would when the paper cost $3 30 per ream, and the printers worked only in the day time. In the latter case they could afford to do it for fifty per cent. off the resolution of 1819, and make more money than they could to execute the resolution of 1819 fairly with twenty per cent. off. The very difference in the mode of executing would furnish a very handsome profit. That is the fact in relation to these contracts. Everybody who knew anything about printing, knew that the printing of the last Congress and of the present was most shamefully executed, and as a member of the Printing Committee my vote stands recorded on its Journal then, as at this session, against receiving the work done, and then as now, simply because the work did not conform to the contract, and because I desired that the contract should be faithfully and fairly executed. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] concurred with me, but we were overruled by a majority of the Joint Committee.

Mr. SMITH. While on that point, I wish to inquire whether the Senate committee did not appoint me a sub-committee to determine whether the work should be received or not, and whether I did not assume the responsibility of receiving it when we all knew that there was no conformity with the contract?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think, probably, the Senator is right; but the fact has gone out of my recollection. I only know that I was against receiving the work last year and this, simply because it did not come up to the standard and conform to the contract.

Taking this state of the case as it presents itself, it seems to me that we do injustice to ourselves, and injustice to the country, if we pass an amendment like that which has been offered by the Senator from Illinois. If the matter were one to which the Senate should give its favorable consideration, I am free to say that I think the proviso suggested by the Senator from Arkansas would deal very fairly and justly with the contractor; but believing, as I do, that it is neither just nor right to make a contract, and then to pay for a willful violation of it, I cannot agree, according to the dictates of my judgment, to give one farthing.

Mr. CLEMENS. The Senator from Maine has not met the point between him and myself. He stated, as I understood him to state, that Mr. Ritchie would make $200,000 by his contract. He says I misunderstood him. Then he does not assert now that Mr. Ritchie made any such amount. He does not pretend to assert, as I understand him now, that there would be anything made by him; because he does not pretend to say that the documents in his possession prove that any such amount could be made, or that any amount could be made. He says he does not know what the losses are, but we all know that there was a loss upon the contract. We all know

Mr. Ritchie did lose by it; and I say here in the face of the Senate, and of the country, that I want nobody to work for us without getting a compensation for it. I want every man who does work for the Government of the United States, not merely to get pay for it, but to make a reasonable per cent. The Senator from Maine does not pretend to assert that this amendment would give Mr. Ritchie more than a reasonable per cent. He voted, according to my recollection, for Mr. Benton's resolution, to give twenty per cent. off the prices of 1819. We propose to deduct fifty per cent., and this it is said is extravagant and extraordinary. Why did not they think it was extravagant and extraordinary then to deduct twenty per cent. only? We propose to deduct thirty per cent. more, but it is extravagant now, while twenty per cent. was not extravagant then. I cannot understand this process. I do not profess to understand it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me to interrupt him, I wish to say that I have no means of knowing whether the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas will be acceptable to Mr. Ritchie or not, as the terms of settlement. I understood him to say, when I spoke to him as to whether he would agree to my amendment, that it would be the least possible amount that he would accept. As to accepting the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, I should be apprehensive that there would be a difficulty in determining what would be due Mr. Ritchie under the contract, but I am willing to leave that to those who are to audit his accounts, and if they cannot agree, to leave it to referees. I will, therefore, take the responsibility for myself, binding no others to accept the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, limiting the amount to $50,000.

The PRESIDENT. That will not be in order while the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is under consideration.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to withdraw his amendment, to allow the Senator from Illinois to incorporate my proviso in his amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I have such entire confidence in the sound judgment of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, that although I think Mr. Ritchie ought not to have one dollar, and if we give him anything that it ought not to be more than $10,000, that I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I accept the proviso of the Senator from Arkansas, so that my amendment will read as follows:

Provided, That in settling the accounts for the printing of the Thirty-first Congress, one half of the prices given by the joint resolution of 1819, be allowed not exceeding the amount that would be paid under the respective contracts if settled by the prices named in the bill of the House of Representatives, which passed on the 31st July last, in regard to the public printing, estimating the paper at the actual cost thereof, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: And provided further, That the amount to be paid for said printing, over and above the amount which would be paid under the terms and at the rates of the contract for the same, shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not mean to detain the Senate long, but I have one additional remark to make. If I had not sufficient reason already for voting against the proposition, I should find it in this: Before the contract system was adopted, Mr. Ritchie was the public printer under the old system, for how many years I do not remember, whether it was two or four, but he was, I know, the printer for Congress before the rates were reduced by the contract system, and during that time he made—he must have made, no man with any sort of prudence, with anything but the grossest mismanagement would have failed to make—large sums of money. It has been urged over and over again, that he did make large sums, and I have no doubt of it. I have heard it said that he made $100,000 while he was the printer to Congress before the contract system was adopted. Having large profits at a time when large profits could be made, with what propriety does he claim that we should now indemnify him for alleged losses made under a less favorable contract? Upon the whole, taking both contracts together, he must have made largely, and yet we insist upon giving him $50,000 more. I am glad that it is reduced that much, but that is rather more than we are in the habit of giving to the greatest benefactor of the country. What great statesman is there who has ever had the bounty of the Government showered upon him as this public printer, who did not perform his work faithfully? What has he received who fought the battles of the country in three wars, who covered himself and the country, too, with glory? Has he ever been rewarded in such a manner? It seems to me that we are acting as if it were not our purpose to reward merit; not to reward great services of distinguished men—men who have won immortal renown, and are entitled to our gratitude. Nobody can deny that Mr. Ritchie has been largely the gainer in the whole; yet, it seems he has not had money enough paid to him, and we are called upon still further to fill his pockets.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is with great reluctance that I address the Senate on this occasion; but it does seem to me that a very curious course has been taken by the opponents of this amendment. If I understand the Senator from Maryland, he says he has information that a large amount of money, perhaps $100,000, was realized by Mr. Ritchie while he had the printing for Congress. If suggestions of this kind are to be taken for conclusions, it is not the way I wish to be enlightened on subjects upon which I am to act. If I believed—notwithstanding Mr. Ritchie is a Democrat—that he was not justly entitled to the amount that it is here contemplated to give him, I would certainly oppose it as soon as I would if he were a Whig.

In administering justice and recompense to persons who have deserved the public confidence, or who have rendered services to the public, I do not ask of what political faith or profession they are, nor am I ready to receive or give credence to reports that may be in circulation as to the amount of money they may have realized. There is sufficient in this case to satisfy my mind that Mr. Ritchie, in his last contract with the Government, was a large loser. If, sir, he has rendered services or furnished materials to the public for the public benefit, I should think it humiliating on the part of this Senate, or any deliberative body, to deny a just and fair recompense. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." If he has rendered services, is this Government in such a pitiful condition as to refuse him a just reward for the labor he has rendered? Is this Government in a condition to exact from its citizens any contribution, either in labor or otherwise, and not render them a just recompense for it? I think not. I always look to whether the individual has a just demand against the Government, and if he has, I am willing to recompense him. I care not under what circumstances it arises, I never permit myself to be influenced by the fact that an individual made a bargain with the Government, when that individual has acted under an oversight, and has been injured to any amount. I am willing to recompense him out of the Treasury; and I do trust that the honorable Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber are not actuated by considerations of a political character in this case, or the recollection of events which have long since transpired.

It is true that for fifty years—it was the first newspaper I ever read—the Richmond Enquirer has been the consistent and faithful opponent of the gentlemen on the opposite side of the Chamber. Its editor has been faithful in his vocation; he has been true to his party, true to his principles, and for that I would respect him. If Gales & Seaton had a similar claim presented to this Congress—they have been my consistent opponents, and I believe they are always generous and just enough to think that I thought they were wrong and I was right—if they were placed in the circumstances of Mr. Ritchie, I would vote for their claim with as much alacrity as for Thomas Ritchie's. I permit no political considerations to influence me in meting out justice to individuals. I trust I never shall feel such a sordid emotion, and that I will, in my administrative capacity, as far as I am placed here, never cease to recollect that justice is demanded from position. I trust that I would be able, in a case of justice, even to obliterate all recollections of hostility, even if personal to myself. And I trust that gentlemen, while viewing this venerable patriarch—this patriarch of Democracy, if you please—who is a patriot you will all admit, will recollect that he has numbered more than his three score years and ten, and is now bending beneath the weight of his infirmities. He has given his life to the public, and though he has rendered no high military service, though he has never periled his life for his country, he has devoted his life, his mind, and everything, to the diffusion of intelligence and maintaining the honor of his country in his own way. Sir, these are considerations that come upon us, and that while he is bending beneath the weight of age, when the lighting of a grasshopper is becoming almost a burden to him. Sir, he has been a friend to his party and to his country. Let us do him justice. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, it will be recollected that the late contractor for the public printing printed ten thousand copies of certain decisions of the Supreme Court, which ten thousand copies, it is in proof, would have been executed at any printing office in the country for the sum of $1,600. He brought forward a bill for that printing to the amount of $36,000, making each of those copies—a mere pamphlet—cost $3 60 apiece. That matter was compromised by his receiving $12,000, being about $1 20 apiece.

Subsequently he printed the obituary remarks upon the death of General Taylor. I understand that that printing was done in Philadelphia, and that the bill for it has never been produced. It is but reasonable to apprehend that the same charge will be made for that as was made for printing the decisions of the Supreme Court in the passenger cases. I think there ought to be an amendment to restrict him in regard to this matter.

The Senate cannot have forgotten the particulars of the charge in the passenger case to which I have referred, and they must see from that the propriety of guarding against a similar charge with regard to the document of obituary notices of General Taylor, because that document could be brought in under the same class under which the printing of the decision in the passenger cases was charged. I have not the papers here by me, but I recollect that charge was made by interpolating in the contract the words "per page." One dollar per hundred copies was the rate at which a certain class of printing was to be done under the contract. If it was done under that class, there would have been but a small price; but by inserting the words "per page" in the contract, that mode of computation brought the sum up to the enormous price of $36,000 for printing a pamphlet which would have cost $1,600 in any printing office in the country. To remedy this, and to provide against it in future, I propose to amend the amendment by adding:

Provided, however, That in making such payment there shall be deducted therefrom the sum of $10,000, overpaid for printing the decisions of the Supreme Court in the emigrant tax cases from New York and Massachusetts; and that for printing the obituary notices of the deceased President Taylor, said contractor shall be paid the actual cost, with a profit of twenty per cent.

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland if, after we shall get through with this amendment, he will be done? I want to know how many amendments he is going to offer? We all recollect that he killed Mr. Ritchie's bill at the close of the last session. All of us who were here at the time understand that very well. Now, I do not intend to quarrel with him, because we have got to meet on the Library Committee to-morrow morning together, and I do not want to meet him in bad humor. [Laughter.] I therefore want to know if he is done now?

Mr. PEARCE. I believe I shall be done when I get through with this.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If we go into the different items of that contract, I do not know when we are to get through. I supposed we had got down to a compromise, and settled upon it; but if we are going now to specify this item, that item, and the other item, I shall have to withdraw the amendment. I agreed to accept the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, because it seemed to be regarded on all sides of the House as a satisfactory compromise, and I hope that we shall not now be raising questions as to particular items. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will take the amendment as I have offered it—as it stands at present.

Mr. HAMLIN. In relation to the obituary notices of the deceased President Taylor, I will say that they were printed in Philadelphia. The contractor here procured them to be printed there. They were very finely executed, and I have no doubt they cost the contractor much higher than the rates of his contract; but he charges, after a peculiar kind of printing, about $100,000 for doing the work, and actually sets up that claim. This amendment proposes to pay him what it actually cost, with a profit of twenty per cent.

Mr. MANGUM. I ask that the amendment may be divided. As to the former contract in relation to the decisions of the Supreme Court, it was a matter which was compromised, and whether advantageously for the Government or not, I am willing to abide by the compromise.

The PRESIDENT. As a division of the question is asked, the first question will be on the first part of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment, which is to insert:

Provided, however, That in making such payment there shall be deducted therefrom the sum of $10,000, overpaid for printing decisions of the Supreme Court in the emigrant tax cases from New York and Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER. I will say a few words now to the Senate, for I am confident that the reason why that large charge was made for printing the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States has never been properly understood. In the contract which Mr. Ritchie made there was a certain class of printing which he was to do at such a rate "per hundred copies." That was designed to cover the headings of our bills, lists of yeas and nays, and matters of that sort. After the printing of the decision of the Supreme Court was ordered there was some question raised whether it fell under any of the other classes, which were to be paid at so much per thousand ems. That difficulty being raised, it was not so easily settled. It was finally determined that the printing came under the fifth class—that which was to be paid so much per hundred copies, and which related to the printing of lists of yeas and nays, headings of bills, programmes of funerals, &c. It was decided to come under that class, but it could not be made to fit it without something else, and it was then ascertained that the other matter which was necessary was to insert the words "per page." Then it made it read—how? That he should be paid so much per page per hundred copies; so that it left it perfect nonsense. It is perfectly sensible and consistent if you leave out the words "per page," leaving him to be paid so much per hundred copies. When that is applied to the matter to which it was designed to be applied, it is all right; but when you insert the words "per page" before the words "per hundred copies," it makes nonsense. Who ever heard of such a thing? It is equivalent not only to inserting the words "per page" in the contract, but to striking out "per hundred copies;" and so you change the contract entirely in that particular. This charge was made under that head after interpolating "per page." The charge amounted to $36,000 or $37,000. The Secretary of the Senate at once revolted at making any such payment, and, as is alleged, a compromise was effected; but that compromise was effected under a clear misunderstanding and misapprehension of the contract as it was designed when entered into by the Senate. The compromise price which was paid for the printing was $12,000. There is no guide for the allowance. The contract does not recognize it; and as we are making a final settlement with Mr. Ritchie, and as I am one of those who are willing to give him a fair remuneration for his labor, and also a fair profit upon it, I desire to see this remedied. The first part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will reach the case of the printing of the decisions of the Supreme Court. The remainder of it will reach the case of the obituary notices of General Taylor; and I think that if it be incorporated into the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, it will make a very fair proposition, and, as a whole, I shall be content to vote for it.

Mr. PEARCE called for the yeas and nays upon the first branch of the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. MANGUM. I shall vote against the first portion of the amendment; and I do it upon the ground that there is very great diversity of opinion amongst learned gentlemen with reference to the true construction of the contract upon which the allowance was made. My colleague [Mr. BAKER] is known to this body to be perhaps as learned a lawyer as any who occupies a seat in this branch of the Legislature; and on a very full and thorough examination of the question, he was satisfied that this charge is maintainable. There are other opinions which controvert his. The sum originally asked, I understand, was between $35,000 and $37,000. It struck me as an extremely large sum. I was told that the work could be done for from $700 to $1,500. This matter was submitted to arbitration and compromise, and $12,000 was fixed as a fair rate, and that was paid by the Secretary of the Senate. That officer was extremely upon his guard about the matter, and consulted various gentlemen as to what might be his duty. He paid the sum awarded as fixed. Whether that be for or against the interests of the Government, I hold that good faith binds us to it, and we ought not to break it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall vote for the amendment of my friend from Maryland, notwithstanding the reasoning of my friend from North Carolina, and upon this ground: We are dispensing grace and favor, and not right. When we are doing that, we may do it upon such terms as to exact justice. Now, we cannot get anything back for the profitable contracts that the contractors have made with the Government. They are clear profit to them. But our proceedings now go upon the ground that when we make an advantageous contract, so that a contractor loses money, we shall, by grace and favor, make up the loss to him. Well, if it appears in the settlement of that account, that in a particular item that contractor has got the advantage by some $10,000 by a former contract by which he was entitled to it, or by a former compromise by which it was erroneously awarded to him, may we not take that into consideration in dispensing the favor which we are about to grant? It is reasonable, it is just, it is proper that it should be done, because we are dealing now with equity, not with justice. I therefore say, that when it is conceded on all hands that Mr. Ritchie got $12,000 for a service that was only worth $2,000, by which he pocketed, at the expense of the Government, $10,000 in this grant of favor, those $10,000 ought to be accounted for.

Mr. HAMLIN. I shall vote against the first branch of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, and I will state my reason for doing so in a word. I do not care what may be the opinion of the best lawyer in this body, or out of it, as to what is the true construction of the contract. I think that all the best printers you find will not disagree about it. They all say this printing could not come under the construction claimed. But it was referred to the Secretary of the Senate, who was the proper accounting officer. A decision was made, and Mr. Ritchie got his money. It is therefore an adjudicated question, and whatever may be the right or wrong construction of the contract, I think he ought to retain the money, because he received it under the award of the proper officer.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very sorry that this proposition should have been made, for it imposes upon me, after the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina, to say a few words. I owe it to myself to say a word. I should not have made the proposition; but since it is made, I am compelled to vote for it. I must state in connection with this, as briefly as I can, the facts of the case. Upon a resolution of the Senate, in 1850, referred to the Committee on Printing, I, as chairman of the committee, made a report to the Senate upon this subject. The facts, as I understood them, and as the committee understood them, and reported them, were these: For printing the pamphlet referred to, the printer presented an account of $37,200. These are the exact figures. When it was suggested that this was an enormous charge, he voluntarily proposed to reduce it down to $12,500. That account was presented during the recess of the Senate, and by the board whose duty it was during the recess to audit printers' accounts that amount was paid. This was in the recess of 1849. The resolution of which I speak was subsequently introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, and referred to the committee, and reported upon. I took up the subject, and examined it very carefully; and from the best examination I could give, and the best judgment I could form, I came to the conclusion that the price, under the contract, for that document, should have been about $650. Less than that by several hundred dollars had been paid for it already as a regular document. I think $156 had been paid to Tiffin & Sreep, the previous printers, for printing 1,250 copies of it as a regular document. Ten thousand copies were ordered to be printed by the Senate, and under Mr. Ritchie's contract, I came to the conclusion that they would amount to about $650. The whole amount that could have been charged, even under the full rates of 1819, was $2,000. I made that report. The calculations, and the computations of the contract, and of the law under which the contract was made, are now among the documents of the Senate. I will not refer more particularly to them. The view presented in that report, was my opinion that nearly $12,000 more than the prices which could have been demanded under the contract were paid for it. I would not have called it up to have deducted it on this occasion; but when the proposition is made distinctly, and when I am called upon to vote on it, I am compelled, out of consistency, out of my own sense of duty, here, under the law, to vote for making the deduction, and then leave him, as the amendment does, twenty-five per cent. above the full prices of 1819.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to make an appeal to the Senate. We have appropriation bills involving an amount of more than twenty millions. I believe that if we could get this bill reported to the Senate to-night, in any reasonable time, perhaps we should be able to master the residue of our business between this and the time of adjournment. But I fear, that unless we do so, it will be impossible for us to act upon these bills in any manner creditable, or even decent. I hope the vote will be taken on all the amendments. They have been fully discussed; and the Senate will remember that there is but a very short time between this and the end of the session. I trust, therefore, that they will refrain from offering amendments. The bill is already loaded down with them; and, I fear, if we continue this, we must either sit up all night, or we shall run the risk of losing the appropriation bills.

Mr. CHASE. I concur, heartily, with the Senator from Virginia in desiring speedy action on this bill; and that desire adds great force to the regret which I feel that the amendment has been introduced upon this occasion; but those who introduced the amendment, originally, are responsible for the consumption of the time of the Senate at this late hour of the session, and not those who oppose it, because the amendment being introduced, it becomes the duty of the Senate—a duty which they owe to themselves and to their constituents—to examine its merits and discuss it.

Sir, the history of this proposition is somewhat extraordinary. When it was originally introduced it was objected to as a private claim; and if it be not a private claim, excluded by the rules, I am at a loss to know what is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator is aware that the proposition now pending is on the first branch of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment, which is to deduct $10,000 from the printing of a certain work.

Mr. CHASE. I am aware of that; but I was responding to the observation of the Senator from Virginia in regard to the consumption of time, and I was endeavoring to show that the responsibility for that consumption was not with the opponents of the proposition of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator allow me to say that I was not charging any one with the loss of time. The country will hold us all responsible, and we shall not be able to shift it from one to the other if we should lose the appropriation bills, or should present them in such a shape as not to bear examination.

Mr. CLEMENS. The Senator will allow me to suggest that the country will never hold the Senator from Ohio responsible for anything.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, under the suggestion made by the Senator from Virginia, and the suggestion by the Chair, I will refrain from saying what I was about to say in regard to the character of this claim, and of the mode in which it is now before the Senate. The Senate was equally divided whether it was a private claim or not. But without raising any question now on that point, I wish simply to ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas, who was chairman of the Printing Committee, in reference to what fell from the Senator from North Carolina. Both the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Maine concurred in stating that this was an adjudged matter in regard to the payment for printing the decisions of the Supreme Court. I do not know how it has been adjudged. If it was referred to anybody, I do not know to whom it was referred. As the Senator from Arkansas has considered this whole subject—as it was under his charge for a long period of time—I ask him to inform the Senate to whom it was referred? and by whom, if by anybody, the claim has been adjudged?

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer the Senator from Ohio; it was certainly adjudged by proper authority—by authority of the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the Clerk of the Committee on Printing—who constitute a board to audit and settle the printer's accounts during the recess of Congress. This account was presented to that board, and by them, with full legal authority, considered, though I think they erred.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the first branch of the amendment of Mr. PEARCE to the amendment, resulted—yeas 18, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Borland, Brodhead, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Foot, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—18.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bayard, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Clemens, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Toucey, and Weller—30.

So it was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the second branch of the amendment to the amendment, which was to insert:

"And for printing the obituary notices of the deceased President Taylor, said contractor shall be paid the actual cost, with a profit of twenty per cent."

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to know of those who can inform us, whether the same terms will be charged in regard to printing the obituary notices of Mr. Clay?

Mr. BORLAND. The terms are not the same, and the contractors are different.

Mr. PEARCE called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Foot, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, Wade, Walker, and Weller—33.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bright, Clemens, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Stockton, and Toucey—16.

So it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Clemens, Cooper, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—33.

NAYS.—Messrs. Brodhead, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Foot, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—14.

So it was adopted.

Mr. COOPER. There is a provision in the bill for the redemption of seventeen Loan Office certificates, giving their numbers, and appropriating $4,165 42 for that object. I move to strike out "seventeen," and insert "eighteen," and to insert No. 266 as the number of the certificate proposed to be canceled; and increase the appropriation to $20,000.

This is to provide for a certificate which is outstanding; the original certificate has been lost. I hold in my hand a statement from the Register of the Treasury, showing that the amount stands to the credit of the parties on the books of the Treasury Department; and I have also in my hand a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation sufficient to pay it. I will state that the original claim was for cannon furnished during the revolutionary war, a claim that was settled at the Treasury, under the act of 1790, I think; but the certificate which was issued to the parties has been lost. Proof is made of the loss, and the statement from the Treasury Department admits that the amount stands to the credit of the parties, and has never been paid; and I have here a recommendation for its payment. No difficulty can accrue, because there is a proviso in the section as it comes from the House: "That satisfactory evidence be produced to the Secretary of the Treasury that the persons who have presented the said certificates for payment are the bona fide holders of the same."

The honorable Senator from Virginia knows that what I have said in reference to the facts of the case is true. The recommendation is that the appropriation be increased to $25,000; but that is not necessary, because the certificate amounts to a little over $19,000, and it was a little shorter to insert the simple word "twenty" before "four," so as to make the appropriation $24,165 42.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe I might, with propriety, raise a point of order as to the amendment; but I think I can get my object in a shorter way. The papers in this case were handed to me by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I examined them, and sent them to the First Comptroller for the purpose of ascertaining whether such things had ever been granted. This is not to pay a Loan Office certificate which is itself presented, and for which claims the clause in question was framed; but it is to present a claim for a lost certificate. The Comptroller has informed me that such things have been rarely done, and then upon strict examination, and only by special act. It seems to me, therefore, eminently proper that this should be the subject of special investigation and of special act. I think that the honorable Senator, probably, after he has discharged his duty to his constituent by presenting it, will not press it; but it seems to me at any rate, obviously unfit for this bill.

Mr. COOPER. I cannot consent to withdraw the amendment by any means. I hold in my hand the certificate of the Register of the Treasury. I did hope that the Senator would have stated that what I have said was the fact, because he certainly knew it. Here is the certificate from the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
REGISTER'S OFFICE, August 27, 1852.

I certify the above to be a true extract from the list of final settlement certificates, issued by Benjamin Stelle, commissioner for settling debts due by the United States in the State of Pennsylvania, and that it appears from the records of this office that the certificate is now outstanding and unpaid.

TOWNSEND HAINES, Register.

Here is a letter from the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 27, 1852.

Sir: I beg leave to call the attention of the Finance Committee to the section of the general appropriation bill, page 49, line 1,194, providing for the redemption of old outstanding Loan Office certificates. The appropriation as it now stands only provides for the specific claims then before the Department, leaving no margin for such others as may be presented during the current year. There has been this day presented another claim, the specie value of which, at the time of its issuing, was $4,180 56, which must be provided for or remain unpaid. And in order to promote settlement of such other claims as may be presented, I respectfully request that the bill be amended, commencing at line 1,295, page 50, by inserting $25,000, in lieu of $4,165 42, the amount appropriated by the bill.

WILLIAM L. HODGE,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, can there be any doubt about that? Here is the specific certificate, and I will ask what injury can ever result to the Treasury? What odds does it make whether the original exists or not? If it be paid, it is canceled on the books of the Treasury, and it does not matter a tittle whether the original certificate is in hand or not. I admit that the Senator from Virginia sent to the Treasury, and Mr. Whittlesey said that there ought to be great caution. Well, sir, what more caution do you want than the certificate of the party against whom the claim is preferred, that it is due and outstanding? Why, in the deficiency bill there was precisely a claim similar to this. And I am told privately, (but I suppose I may refer to it here,) by the honorable Senator from Virginia, that in that case the certificate was presented. It was not presented; because I received the papers, and there was no such thing among them. But it was probably in the Treasury Department, as I believe they are in the habit of filing the certificates themselves in the Treasury. If they were so then, what odds does the presentation of the certificate make, when you have charged on the books of the Treasury the amount that is due, when we ask for its payment, and particularly when there is a provision in the bill that the amount due on these certificates, before being paid, shall be ascertained by the Treasury?

The amendment was agreed to, there being on a division—yeas 19, noes 18.

Mr. SOULE. I have not squandered away the time of the Senate during this debate, and I have some two or three amendments to propose, which I hope it may be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt. The first one is to insert among the appropriations for the Mint at New Orleans the following:

For the proportion due by said Mint for square block paving from caplane to Bosworth street, to be paid to Thomas Haines, $1,266 40.

This is the proportion due by the Mint to the city of New Orleans for the paving of the streets around the Mint. By the city regulations, the city pays one third the amount, and the proprietors on each side pay one third each. The bill is due, and I suppose there cannot be any difficulty as to its payment.

The PRESIDENT. Is there an estimate for it?

Mr. SOULE. Yes, sir; I have communicated it to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HUNTER. This is no more a private claim than some others which have been introduced into the bill. It comes within the precedents of cases which we have received.

Mr. SOULE. I have precedents in my hands showing that such claims have been at previous times introduced into the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARKE. I really feel desirous to know upon what this is based? The Government of the United States, it seems, have purchased a site for a Mint at New Orleans; and having purchased that site, some municipal regulation of that city has imposed upon that location a tax, for some proportional expense for paving.

Mr. SOULE. The honorable Senator is mistaken. It is not a tax.

Mr. CLARKE. Then I should like to understand English.

Mr. SOULE. It is not a tax. It is an assessment for a proportion due by each proprietor for benefits derived to the property.

Mr. CLARKE. I confess I do not understand the difference between an assessment and a tax. The Government of the United States, in consequence of owning this Mint in New Orleans, are called upon to pay an assessment, as the Senator says, for paving the streets, and laying the sidewalks at the side of the pavement. Now, is that a part of the appropriation due by the Government? Is it not within the general rule, that when the Government of the United States takes a deed of property of this kind in any part of any State in the United States, they shall be exempt from taxation?

Mr. CLEMENS. We will vote for something for your State.

Mr. CLARKE. A proposition is made here by a Senator, that he will vote for anything in my State as enormous as this, although we ask nothing of that kind. Then I have nothing more to say about the matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOULE. There is an appropriation of $150,000 for continuing the construction of the custom-house at New Orleans. I move to amend it by adding:

Subject to the limitations and restrictions imposed on the appropriation made for the same object at the last session of Congress: And provided, That, in case the superintendence of the building be confided to an officer detailed from the Corps of Topographical Engineers, the acting architect be dispensed with, and the said superintendent allowed a compensation not exceeding eight dollars per day.

An appropriation was made for this object at the last session of Congress. While that appropriation was being made here, certain restrictions were imposed upon the manner in which the amount appropriated should be expended. The present amendment has for its object to impose upon this appropriation the same restrictions that were imposed upon the appropriation made last year. Besides, it is in contemplation of the Department of the Treasury to give the superintendence of the building to an officer detailed from the Topographical Corps of Engineers, in which case we may dispense with the services of the architect, and therefore I have provided in this amendment that, in such case, the acting architect shall be dispensed with, and a compensation shall be allowed to the officer thus detailed from the Topographical Corps, not exceeding eight dollars per day.

Mr. PRATT. Is there an estimate for this?

Mr. SOULE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARKE. Who has received it?

Mr. SOULE. The appropriation does not come from the Committee on Commerce. It comes from the other House, and is already in the bill; and the amendment which I propose is merely explanatory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOULE. I propose to insert in the bill, under the head of miscellaneous items, the following:

As compensation to Jonathan Elliott, commercial agent of the United States at St. Domingo, for the amount by him expended in maintaining refugees in the late revolution at that place, $600.

I want merely to state, that this appropriation was included in the bill as it passed this body at the last session of Congress; but through one of those mistakes of which we have had, at times, to complain, it disappeared from the bill while passing through the other House. The papers justify this claim. They justify the expenditure of this money by this agent, in maintaining, under critical circumstances, citizens of the United States, who took refuge in his house; and they have been fully justified by the vouchers that have been furnished by that gentleman to the committee which has had occasion to investigate his claim. I hope that no objection will impede its being inserted in the present bill.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator report the amendment from any committee?

Mr. SOULE. I do not. But I had occasion to converse with the chairman of the Committee on Finance and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject. The chairman of the latter committee said he could not act on this claim on account of its not having been referred to his committee, but he mentioned to the chairman of the Committee on Finance that the claim had been acted upon on the report of the committee at the last session, and that it was extracted, I may say, from the bill while passing through the other House. He therefore considered that it might be made an exception in the present bill.

The PRESIDENT. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to dispense with the rule the amendment will be received, otherwise it cannot be.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOULE. I have one other amendment to offer. It is to insert:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the collector of customs at the port of New Orleans be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, three head gaugers for the said port, at an annual salary of $1,500 each, instead of the force now employed in the gauger's department at the port aforesaid.

In explanation of this, I have to state to the Senate that, at this time, there is one head gauger and a deputy gauger; but the deputy gauger, having no authority to impart authenticity to his acts, his services can acquire no legal force, except under the authority of the head gauger. And it so happens that, while in the port of New York, for instance, the gaugers have more than absorbed the whole amount of fees which are procured there; yet, in New Orleans, where the labors are very nearly as great as in New York, and the income quite as much, the expenditure occasioned by these officers has not exceeded $3,000. The Committee on Commerce applied to the Department, and the Department have recommended, in a letter which I have in my hand, the appointment of these three gaugers, at the salary provided in the amendment. I cannot conceive of any possible objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment, which is to insert:

For the payment of the balance due to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, under the fifth article of the treaty of Washington, for the balance of expenses incurred by said State in protecting the northeastern boundary, the same having been heretofore settled at the Treasury of the United States, but unpaid for want of appropriation, $305 81.

That is one of a few amendments, two or three in number, that I am instructed by the committee to offer, carrying out the provisions of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States, for defending the northeastern boundary. Under that treaty the Government of the United States were bound to pay to the States of Maine and Massachusetts all claims for expenses incurred by them "in protecting the said heretofore disputed territory." It has been adjusted at the Treasury, but has not been paid for want of an appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer another amendment of the same class:

For payment of balance found due by the Comptroller of the Treasury, to the State of Maine, under the fifth article of the treaty of Washington, for expenses on account of northeastern boundary, over and above the appropriations made, $2,212 78. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed, in the settlement of the claims, under the act of March 3d, 1851, authorizing payment of interest on the advances made by the State of Maine for the use of the United States Government, in the protection of the northeastern boundary, to embrace the interest, whether paid or lost, prior or subsequent to 1839, 1840, and 1841, named in said act, upon the sums expended by said State and refunded by the United States, according to the terms of said act, as well as during said years; and that they further allow to said State whatever sums of money were paid by said State in the form of discount in negotiating loans for the purposes of said advancements.

If any explanation of the amendment is asked, I am prepared to give it. It is under the terms of the treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment to the bill, not, however, by instruction of the committee, but of my own motion. There is a provision in the bill "for running and marking the boundary line between the United States and Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, $120,000." I propose to amend this clause by adding to it:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used or expended until it shall be made satisfactorily to appear to the President of the United States, that the southern boundary of New Mexico is not established by the Commissioner and Surveyor of the United States further north of the town called Paso than the same is laid down on Disturnell's map which is attached to the treaty.

Mr. President, this is intended to affect the appropriation for continuing the survey of the Mexican boundary. The object is to prohibit the expenditure of any portion of the money until the line which has been adopted by the American Commissioner shall be re-formed, according to the terms of the treaty. I will not consume the time of the Senate, because I take it for granted that they are informed of the actual condition of things as to that boundary. It is in substance and briefly this: By the terms of the treaty, each Government—Mexico and the United States—was required to appoint a Commissioner and a Surveyor to represent their respective Governments in ascertaining the boundaries prescribed by the treaty. To enable them to ascertain those boundaries, Disturnell's map was made a part of the treaty, and they were required to conform to the boundaries laid down upon that map. The treaty describes the southern boundary of New Mexico "which runs north of the town called Paso." By examination of the map, and measurement with the map scale, it will be found that the boundary runs about eight miles north of the town; but the Commissioner on the part of the United States has assumed in place of that boundary the parallel of latitude of 32° 22' north, and the effect of it has been to transfer the actual boundary some thirty-four miles north of the boundary prescribed by the treaty. The Surveyor who was associated with the Commissioner under the treaty, and who, under the treaty as construed by the Committee on Foreign Relations in their report made a few days since, was associated in equal right, and without whose assent, the Commissioner had no power to determine this boundary, dissented. He placed his veto, as he had authority to do under the treaty, upon the act of the Commissioner. The Secretary of the Interior, upon this fact being reported to him, instructed the Surveyor to sign the agreement, thus fixing the southern boundary. Whether the Surveyor has obeyed this instruction we are not informed. If the Surveyor does obey that instruction, then a question will be presented which I am prepared to meet: that the act of both officers does not commit this Government; because it is a departure from the treaty. But to that question we have not yet come. As at present informed, it is the act of the Commissioner alone, who has committed this gross and extraordinary departure from the terms of the treaty, in consequence of which, should it become the law, the United States will sustain a loss of more than five thousand square miles of territory, and will be thrown so far north upon that southern boundary as to render it exceedingly doubtful whether a southern right of way will ever be obtained to our possessions on the Pacific.

The object of this amendment is to break down that Commission where it stands unless this line is re-formed; and for one I am fully prepared to take such responsibility. Under the instructions which have been given to the Surveyor by the Secretary of the Interior, if they are obeyed the Government will sustain a loss to the extent that I have mentioned, unless the present Commission is broken down; and the object of the amendment is in the alternative to attain that end.

Notwithstanding the very great disinclination which I have to detain the Senate, there is another matter to which I must allude. It is to do justice to an enlightened, intelligent, and patriotic officer of this Government belonging to the military service. I refer to Lieutenant Colonel James Duncan Graham. Lieutenant Colonel Graham was sent out by this Administration as the astronomer to this expedition, and after he had been there a short time he was recalled. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] who entered lately into a defense of the present Commissioner, Mr. Bartlett, in the course of his remarks said as follows:

"Before I proceed further I will say, that in my opinion the Commission was organized in one of the worst forms in which it could have possibly been sent from the United States."

He continued:

"Thus was the Commission formed, so far as regards those who had charge of it. When Mr. Bartlett was appointed I was in the city, Congress being in session. Under the direction, or by the advice of the then Secretary of the Interior, (Mr. Ewing,) Mr. Bartlett was induced to consult Colonel Graham, of the Topographical Corps, as to the number and the kind of employees who should go out with him upon the Commission; and I have it in a letter from Mr. Bartlett to me that the whole formation of the employees of the civil department was made by him, under the advice and by the direction of Colonel Graham."

Now, sir, the honorable Senator has stated that this Commission was organized "in one of the worst forms in which it could have been sent," and that it was organized under the counsel and advice of Lieutenant Colonel Graham, of the Engineer Department.

Mr. CLARKE. I have never said so.

Mr. MASON. I give it as reported in the newspaper of the day. I am very happy to hear that the honorable Senator recalls it.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg the Senator to understand that I recall nothing.

Mr. MASON. I give the Senators remarks as I find them reported in the newspaper of the day.

Mr. CLARKE. The Senator has read from two detached extracts without reading the intervening matter. I will be ready to explain it to him in a moment.

Mr. MASON. It is unnecessary to make any issue whatever with the honorable Senator from Rhode Island. Whether he said it or not, as it is reported, the allegation is made as appears upon information which he derived from the Commissioner. The statement, as derived from the authority of the Commissioner, is, that he took from the country a Commission organized in the worst pos-appointed Commissioner, under my advice and under the advice of the Secretary of the Interior, was desired to consult Colonel Graham, who was then in this city—who had been upon the north-eastern boundary—as to the manner in which the commission should be properly organized. Mr. Commissioner Bartlett consulted Colonel Graham, and he formed his Commission, so far as he had power to form it, according to the list presented to him by Colonel Graham, and that Commission departed from here in conformity with the list established by the Commissioner under the advice of Colonel Graham.

I desire to put myself right with my honorable friend from Virginia, and also with the Senate. When I made the remark that this was the worst-formed Commission that ever had departed from the United States, (and I was under the impression that I said, from a Christian land, at least I ought to have said so,) it was not in reference to the advice that had been given by Colonel Graham, but to the manner in which the Government had chosen to send these individuals out. In order to put myself right on the subject, I will read the remarks that I did make on that occasion:

"Before I proceed further, I will say, that in my opinion the Commission was organized in one of the worst forms in which it could possibly have been sent from the United States. There were four persons holding a sort of distinct and separate command. There was, in the first place, the Commissioner, Mr. John R. Bartlett, who might be considered, I suppose, as at the head of the civil part of the Commission. In the next place, at the head of the astronomical corps was Colonel McClellan, he himself exercising a certain degree of authority, and I think, as the evidence has shown, appointing mechanics, who were under his own authority and control."

I believe that was pretty well proved.

"There was another sort of subdivided duty among them, which was discharged by Lieutenant Strain, who preferred the charges against Colonel McClellan. Of him I know nothing, except that he went with the Commission from New York in the steamer Galveston, which left there on the 3d of August, and arrived at Indianola, Texas, on the 23d of August, 1850. He claimed a sort of command, I suppose, as a naval officer, while they were on salt water, and I believe he was attached to the Commission with a view of taking charge of the boats when they should ascend or descend the Rio Grande and the Gila; but, I believe he left the Commission at Victoria, and returned to the city of Washington, where he preferred those charges."

Now, allow me to say to my friend from Virginia that he and I, I think, can have no difference on this subject. I have read the description of the Commission which I stated here. I omitted, however, (as was afterwards taken up by me and explained,) to state that there was a fourth part of this Commission, under the command of the lamented Colonel Craig, who was recently killed near Fort Yumas, or in passing across the desert from San Diego to Fort Yumas. I mentioned, in my remarks, the three parts of the Commission. I omitted to mention that, in the first place, Mr. Bartlett was at the head of the civil part of the Commission; and I think he had the only civil part there was about it. In the next place, there was Colonel McClellan, who was at the head of the astronomical corps, and appointed a number of the mechanics. In the next place, there was Lieutenant Strain, who left at Victoria, who was in command of something like the naval portion of the Commission, or that portion of it which went upon the water. Then there was Colonel Craig, who was detailed to command the escort. He went with the Commission from Indianola to El Paso; from El Paso to the copper mines; and from the copper mines down the Gila to San Diego. Unfortunately for his country and himself, he was there killed.

That was the only part of my remarks which related to the forming of the Commission. Was there anything there about Colonel Graham? No, sir—not a word. Colonel Graham had nothing to do with this at all. I was speaking in this portion of my remarks of the organization of it by the Government here—by the Administration, if you please; or, if gentlemen want me to be particular, I will say by the Secretary of the Interior. It seems almost as if that part of the Executive Department of the Administration did not know what they were about. They sent Mr. Bartlett at the head of this Commission, without their knowing what he required, and called upon him to seek the best information he could from any quarter.

I said still further:

"Thus was the Commission formed, so far as regards those who had charge of it."

There was not a word said yet in reference to Colonel Graham; although he quotes in his communication to the honorable Senator from Virginia, that I said this was the worst-formed commission that ever left the country. I repeat it, sir; it was; and if any man can dispute it, he has a bolder front than I have. But my remarks proceed:

"When Mr. Bartlett was appointed I was in the city, Congress being in session. Under the direction, or by the advice of the then Secretary of the Interior, (Mr. Ewing,) Mr. Bartlett was induced to consult Colonel Graham, of the Topographical Corps, as to the number and the kind of employees who should go out with him upon the Commission; and I have it in a letter from Mr. Bartlett to me, that the whole formation of the employees of the civil department was made by him, under the advice and by the direction of Colonel Graham."

Thus much I said. The fact is undisputed that Mr. Bartlett, under the advice of the Secretary of the Interior, and under my advice, sought the better information of Colonel Graham as to the manner in which he should proceed in organizing the civil part of his Commission. He accordingly applied to Colonel Graham, and Colonel Graham gave him a list of what he supposed would be the proper and requisite employees upon this Commission. Am I right?

Mr. MASON. Perfectly.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad to have that point settled. Mr. Bartlett made application to Colonel Graham, not that Colonel Graham was obliged to answer him, but he made it from the high respect that he had for Colonel Graham from the reputation which that gentleman had acquired.

Mr. HUNTER. I must really rise to a question of order. Are we to go into the propriety of the conduct of Mr. Bartlett, Colonel Graham, and these other gentlemen at this period of the session? Shall we get the bill reported to the Senate to-night, if we go on in this way? I understand the proposition to be in relation to the initial point, and the debate ought to be confined to that.

Mr. CLARKE. I yield to the Senator on any question of order; but I only want to explain this matter, and it will not take a great while to do so. I want merely to show that the sensitiveness of Colonel Graham has been altogether uncalled for, and that I intended to cast no imputation upon him. If I have any imputation to make upon anybody, I know when to make it, and where to make it.

Mr. HUNTER. I must rise to a question of order again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. NORRIS in the chair.) The Chair thinks that the discussion has entirely gone beyond the amendment pending. Senators should confine themselves to the proposition pending, which is to fix the appropriation with regard to fixing the initial point.

Mr. CLARKE. I will submit to the Chair whether I am at liberty to read the authorities upon which I made the statement, which I have already read in a speech which I delivered some time since upon this question. If I am in order, I will read them, if not, I will not.

Mr. HUNTER. It will take too much time.

Mr. CLARKE. It would not take the Senator himself more than ten minutes, and it will not take me more than five. I have a communication in regard to this matter, which I wish to read. It has been stated that the number of assistants—young men and mechanics—employed in the Boundary Commission, was unnecessarily large. Here is the explanation of that complaint:

"This fault, if fault it was, cannot be laid at Mr. Bartlett's door. The number of assistants and young men employed was in accordance with the recommendation."

Mr. HUNTER. I must insist upon my point of order. I hope the Chair will decide it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has already decided that Senators should confine themselves to the amendment, which is, that this appropriation shall be restricted to a certain initial point.

Mr. CLARKE. I submit to the Chair, that the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] has introduced—and not without my consent—a circumstance in relation to a speech which I made sometime since, in which he says I made an imputation upon Colonel Graham. Now, I want to show—and it is perhaps a question of privilege—that I have made no such imputation against Colonel Graham.

Mr. MASON. I do not ascribe to the gentleman any design to cast any imputation in any, even in the slightest degree. But from the force of the language used this was ascribed, that the Commission had been organized under the advice of Colonel Graham; and again, that it was the worst organized Commission that ever left the country. I do not desire to continue the debate at all; but I am sure when the honorable Senator comes to read the communication of Colonel Graham, he will be satisfied with it.

Mr. CLARKE. I have no doubt of it. I am perfectly satisfied; because there is no issue to begin with. And, Mr. President, if you will only allow me to say one thing more, I will be satisfied.

The description which I gave of the Commission did not allude to Colonel Graham in any manner; but if it reflects upon anybody, it is upon the Administration of the Government that framed this Commission. Colonel Graham's name is not mentioned in it; and when I spoke of its being arranged according to a list furnished by Colonel Graham, I only spoke of that to account for the number of civil employees that Mr. Bartlett had taken with him. The honorable Senator from Virginia took an extract from the first part of my speech, without the explanation added to it; and then took along with it another extract, in another part, and he applied them together. I have merely to say, that they were not intended to apply together. I have not a word of complaint to make against Colonel Graham, so far as regards the formation of the Commission. I think it would have been formed well enough, if the men who had been sent out had been proper. But there had been an accusation against Mr. Bartlett that the Commission was unnecessarily large, and I deemed it necessary to make an explanation, in order to show that he alone was not accountable for it. Allow me to say to my friend from Virginia, that whenever the connection of Colonel Graham with the Commission is properly brought into debate here, I shall be prepared with other evidence which I have, in regard to any assertion that I may make.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to trouble the Senate with any remarks upon the subject at this time; and I should not do so, but for an observation or two, which fell from the honorable Senator from Virginia. I do not object to the amendment which he has introduced. I think it seems to be carefully worded; and I do not suppose that it will occasion inconvenience, or that it is objectionable as implying any reproach upon the Secretary of the Interior. But the Senator has imputed to the Secretary of the Interior a very gross error—an error of judgment only—for I believe that he attributes no wrong motive to him. He has said, however, that the Secretary of the Interior has undertaken to request the surveyor of this Commission to sign an agreement as to the initial point; and that he has thereby committed a very gross error. My object is to show that this is not a gross error—that there is no error at all; or that, if error there be, it is one into which the Secretary very naturally fell, by reason of the example which has been given in precisely similar circumstances by former Administrations. The question, at all events, is one of construction, as to which a difference of opinion may well be tolerated.

The fifth article of the treaty with Mexico provides that, for the purpose of running and marking the boundary line, a commissioner and a surveyor shall be appointed; and it directs that certain agreements, the result of that commission, when signed by them, shall have the force of the treaty. The honorable Senator from Virginia has assumed that that clause of the treaty gives to the surveyor equal authority, and makes him a functionary of equal power and responsibility, with the commissioner. This, I think, is an error of his. The treaty does not define the powers and duties of the commissioner and surveyor. We must therefore look elsewhere to ascertain them; and thus it becomes necessary to inquire what are the proper and ordinary functions of such officers as these? And when we look to that, we see that the functions of a commissioner are essentially different from those of a surveyor. The commissioner is the directing agent, the superintending, controlling authority. The surveyor is a subordinate, inferior, operative agent. Field operations, and the resulting calculations, are his business. That was the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, who considered that the Surveyor, in this case, was a mere ministerial agent; that he had not the authority to decide upon the disputed points which belonged to the Commissioner.

I said that for this opinion the Secretary had example under other Administrations, and I proceed to make good the assertion. I find, upon the examination of the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, that it is copied verbatim from other treaties into which the Government of the United States had previously entered. It is a copy of a similar article in the treaty of 1819 with Spain, the convention of 1828 with Mexico, and of 1838 with Texas. I do not know that there were any proceedings under the treaty of 1819. I know that there were none under the treaty of 1828 with Mexico, that Government never having appointed a commissioner and surveyor under it. There were proceedings, however, under the convention of 1838 with Texas, and a commissioner and surveyor were appointed by both Governments. I have here, in a public document, the instructions of the Department of State in 1839, under the administration of Mr. Van Buren, to Mr. Overton, the Commissioner on the part of the United States. I will read a few extracts from them to show what that Administration thought to be the difference between the power of a commissioner and a surveyor. In a letter from the Department of State to Mr. Overton, dated July 8, 1839, he is informed:

"Upon yourself, jointly with the Texan Commissioner, will devolve the duty of conducting the proceedings of the Commission, of instructing the surveyors on both sides as to their actual operations in the field, and of assigning to the clerks the duties properly appertaining to their office. If any question should arise from conflicting views between yourself and the Texan Commissioner, the duty will be yours carefully to investigate the grounds of your own opinions, and, when fully convinced of their correctness, and of the fairness of the claims which they will induce you to set up, on the part of the United States, to advocate their adoption by every proper argument, drawn from the letter and spirit of the provisions of the treaties.

"The President confidently relies upon your prudence and judgment, as upon the hearty cooperation of the United States surveyor, whom, in turn, you are expected personally to attend, direct, and assist in the performance of his duties, for a proper advocacy of the rights of your country as secured by the treaties. He is obliged the more to confide in your discretion, scrutiny, and patriotic zeal from the impossibility of foreseeing, whether and, if any, what questions may arise, and from the consequent necessity of leaving you, in a great degree, to exercise your judgment in the discussion and solution of them.

"As it is indispensable that each Government be furnished with a full and circumstantial record of the proceedings of the Commission, the expediency will doubtless occur to the Joint Commissioners to order such records to be kept in duplicate." "This duty will naturally devolve upon the clerks appointed on both sides, under the supervision of the respective Commissioners, who shall be responsible for the accuracy and safe delivery of said records, properly certified, to the respective Governments at the expiration of the Commission."

In the letter to the Surveyor the Secretary says:

"You will report yourself to Mr. John H. Overton, the United States Commissioner, for instructions as to the manner of performing the duties of your office."

The Senate must perceive that the Administration of that day evidently understood the Surveyor to be an inferior officer to the Commissioner—that he was to receive his directions from him; because the Secretary of State says expressly to the Commissioner that it will be his duty to attend and direct the Surveyor in the performance of the duties of his office. The Department, then, evidently did not consider the Surveyor as an officer of equal authority with the Commissioner. They gave him no instructions, but referred him to the Commissioner for instructions. They did not seem to consider that the duties of a surveyor were any other than those ordinarily assigned to an officer of that character—operative duties in the field. This view seems to have been taken by Mr. Polk's administration; for in looking over the instructions of Mr. Buchanan to Mr. Weller, Mexican Boundary Commissioner, I find the following language: "This article places you in a highly-responsible position," &c.

In another part he says:

"The joint report or declaration by the Commissioners of the final result agreed upon by them."

He does not speak of the joint report of the Commissioners and Surveyors, but of the Commissioners alone, as if they were the directing authority, and the Surveyor was only an assistant in these operations in the field:

"The joint report or declaration by the Commissioners, of the final result agreed upon by them under the fifth article of the treaty, will also be transmitted to the Department, to be filed with the journal and record of their proceedings, and the map."

This journal was never signed by the Surveyor, and it is certain that the Commissioner always and rightly considered himself as the head of the Commission. Now, sir, I shall not weary the Senate with any more quotations. I have adduced these two cases to show that prior Administrations, whose authority is certainly entitled to respect, have fallen into the very same error, if error it be, into which Mr. Stuart has fallen. Mr. Stuart's error, according to the Senator from Virginia, consists in his requesting the Surveyor, who dissents in opinion from the Commissioner, to sign the agreement which the two Commissioners had made as to the initial point. Well, the former Secretary of State, Mr. Buchanan, speaks of the agreement as the final result agreed upon by the Commissioners; though, it is true, he adds, that the agreement is to be signed and certified by the Surveyor, as well as by the Commissioner. It would seem to be very obvious that his signing the agreement, which others were to make, must have been considered merely ministerial, and for the purpose of authentication.

It is very manifest, therefore, inasmuch as the treaty has not assigned the duties specifically to each of these officers, that the Secretary of the Interior, looking to the instructions which had been given by his predecessor, and to the instructions which had been given to the Commissioner under the Texas convention, might well fall into this error, if error it be, of supposing the functions of the Surveyor to be purely ministerial, and that the directory power of the Commission resided solely in the Commissioner. I admit that on a careless reading of the fifth article of the treaty, it would prima facie seem to imply the Surveyor, being associated in the same sentence with the Commissioner, was of equal authority. But surely, when we consider the difference of the functions, which are essentially variant, and when we consider that that difference has been recognized by preceding Administrations, the present Secretary of the Interior must be exonerated at all events from the charge of gross error which the Senator from Virginia has attempted to cast upon him. It is not necessary to say anything now of the initial point on the Rio Bravo, for which the Commissioner alone is responsible.

Mr. MASON. I do not know exactly the language which I used. I do not remember exactly whether I said the Secretary of the Interior had fallen into a gross error, or whether I spoke of it in any other way. I meant to ascribe nothing in the world, but an error of judgment to the Secretary.

Mr. PEARCE. So I understood.

Mr. MASON. I meant to ascribe nothing but an error of a grave character, as it affects the interests of the country. The instructions that were read by the Senator from Maryland, with reference to the Commissioner and Surveyor in running the boundary line between Texas and the United States, may have been very proper in reference to the authority bestowed upon these functionaries by the treaty of their appointment.

I have not examined that treaty, and I do not know how far it has similarity to the authority vested in those functionaries. So far as the Senator read from the instructions given by Mr. Buchanan to the predecessor of the present Boundary Commissioner, they were doubtless very proper as regards that officer; but there is nothing in the letter of Mr. Buchanan to the Commissioner, which separated him from the Surveyor. The terms of the treaty, I think, are too plain to be misunderstood. I gave them, in my position as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, not a cursory perusal, but a close and strict examination, weighing every word in its proper order in the context, to see its meaning. The words of the treaty are these:

"In order to designate the boundary line with due precision, upon authoritative maps, and to establish upon the ground landmarks which shall show the limits of both Republics, as described in the present article, the two Governments shall each appoint a Commissioner and a Surveyor, who, before the expiration of one year from the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, shall meet at the port of San Diego, and proceed to run and mark the said boundary in its whole course to the mouth of the Rio Bravo del Norte."

Then, in a very few words, the functions of these officers are described: "They"—who are "they?" The Commissioner and Surveyor.

"They shall keep journals, and make out plans of their operations; and the result agreed upon by them shall be deemed a part of this treaty, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein."

The only construction, according to my apprehension, that the treaty will admit of is, that those functionaries, the Commissioner and Surveyor, were associated in everything, and separated in nothing. Every power that is delegated to the one is delegated to the other.

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator will allow me to read an extract from the convention with Texas. I stated that I had compared that with the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and found them, in all the essential parts, verbatim. One of the articles of that convention is:

"Each of the contracting parties shall appoint a Commissioner and Surveyor, who shall meet before the termination of twelve months from the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, at New Orleans, and proceed to run and mark that portion of the said boundary which extends from the mouth of the Sabine, where that river enters the Gulf of Mexico, to the Red river. They shall make out plans, and keep journals of their proceedings, and the result agreed upon by them shall be considered as part of this convention, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein."

I believe the only difference is, that one treaty says "a Commissioner and a Surveyor," and the other says "a Commissioner and Surveyor."

Mr. MASON. One seems to be intended as a transcript of the other; and yet I venture to affirm that there will be found nothing in the instructions given to these two functionaries which would require that the one should be separated from the other, so far as the agreement to which they were to come was concerned.

This has become a most important matter to the United States, because it has resulted that the Commissioner determined this boundary line in the absence of the Surveyor, and when the Surveyor joined them, he dissented. He protested against the line established by the Commissioner. As the Secretary of the Interior construes the treaty, the Commissioner alone has power to commit the Government. The construction placed upon it by the Committee on Foreign Relations in the report which they made to the Senate, is, that the Commissioner alone had not power to commit the country until his act was assented to by the Surveyor; that until it was so assented to, his act was null. The Secretary of the Interior has construed it otherwise.

I understand, however, that the honorable Senator from Maryland says, that he does not resist the proviso that I proposed to add to the appropriation. I will not, therefore, detain the Senate further.

Mr. WELLER said: I regret very much that I am compelled to say anything to-night on this subject; but I am, from convictions of duty, driven to the necessity of moving to strike out this appropriation from the bill. There are many reasons which I could assign, if it were necessary, that the public interests demand that no further appropriation should now be made for this Commission. On the 22d day of March last, more than five months ago, I submitted a resolution to the Senate, (which was adopted,) calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for information as to the manner in which the appropriations heretofore made had been expended. There have been appropriations made by the Congress of the United States for the years 1850, 1851, and 1852—(I speak of the time which has elapsed since I headed that Commission)—amounting to the sum of $365,000. Three hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars of the public money have been appropriated and expended. Early in the month of March last, I was anxious to ascertain the manner in which this money had been expended, in order that, if a call were made for further appropriations, we might be enabled to understand the propriety of making them. More than five months, as I have said, have elapsed since that resolution was adopted and sent to the Department of the Interior; and up to this hour the Secretary has refused to let this branch of the Government know how that money has been expended! He seems to have assumed the ground, that under his Administration the people have no right to know what disposition has been made of their money. If this be the policy of the Whig party, I trust the people will see the necessity of ejecting them from power.

Mr. PEARCE. I would explain to the Senator that it has been communicated to me by the Secretary of the Interior—in reply to an inquiry which I addressed to him recently, after a conversation which I had with the Senator—that those accounts were not kept in the Department of the Interior, but that he had sent a direction, or a request, to the office in which they were kept, that copies of them should be made out and sent to the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. Well, sir, it is a matter of very little importance to me whether it be the fault of the Secretary or of the auditing officer of the Department. I am complaining of this Administration and of the Whig party, and they may divide the responsibility if they choose, between them.

When I was Boundary Commissioner, I was charged with "squandering the public money." Such an allegation was made by a Senator now on this floor, [Mr. SMITH,] who has not attempted to prove it, although I have challenged him to do so. A resolution was offered, calling for my accounts and all of my vouchers, in order that I might be convicted—as the accounts were then incomplete—of squandering the public money. How long do you think it took a Whig Administration then to answer that resolution? The record in my hand shows that the resolution was offered upon the 19th day of February, 1850, and upon the 27th day of the same month it was answered, transmitting the accounts, &c. It took precisely eight days to answer a call for all my vouchers and accounts. An answer was then promptly transmitted by the Department, showing a disbursement of nearly $50,000. But here, now when I stand upon this floor and ask the Administration to give me an account of the manner in which my illustrious successor has expended the public moneys, five months have elapsed and they dare not give me the information! This unaccountable delay fully justifies the inference that the accounts would not bear public scrutiny. Do you call this honest and fair? Is this even-handed justice? Do the interests of the Whig party demand a suppression of the information called for?

The Senate will perceive that with this Administration, there is a very marked difference between a Democratic officer and a Whig officer! When they supposed that the production of those accounts of mine would enable them to sustain their charge against me of squandering the public money, and justify them in publishing me to the world as a "defaulter," those accounts were promptly sent here showing, as I have said, an expenditure of $50,000. But after all their charges of "extravagance" and "defalcation," here and elsewhere, they were compelled to settle up my accounts and pay over a balance of some $5,000 which they owed me!

But here has been an expenditure of $365,000, and there is not a Senator on this floor who is permitted to know how one dollar of that money has been expended, and still they ask us now for $120,000 more to prosecute this work! I must be satisfied that the amount heretofore appropriated has been honestly expended before I will consent to give you any more.

This officer was instructed to return his vouchers quarterly. Is there any difficulty in showing us these accounts, if all is honest and fair? How long will it take the accounting officer to make out the returns, and transmit them to the Senate? If they cannot transmit all, why not send us his settlements for some of the quarters of the past two years? If they cannot account for the whole appropriation, why not show us how some portion of it has been expended? If they cannot do either, why not honestly avow it? If the charges which your Whig Administration falsely made against me, are true as to my successor, depend upon it the day of exposure will come. And yet, whilst we are kept in the most profound ignorance, we are called upon to appropriate $120,000, which, together with appropriations unaccounted for, will make nearly a half million of dollars! To this fact I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country. It may enable the people to see how public affairs are managed by those now in power. It may seem to enlighten them as to their duty in the coming contest.

There is another thing connected with this matter to which I desire to allude. I found very recently, for the first time, that the Mexican Minister in this city had addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, under date of April 20, 1850, in which he complained of the delay of the American Commission in the prosecution of that work. I will read you a short extract from that letter:

"From the information and data which the Government of the undersigned has collected together, it must be confessed that if the task of defining the boundary line has been suspended and postponed until the month of November of the present year, it has resulted entirely from the fact that the Commissioners of the United States have frequently been absent in California, and that latterly the said Commissioners, with some exceptions, have not participated in the operations of settling the boundary. It was these same Commissioners of the United States who proposed as the only means by which these important labors could be continued, that the prosecution of the same should be delayed until next November. General Garcia Condé, chief of the Mexican Commissioners, in agreeing to this proposition, only yielded to the force of necessity, and although this chief found himself encompassed with difficulty to continue in the discharge of his duty, yet he was determined, as he intimated it to the United States Commissioners, not to interrupt the operation, the management of which had been intrusted to him by his Government."

Now, sir, I am not aware that the Secretary of State ever responded to this allegation. He was quite willing that I should be censured. Here was a grave complaint—a complaint preferred by the representative of a foreign Government, that the Commissioner (he seems to have forgotten that there was but one) on the part of the United States was delaying the prosecution of that important work. To this letter, I say, the Secretary of State never made any response, although the Department of the Interior had then in its possession abundant testimony to show that it was utterly false and unfounded. They seemed to be quite willing that I should be convicted of delaying the work.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the honorable Senator tell me what Commissioner is alluded to in the letter?

Mr. WELLER. I am the man. I am the Commissioner alluded to. By the way, however, there is another letter from the Mexican Minister which I might read, complaining of a much more grievous offense on the part of my illustrious successor, whom my friend has so often defended. In that letter the Mexican Minister has complained that he (the American Commissioner) has organized parties for the purpose of exploring the country, examining its minerals, and hunting up all the bugs in the country! I believe he has parties in the field examining the geology and mineralogy of that country, and to this I presume the Mexican Minister alludes. The appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of running and marking the boundary line between the two Republics, and it would, perhaps, be somewhat difficult to justify the Commissioner in organizing these parties. If the accounts had been sent in under the call of the Senate we might have been enabled to ascertain how much money has been expended in this way.

But I was speaking of the letter complaining of my delay. The record then in the Department of the Interior showed that, so far from delaying the prosecution of the work, the delay had been the fault of the other side. I reached San Diego, the point fixed upon by the terms of the treaty, on the 31st of May,—one day after the time agreed upon,—and the Mexican Commissioner and his party did not arrive until the third day of July; and the Joint Commission was organized on the 6th. I was, therefore, compelled to remain five weeks after the time fixed upon for the meeting, wholly inactive, because of the failure of the Mexican Commissioner to meet me. As I was fully aware of the sensitiveness of the Mexican nation, I would not suffer my party to make any movements whatever in executing the work, until the representative of that Government arrived. I did not intend to give them the slightest pretext for complaint. Of these facts the Department had official knowledge, at the time the complaints were made.

But there is another point in this letter of the Mexican Minister, to which I invoke the attention of the Senate. He says that it was the fault of the American Commissioner that the Commission was adjourned in February to meet at El Paso on the 1st of November following. This is wholly unfounded, as I can readily show. In a letter addressed by me to the Department, under date of February 3, 1850, (which I find in the printed document before me,) and which was on file at the time this complaint was made, I used the following language:

"The Joint Commission to run and mark the boundary between the United States and the territories of Mexico, have agreed to adjourn to meet again at El Paso in the State of Chihuahua, on the first Monday in November next. I desired that the meeting should take place at an earlier day; but as it is understood that during the rainy season in New Mexico—July, August, and September,—no successful operations could be carried on in the field, nothing perhaps would be lost by the delay."

Now, sir, there was the distinct declaration made in that letter which was on file in the Department at the time, that I had desired that an earlier day should be fixed upon for the meeting of the Joint Commission. Such was the fact. In fixing upon the time for adjournment, I proposed July. General Garcia Condé insisted on November, as it was impossible to carry on field operations during the summer months; and I confess that I was therefore struck with surprise, that the Mexican Minister should have addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, complaining of my delay! The journal of the Joint Commission will explain the whole matter. It reads thus—

"It was determined, as nothing remains to be done on this side of the line, except that which has already been provided for, and as it is impracticable, in the present condition of California, to advance from this direction beyond the mouth of the Gila, and towards the frontier of New Mexico, that the Commission should adjourn to meet at El Paso, in the State of Chihuahua, on the first Monday of November next."—Extract from Journal, 15th Feb., 1850.

It is true that my drafts had been protested, the appropriation exhausted, and no means whatever left to prosecute the work; still I did not choose to let the Mexican Commissioner know my real situation. I did not choose that he should know of the infamous course pursued by the party in power towards me. I did not choose that he should know that my drafts, drawn in conformity with instructions, and within the appropriation, had been protested, and that my party was suffering for their pay. Hence it was, as the journal shows, it was mutually agreed to adjourn, and for the reasons stated in the extract which I have just read. I had too much pride as an American to confess my inability, for want of funds, to go on with the work.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Finance called the Senator from Rhode Island to order, because he was speaking of a subject not connected with the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. My proposition is to strike out the appropriation for the boundary, and that brings up the whole question.

Mr. PRATT. I think the honorable Senator is out of order. I think the rules of the Senate ought to be applied to one side of the Chamber as well as the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) It is the impression of the Chair that the debate has taken a very wide range; but the Senate must judge whether or not the Senator from California is in order.

Mr. PRATT. I think that it is the duty of the Chair to judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair feels constrained to say that the whole debate has gone beyond the bounds of order.

Mr. WELLER. I am compelled to submit to the decision of the Chair, of course; but I think it is very remarkable that I should not be allowed to proceed. I have shown, however, by the record, that the charge of the Mexican Minister against me is wholly unfounded. There were many things introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] connected with this Administration so far as this boundary survey is concerned, to which I desire to refer.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President—

Mr. WELLER. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. PRATT. I choose to interrupt the Senator. I rise to a point of order. If the decision of the Chair is to be conformed to, the Senator from California must conform to it as well as the rest of us. I do not see why he should say to me that he did not choose to be interrupted when my object must be evident to everybody. I listen to the Senator with as much pleasure as to any one, but I think that at this time of the night, when it is near eleven o'clock, it is of no use to be going into these questions. I listened to the gentleman attentively for four hours in defending himself, and I must say that he did defend himself very successfully against the charges which had been brought against him. But I do not want a repetition of these matters to-night, at this late hour.

Mr. WELLER. The gentleman has exaggerated the length of time which it took me to defend myself. I believe I never spoke four hours in my life at one time; and I am sure I never occupied more than two hours in addressing the Senate. Besides, I am not responding to the charges to which I then replied.

Mr. PRATT. Then I made a small mistake as to time; that is all.

Mr. WELLER. I ask no exemption from the rules by which other Senators are governed, and will put myself in order by speaking to the point that is raised by the amendment. If I were to attempt to discuss the questions presented here by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, I should occupy much more time than I would have occupied in explaining a matter somewhat personal to myself. It is not often that Senators are interrupted here, when they are speaking of matters in which their own honor or their own reputation is involved.

I wish to say a word or two to the Senator from Maryland who sits furthest from me, [Mr. PEARCE.] I agree with him that there is a distinction between the Commissioner and the Surveyor, but I should never have undertaken, as Commissioner on that boundary, to have determined any point on that line without consulting with the Surveyor. His advice would have been implicitly relied upon, unless it was plainly and palpably wrong. The instructions to which the Senator referred, places the Commissioner at the head, and thus makes a distinct difference between the two officers. Under date of January 24, 1849, (the first instructions,) you will find that in organizing the Commission, Secretary Buchanan says:

"You are referred for any information which you may deem necessary, to Andrew B. Gray, Esq., who has been appointed Surveyor under the treaty."

It certainly was the intention of the Department to draw a distinction between the power of the Commissioner and that of the Surveyor. I considered myself as the head of the Commission—no doubt about that. I held myself responsible for the movements of all the parties who went out into the field; but I relied implicitly on the judgment of the Surveyor for the determination of any point upon the face of the earth in the running of the boundary. So I relied implicitly upon the chief astronomer in determining the geographical position of any point desired. The one had charge of the linear surveys—the other of the astronomical lines.

I have perhaps detained the Senate too long. I regret very much that I have been compelled to inflict upon my friend from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] the remarks which I have made. I considered it necessary, and that is reason enough so far as I am concerned. I am sure that when he gets up in the Senate to speak of a matter in which his own reputation is involved, or where he has been grossly misrepresented at the bar of public opinion, I shall interpose no objection to his proceeding. In this respect I will return good for evil.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We have business to perform in the execution of a treaty, and the question is, how are we to do it? I have examined this subject, as it was my duty to do, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with a great deal of attention; and I shall be very brief in submitting to the Senate the view which I take of it, and of what it is our duty to do.

We have to determine, in the first place, whether the Commissioner could act separately and apart from the Surveyor, and pledge the United States to any line agreed upon by him with the Mexican Commissioner. If the Commissioner appointed by the United States, and the Mexican Commissioner, had the right, separate and apart from the Surveyors, to agree upon a line, then the business has been done, and nothing more remains but to execute the agreement which the Commissioners have entered into. But if their act requires the assent of the Surveyors as well as of the Commissioners, then, as the Surveyor appointed on the part of the United States has never consented and agreed to that line, there yet remains a matter to be done between the two Governments, or the Commissions under the two Governments, in fixing this boundary, which has not yet been performed, and the boundary yet remains unsettled. That determination lies at the very foundation of this question, and it is to be determined by the authority of the treaty which has been read by my friend from Virginia. The expression of the treaty is:

"The two Governments shall each appoint a Commissioner and a Surveyor, who before the expiration of one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, shall meet at the port of San Diego and proceed to run and mark the said boundary in its whole course to the mouth of the Rio Bravo del Norte. They shall keep journals, and make out plans of their operations; and the result agreed upon by them shall be deemed a part of this treaty, and shall have the same force as if it were inserted therein."

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the phrase, "the result agreed upon by them." Agreed upon by whom? The Surveyor and the Commissioner. Now, you perceive by this agreement the power of settling the boundary is committed to the Surveyor and Commissioner. The amendment of my friend from Virginia puts it in the President of the United States. I think the amendment is wrong in that particular. The treaty expressly commits it to the Surveyor and Commissioner, who shall be appointed. A previous part of the treaty incorporates Disturnell's map of 1847 as part of the treaty, and refers to the boundary designated on that map as being the boundary which the Commissioners and the Surveyors were to ascertain and mark; and then when they did ascertain it by reference to that map, and did mark it upon the ground, it was to become obligatory upon the two Governments. Why did the United States select two persons instead of one to do this? It was, in my judgment, in order to have under the treaty the assent of the minds of two persons before the Government was to be bound.

Mr. HUNTER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that if he is arguing for the amendment, there is no use of it, because I believe we are all in favor of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir; I said expressly that this amendment would not accomplish the object, and I will endeavor to show it in a few words.

Mr. HUNTER. I beg pardon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that the assent of the minds of the Surveyor and the Commissioner was necessary to bind the Government. It is like sending out two ministers abroad to make a treaty with a foreign Government. If one of the ministers does not assent to the treaty, and the other does, the vote of the one neutralizes the vote of the other, and the Government is not committed. When the Government leaves a matter to two of its servants, it can only be committed by the assent of both to the same thing. That, in my judgment, is the meaning and sense of the treaty.

I have read a portion of the treaty to show that when these two individuals assented and agreed, their determination became obligatory upon the Government; and the minds of those two men were to be made up by inspecting the ground, comparing the ground with the map, and forming a judgment by that species of comparison. This amendment of my friend from Virginia does not put it there. He undertakes to have it settled not by the Commissioners and Surveyors sent out to examine the ground, to look at the towns, to look at the river, to look at the water-courses which enter into that river, and measure the distance from those water-courses and towns up to the line and fix it. Let me here remark that these are the appropriate duties of a Surveyor, which he will understand better than a Commissioner will, because they fall within the scope of his duties. A Surveyor can better than any one make these comparisons and researches. The object and sense of the treaty was to send these men to do that, and to locate and put up landmarks and monuments. That can be done much better by them after an examination than it can be done by the President or the Senate of the United States.

What does this amendment propose? It says that no part of this money is to be used until the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the southern boundary of New Mexico is not established by the Commissioner and Surveyor of the United States further north of the town called Paso than the same is laid down on Disturnell's map, which is added to the treaty. I understand that the meaning of this amendment is to be that you are just to go to El Paso and measure up the distance above El Paso according to the scale marked upon Disturnell's map, and when you measure that distance from El Paso up to the line, you are to put it down there that the line exists. Now, according to my understanding of the treaty, you have no more right to measure from El Paso up than you have to measure from a place in that neighborhood called La Salinera

When the map contains various towns and various rivers to cross, upon the face of it, I do not see the principle upon which you can select any one of those points to give it precedence over all the rest. I do not believe that there is any principle upon which that can be done, unless there is some expression in the treaty that gives a particular point the governing and controlling influence in the matter. If there was any particular which was to control and to have this governing influence, the individuals who made the treaty would have said in so many words, "You shall measure the distance from that point." This would have reduced it to certainty, and have left no dispute about it. If that had been the sense and intention of the treaty, all that you would have had to do would have been to have gone to the point designated and to have measured the distance; but the treaty does not use language of that sort. It refers to all the localities, all the points of a larger description upon the map, and then the position of the line as laid down upon the map, and says that the Commissioner and Surveyor, with this map before them, shall go upon the ground and determine the point intended by the treaty. In that way you see the foundation of judgment, but not by reasoning in the other way, for if the particular point had been designated there would have been nothing to do but plain measurement, about which there could have been no mistake.

I think, therefore, that this amendment as it stands, designating "Paso," and the distance from it as measured upon the map, is incorrect in that particular. I admit that Paso is mentioned in the treaty, but not as the point to measure from, any more than any other point. Here is the language in which Paso is introduced in the treaty. It says:

"The boundary line between the two Republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande, otherwise called Rio Bravo del Norte, or opposite the mouth of its deepest branch, if it should have more than one branch emptying directly into the sea; from thence up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel, where it has more than one, to the point where it strikes the southern boundary of New Mexico; thence westwardly, along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico (which runs north of the town called Paso) to its western termination."

Several SENATORS. "Question!" "Question!" Mr. UNDERWOOD. If gentlemen call for the question in this way I will yield the floor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. I have an amendment to offer as an additional section. It is to add:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the chief clerk in the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York be, and the same is hereby, increased to $1,800 per annum, and the salary of each of the other clerks in the said office is increased to $1,400 per annum, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FELCH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to move to insert among the appropriations for the public lands the following:

"For sub-dividing the Islands of Santa Cruz, San Miguel, San Bernardo, Santa Catalina, Santa Clementina, San Salvador, San Nicholas, and Santa Barbara, on the coast of California, by the Coast Survey, and according to such plan as may be devised by the General Land Office, so that such islands may be disposed of by the United States, and establishing the regular crossings along the lengths with which to connect the lines with the sub-divisions under this appropriation, $20,000: Provided, That the Superintendent of the Coast Survey shall return to the General Land Office two complete copies of the maps and field books: And provided further, That all leases of any of such islands, or any part of them, shall be regarded as without authority, and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I have yet offered no amendment to this bill. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will have patience whilst I offer the only one I intend to offer. I offer it in conformity with a resolution of the Legislature of Maryland, which is in these words;

"Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, are hereby requested to use their influence in procuring the passage of a law to make free so much of the Washington and Baltimore turnpike road as lies within the District of Columbia."

This resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they have reported a bill in conformity with this request. I offer the following amendment to the bill:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the necessary graduation and repair of the road leading from Maryland avenue, at the boundary of Washington city, to the boundary line of the District of Columbia, in the direction of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, according to its original design: Provided, That all right, title, and interest which remain in the president, directors, and company of the Columbia Turnpike road, under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to incorporate a company for making certain turnpike roads in the District of Columbia," approved April 20, 1810, shall be extinguished so far as they affect said road by legal proceedings or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, before any portion of such appropriation shall be expended for the purpose aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have an amendment to offer, to insert in the bill after the provision for the salary of the district judge in California the following:

And an appeal from the final judgments and decrees rendered in any of the district courts in California in cases of equity, of admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction, and of "prize" or "no prize," where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum or value of $2,000, shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon such appeal the like proceedings shall be had as now provided by law on appeals in like cases from the judgments or decrees of the circuit courts to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment, which is to insert, after the provision for the Mint at Philadelphia, the following:

At San Francisco, California.

For salaries of superintendent, assayer, melter, and refiner, coiner, and assistants, and clerk, $23,500. For wages of workmen, $20,000. Incidental and contingent expenses, $5,000. Provided, That no part of the sums hereby appropriated for the service of the Mint at San Francisco, either for salaries, wages, or expenses, shall be expended, nor any one of the officers provided with a salary shall receive it, until, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the business of the Mint is in such a state of progress as to imperatively require such expenditure.

This amendment is rendered necessary in order to put into operation the Mint of California. The salaries provided for are the same as the law confers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS. I have an amendment to offer, by the direction of the Judiciary Committee. It is to insert:

For the purchase, for the use of the Senate, of five hundred copies of the Index of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, to be bound in the same manner as the said volumes of Opinions, $375.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Territories to move to insert after the appropriations for the Territory of New Mexico the following:

To R. H. WEIGHTMAN, of New Mexico, for mileage and compensation for attendance during the second session of the Thirty-first Congress, $2,465.

I would state that Mr. Weightman is now the Delegate from New Mexico. He was here during the last session, but by mistake, when the other Delegates were provided for, he was omitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to offer an amendment in regard to a class of persons who have not yet been mentioned. It is to insert, after the provision for the increase of the compensation of the clerks, the following:

And the pay of the watchmen in the various navy-yards shall hereafter be $500 per annum each, instead of the pay heretofore received by them.

This is for a class of men who give us their duty both day and night, alternately. They have heretofore received but $360 a year, except in this District. I think their pay ought to be increased to a reasonable sum. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment; it is the only one I intend to offer.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

To enable the architect to pay the workmen on the extension of the Capitol thirty days' pay during the suspension of the work, the sum of $18,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of the appropriation authorized by the joint resolution approved April 14, 1852: Provided, That no workman shall receive pay who was not employed at the time of the suspension of the work.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I would inform the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, that there is one navy-yard at which, by his amendment, the watchmen will get less than they are getting now. It is the navy-yard at Pensacola.

Mr. WALKER. I was not aware of that fact, but I will amend the amendment by adding after the words "heretofore received by them," the following, "if the same be less than the sum above-mentioned."

Mr. BRADBURY. By undertaking to increase the pay of some few persons employed in the service of the Government, we necessarily create dissatisfaction on the part of the other employees. We should reflect how we do these things. We should remember that this money is not to be paid from our own pockets, but our constituents have to pay it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to propose an amendment to this bill altogether different from any which has yet been proposed. I propose to strike out an appropriation—to strike out the following:

For clerk hire, stationery, rent, fuel, and contingencies, in the compilation of the census of 1850, $30,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to a point of order. It is that it is contrary to all the usages of the Senate to strike out an appropriation already in the appropriation bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to make but one remark on the subject. If I had time, I should make a good many remarks. I have the papers before me which would enable me to sustain them by the facts. I make this motion because the appropriation of $50,000 is not necessary. There is already unexpended some $75,000 of this census fund. It is well that the Senate and the country should know that we have already expended $1,202,651 upon the Census of 1850. We have paid to the marshals and their assistants, $956,000; for salaries of clerks, &c., $208,133; for contingent expenses, in one instance, $24,000; for furniture of the Census Office, $3,210. We have also paid a very extraordinary item of expense for which I have been unable to find any lawful authority—over $14,000 for a trip to Europe of the Superintending Clerk of the Census, to visit the World's Fair.

I have here an abstract of the expense of taking the Fifth and Sixth Censuses, and I find that for the Fifth Census we paid an aggregate of $403,529. Of course a very great increase has since been necessarily incurred in the expenditures for the marshals and assistant marshals in taking the census; but we find that so far as printing, rent, and clerk hire are concerned, the expenditures have been out of all proportion, and enormously increased. There was paid for clerk hire in the compilation of the Fifth Census, $6,276; and for clerk hire for compiling the Sixth Census, of 1840, there were paid $66,000, and there were only twenty persons engaged. We have had at one time, in compiling the Seventh Census, over one hundred and sixty clerks employed, and there are now between one hundred and forty and one hundred and fifty, for whom we have already paid $208,000. About $75,000 yet remain in the Treasury applicable to the census. The Department asked $150,000 more, but the House of Representatives cut it down to $50,000. I propose to strike it all out.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—AYES 19, NOES 14.

Mr. CLARKE. There is an appropriation in this bill of $14,800 for the payment of the Auxiliary Guard of the city of Washington. I move to amend this item by striking out "$14,800" and inserting "$16,000." I make the motion for this reason: There are thirty men on that guard, and as now provided by law fifteen of these men receive $500 a year, and fifteen receive $420 a year. I have made inquiry—and particularly of the Commissioner of Public Buildings—and I am told that all these men perform the same duty. One of them came to me and told me that he had but $420, while others, who did no more duty, were receiving $500. My proposition is to increase the appropriation $1,200, so as to allow each member of the guard $500 per annum.

Mr. WELLER. It would be easier to bring them all down to $420.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is in the bill a provision—

"For compensation of the Register of the Treasury and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $30,400. The salary of one of the clerks created by the act of the 20th of April, 1818, being hereby increased to $1,000 per annum."

I move to amend this by striking out "one," and inserting "three," so that the salary of all three of the clerks shall be made $1,000. I will state, in explanation of this amendment, that there are now three clerks in that office who receive a salary of $800 a year. They all perform similar service. The bill proposes to increase the salary of one of these to $1,000. The one selected has had to perform less onerous and responsible duties than the others. I think this is unjust. I think they should all be put on the same footing. I have here a letter from the Department recommending it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKE. I have an amendment to offer, which is to insert among the provisions for marine hospitals, the following:

For prosecution of the building of the marine hospital in Vicksburg, $15,000.

I would state, that two years ago an appropriation of $10,000 was made by Congress for the purpose of erecting a marine hospital at Vicksburg. Five thousand dollars were expended in purchasing the site. I have before me a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he states that $35,000 will be required to complete it, and advises that the whole amount should now be appropriated. I do not ask that. I merely ask for $15,000 now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKE. I have another amendment to offer, which is to insert:

For additional compensation to the collector of the port of Natchez, Mississippi, for services as inspector of the marine hospital, $500.

I will state that a marine hospital has lately been established at Natchez. It has been opened and is now in operation. The superintendence of that hospital has been placed under the control of the collector of the customs at Natchez, and not a single cent has been given him by law, for the additional services that he is thus bound to render.

Mr. GWIN. Can my friend from Mississippi tell me how much money was ever collected by the collector at Natchez? I do not think he ever collected a cent, and as he receives a salary it might be as well to give him something to do.

Mr. BROOKE. I was about to read a letter from him showing the amount of his duties. I am informed by the collector, a gentleman whom I do not know at all, that his salary has only been $500, and that, in addition to the office of collector, that of inspector and supervising agent of the marine hospital has been imposed on him. He states:

"The collector of this port is not permitted to have a deputy, except during his absence or his illness; consequently the duties are very onerous, and the salary with the one per cent. for disbursements, which does not amount to $100, will not compensate a competent officer for his services. Some of the duties of the agent of the hospital are as follows:

"To superintend the purchasing of all supplies for the hospital, to hire servants for the use of the same, to keep the accounts, to see that the rules prescribed for the management of the hospital are enforced, to superintend the buildings and grounds, and the servants; to examine certificates of all persons applying for admission, and to grant permits when the credentials are correct; to report regularly to the Department the number of patients admitted and discharged, the number that died, with what diseases they are afflicted, how long they remain in the hospital; to make contracts for the supply of flour, bacon, &c.

"The building is about a mile and a half from my office, and nearly the same distance from the landing.

"The above statement will be found to be correct by application to the Secretary of the Treasury. No man who is competent to discharge all these duties, and various others too tedious to mention, is willing to undertake them for the salary and perquisites given, viz: $600."

I think, sir, this amendment ought to be adopted. I do not know what amount of revenue is collected at Natchez. I know it is a port of entry, and by law the salary of the collector is fixed at $500. He simply asks now, that for the additional labors that have been imposed upon him in consequence of the establishment of the marine hospital there, and which are enumerated in this letter, he shall have some additional compensation. If $500 be too much, I am willing to reduce it; but I do not think it is, from the enumeration of the duties he has given in this letter.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. RUSK. I have one or two amendments which I wish to offer as soon as we shall have disposed of the amendments which have been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. I move now to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow, so that we may get up the postage bill.

Mr. HUNTER. My purpose is to examine by to-morrow morning, all the amendments and to see those to which I would object. There are some Senators who expect to offer amendments to particular amendments, and doubtless they would like to have an opportunity of looking into them. I do not propose to order the bill to a third reading to-night, and therefore I accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. RUSK. I move now to take up the bill of the House of Representatives to amend the act "to reduce and modify the rates of postage," passed March 3, 1845. It has been returned from the House with a verbal amendment for our amendment. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a joint resolution on the table which has been ordered to a third reading and is now engrossed, relating to the auditing of the printer's accounts during the recess, by the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, and the Clerk of the Committee on Printing. It is entitled "A joint resolution relating to the printing of Congress during the recess." I ask that it may be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read a third time and passed.

GRANTS OF LAND.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to ask a favor of the Senate. There is a bill on the table, which has been sent to-day from the House, making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi river, opposite the mouth of the Ohio, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, which I ask may be taken up.

Mr. FISH. I have an amendment to offer to that bill whenever it comes up. I will state to the Senate that the amendment is Bennett's land bill.

Mr. BORLAND's motion was not agreed to.
On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 28, 1852.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. PENN here obtained the floor.

Mr. HART. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PENN] to yield me the floor for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. PENN. I will give my friend some five or ten minutes.

Mr. HART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, to permit me to make a motion to allow my colleague [Mr. Brooks] to report from the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill for the establishment of a branch Mint in the city of New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

Mr. HART. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not in order during the morning hour, as the House is acting during that time under a special order.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

DUTIES ON RAILROAD IRON.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is called for, which is the reception of reports from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. PENN, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill "for the relief of the Memphis and Charleston, or Mississippi, Tennessee, and Alabama, the Alabama and Tennessee River, the Coosa, New Orleans, and Jackson, and the New Orleans and Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Companies."

Mr. COBB. That the House may understand this bill, I ask that it be read through, and I ask the attention of the House to it. It does not propose to grant lands, and the House need not be afraid of it. It is just such a bill as you passed for the State of South Carolina a few days ago.

The bill was then read by the Clerk.

[A message was here received from the Senate, informing the House that the Senate had passed a resolution "relating to the printing of Congress during the recess," in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to an amendment of the House to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 144, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes,' passed March 3d, 1851."]

Mr. PENN. The bill simply asks for time for the payment of duties upon railroad iron, by the payment of six per cent. for the time. The bill is simple in its provisions, and is a copy of the bill passed for North Carolina the other day.

Mr. VENABLE. I wish to offer an amendment, and I hope my friend will not move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know how this bill comes from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? Is it in order for them to report such a bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not apprised of the manner in which the bill comes from that committee.

Mr. PENN. The bill does not propose to appropriate one dollar of money.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read a first and second time without objection.

Mr. VENABLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will propose to amend by inserting the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad in North Carolina, giving them the same privileges as are conferred by the bill upon the roads now embraced in it.

Mr. PENN. I will yield simply for that purpose, provided you will demand the previous question.

Mr. VENABLE. I will demand the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave of the gentleman to make a further suggestion, which may come in as an amendment to the amendment, and we can then vote upon all three propositions. My amendment is to add the words—"and all other roads now in progress of construction in the United States."

Mr. STEVENS. That is the idea.

Mr. VENABLE. I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it in order at this stage of the proceedings to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is if the gentleman can get the floor for that purpose. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PENN] is upon the floor, and has yielded to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] for explanation.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether it is in order for the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report bills changing our whole revenue system?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PENN] can state how that subject came into the possession of that committee. The Chair knows nothing about it. It has been regularly reported and read a first and second time without objection; and in the opinion of the Chair it is now too late to make the objection.

Mr. SKELTON. Does the Chair decide that it is too late to raise the question of order?

The SPEAKER. It is too late, on account of the fact that the House has received and acted upon the bill, by ordering it to be read a first and second time.

Mr. SWEETSER. I rise to inquire if it is too late to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. It is never too late to do that.

Mr. SWEETSER. I desire to state, that in the confusion of the House this morning, this bill having crept in in the manner in which it did, the point of order is well taken. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and call for tellers.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman says it has crept in. I would ask how it has crept in? It was regularly reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is an exact copy of the bill passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the ground upon which the decision has been given. The Chair, of course, knows nothing of the manner in which the subject got into the hands of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. He supposes that it was regularly referred to them. Is that the fact?

Mr. PENN. That is the fact.

The SPEAKER. Then there can be no doubt of the right of that committee to report. But, again, the bill was received without objection, and read a first and second time. The Chair decides that it is too late to raise the question of order, and that the proper time to have made the point, was when the committee made the report. From that decision the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEETSER] takes an appeal.

Mr. SWEETSER. I will withdraw the appeal, as the explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. VENABLE. I now move to amend the bill by inserting the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. VENABLE] proposes to insert a bill of this House, entire, as an amendment. The Chair decides, that according to an express rule of this House, such an amendment cannot be made.

Mr. VENABLE. The amendment I propose differs from the bill referred to by the Chair in this, that my proposition includes the payment of interest. The bill has no such provision.

The SPEAKER. It is in order, then.

Mr. VENABLE. I move the previous question upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. PARKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. PENN. I cannot. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is moved to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. ASHE. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PENN] has the floor, and how does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] get it to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. That is true. The gentleman from Louisiana is upon the floor, and the gentleman from Maryland cannot take it from him to make the motion.

Mr. HAMILTON. I suggest to the Chair, that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VENABLE] moved the previous question with the consent of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. PENN.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair responded at once, when the gentleman from North Carolina made that call, that the gentleman from Louisiana was upon the floor, and that a call for the previous question could not be made by him.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Louisiana having demanded the previous question, he must have yielded the floor. Can he, after moving the previous question, still retain the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to demand the previous question.

Mr. PENN. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that call, that I may propose an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the bill and the amendments upon the table, and upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KING, of New York. I move that there be a call of the House, and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 84.

So a call of the House was refused.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which severally received the signature of the Speaker, viz:

An act for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Daniel W. Davis;

An act for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico and back, in steam vessels;

An act for the relief of Margaret Hetzel, widow and administratrix of A. R. Hetzel, late assistant quartermaster in the Army of the United States; and

An act authorizing imported goods, wares, and merchandise, entered and bonded for warehousing, in pursuance of law, to be exported, by certain routes, to ports or places in Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to lay the bill and amendments upon the table, and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order to move to postpone action upon the bill until a future day?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The pending motion is to lay upon the table.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Barrere, Ribighaus, Bowie, Bowne, George H. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Chapman, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Edgerton, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodenow, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Haven, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Mann, Martin, Mason, McNair, Henry D. Moore, Morrison, Murray, Newion, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Schermerhorn, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bissell, Bocoock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dockery, Eastman, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Freeman, Goodrich, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, Lockhart, Mace, McCorkle, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penni, Porter, Powell, Richardson, Sackett, Savage, Schoolcraft, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Venable, Wallace, Ward, Watkins, Wilcox, Woodward, and Yates—84.

So the bill was not laid upon the table.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not. There is a demand for the previous question upon this bill.

Mr. PARKER, of Indiana. I ask my friend from Louisiana [Mr. PENN] to withdraw that call and allow me to offer an amendment, which I think will be acceptable to the House. I will renew the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana cannot transfer the floor to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARKER] if it is objected to.

A VOICE. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to. The gentleman from Louisiana may withdraw the call for the previous question, and make a motion to commit, or whatever he desires.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order to commit the bill?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had the floor to make the motion it would be.

Mr. PENN. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PARKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the table.

The amendment was as follows:

That the provisions and benefits of this act, so far as the same are applicable, be, and the same are hereby, extended to all the railroad companies in the United States: Provided, The road of the company be now in the course of construction or be commenced within one year from this date.

Mr. PARKER. I move to recommit the bill, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I want to make a motion in reference to the river and harbor bill.

WABASH AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. There is a pending motion that the rules be suspended for the purpose of taking up the following bill:

"An act granting the right of way and making a grant of land in aid of the construction of a railroad from the Wabash to the Missouri river."

Mr. SEYMOUR. I ask the permission of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK,] who has the floor, to make a motion in reference to the river and harbor bill, merely for the purpose of referring it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move to suspend the rules to allow me to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. A motion is pending to suspend the rules, as the Chair has already stated, for the purpose of taking up and acting upon the bill which has been reported.

Mr. CLARK. I cannot yield the floor to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HALL. This bill I understand provides for only one railroad.

Mr. CLARK. Will it not be in order for me to make a brief statement of facts?

The SPEAKER. Not without unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object. The question then recurred upon the suspension of the rules.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and there were—yeas 49, nays 112; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Bissell, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, A. G. Brown, E. C. Cabell, T. Campbell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, J. G. Davis, Durkee, Eastman, Ewing, Ficklin, Freeman, Hall, S. W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Khuns, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, McQueen, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Richardson, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Walsh, Welch, Wilcox, and Yates—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bennett, Bibighaus, Bocoock, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Churchill, Cleveland, Colcock, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Florence, Fowler, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Holladay, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Mann, Martin, Mason, McNair, Meade, Millson, Henry D. Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Polk, Powell, Price, Reed, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Schermerhorn, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Sweetser, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Tuck, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—112.

So the rules were not suspended—two thirds not voting therefor.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the river and harbor bill, now upon the Speaker's table, be taken up that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GORMAN. I object.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I then move that the rules be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken and the motion was agreed to—yeas 112, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Barrere, Bennett, Bibighaus, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington, Cabell, J. Cable, Caldwell, L. D. Campbell, T. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, G. T. Davis, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Preston King, Khuns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penni, Penniman, Perkins, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, and Yates—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Bragg, Chastain, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Ficklin, Freeman, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Orr, Andrew Parker, Phelps, Powell, Savage, Smith, Venable, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—47.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I trust that the motion submitted by the gentleman from New York to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will not prevail. There is, either under the rules or the practice of the House, no necessity for the reference. The invariable rule and practice has been to refer appropriation bills to the Committee of the Whole; but this is not an appropriation bill. I could direct the attention of the Chair to several precedents, but I shall only allude to one, which will be found on page 448 of the Journal of the proceedings of the House, of the second session of the Thirty-first Congress, 1850-'51. It will be found there that when a bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30th, 1852, came back to this House with sundry amendments, appropriating for other objects than those of the bill, that it was not referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, nor was it deemed necessary that it should be. It is true that the then chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means moved to take it up, with a view to disagree to the amendments of the Senate. That, however, does not change the rule or practice upon the subject.

Mr. HALL. I ask that the 133d rule be read. The SPEAKER. The Chair has the rule before him. It is as follows:

"All proceedings touching appropriations of money, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, sir; that is in the House where the bill originated; but if the Chair and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] will refer to previous opinions upon the subject, it will be found that the invariable practice, at least since I have been a member of the House, has been, that that rule was not made to apply to amendments by the other branch of the Congress than the one in which the bill originated. I do not believe that gentlemen can point to an exception.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, what question is there before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] has the floor upon a motion to commit this bill. The gentleman from Illinois rises to a question of order, and is proceeding to discuss it. It is not regularly in order, because there is no decision or appeal from the Chair yet announced.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am opposed to the proposition to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Chair to decide that under the 133d rule, the amendments of the Senate must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. JONES. Then, if there is no appeal from that decision, there is no question before the House but the motion to commit.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would ask whether the motion of the gentleman from New York was not to take up this bill that it might be referred? The suspension of the rules was had upon that understanding, and that alone.

The SPEAKER. If required, the Chair will put the question whether or not the bill shall be taken up. The Chair supposed that by unanimous consent the bill was taken up.

The bill was then taken up.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EVANS. I move a suspension of the rule by which it is required that this bill shall go to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VENABLE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOREHEAD. If the rules be suspended, what will become of the amendments of the Senate?

The SPEAKER. They will be acted upon at the pleasure of the House.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Will the previous question be applied to them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot anticipate the action of the House.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to—yeas 115, nays 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bennett, Bibbhaus, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Conger, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dean, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Perkins, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Albert G. Brown, Joseph Cable, Caskey, Chastain, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Disney, Dunham, Edmundson, Ficklin, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Jackson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Letcher, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Savage, Smith, Stone, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—55.

So the motion to suspend was agreed to, there being two thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Is the bill now before the House for discussion?

The SPEAKER. It is. The immediate question pending is the motion to commit made by the gentleman.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I withdraw that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. SEYMOUR. At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, I presume I shall be trespassing upon the patience of the House too far to go into a discussion of the particular amendments which have been proposed to this bill by the Senate; but another reason why I am disposed to forego the privilege which I might otherwise wish to enjoy, of a discussion upon these amendments, is that the greater portion of them are identical with those which have been heretofore proposed and discussed in the Committee of the Whole. There are, however, a few other amendments which have been voted to this bill by the Senate, and I should like to discuss them, but will not because they are questions upon which the public mind of the country is informed, and upon which, I presume, every gentleman in this House will be prepared to give an intelligent vote. I therefore shall move the previous question upon the amendments, and ask that a separate vote shall be had upon each one of them.

The call for the previous question was seconded.

Mr. HALL. As I was absent when this bill was passed, and desire my vote to be upon the record, I move that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. CARTTER. I demand the yeas and nays. I desire to give others the same opportunity.

Mr. HENN. I would ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CARTTER. I want an opportunity to record my vote upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House of the concurrence of that body in some and disagreement in the other amendments of the House to the Indian appropriation bill, and requesting that a committee of conference be appointed by the House to meet with that of the Senate upon the disagreeing votes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the request of the Senate, for the appointment of a committee of conference on the part of the House, be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed Messrs. JONES of Tennessee, CONGER, and HIBBARD, on the part of the House.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the bill upon the table, and it was disagreed to—yeas 56, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bragg, Albert G. Brown, Caskey, Chastain, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Ficklin, Freeman, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Jackson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Meade, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Powell, Savage, Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Wallace, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbhaus, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Conger, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Ewing, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Perkins, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, St. Martin, Stuart, Taylor, Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—112.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the Senate's amendments.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

Strike out the following:
"For the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi below the rapids; the Ohio, including the repairs of the dam at Cumberland Island; the Missouri and the Arkansas rivers, $260,000;"

—and in lieu thereof insert the following:
"For the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river below the rapids, $90,000; the Ohio, including the repairs of the dam at Cumberland Island, $90,000; the Missouri and the Arkansas rivers, each $40,000; and for the construction and repair of snag-boats, dredge-boats, and discharging scows, and machinery to be used on the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, and other western rivers, $150,000."

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. BUELL. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE and HAMILTON were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—yeas 31; a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to—yeas 109, nays 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbhaus, Bissell, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Conger, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, Mason, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Perkins, Phelps, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Strother, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—109.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Babcock, Bragg, Buell, Caldwell, Chastain, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, Dimmick, Edmundson, Floyd, Gilmore, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Robbins, Robie, Skelton, Smith, Stuart, Venable, Wallace, and Wildrick—56.

The following section in the bill was read, viz:

"For the improvement of the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, at the lower chain and the English chain, $50,000."

The second amendment of the Senate was then read, as follows:

Insert after the words "of the," in the above clause, the words "Rock River rapids and the," so that the section as amended will read, as follows:

"For the improvement of the Rock River rapids and the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, at the lower chain and the English chain, $100,000."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. It only increases the appropriation $50,000.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The following section of the bill was then read:

"For opening a ship channel, of sufficient capacity to accommodate the wants of commerce, through the most convenient pass leading from the Mississippi river into the Gulf of Mexico, $75,000. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply said moneys to the opening of said channel by contract, and at an early day in the next session of Congress [to report said contract, the progress of said work, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open]."

The third amendment of the Senate proposes to strike from the above clause the words in brackets, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To report the progress of the work, the amount necessary to complete it, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open, and any contract made shall be limited to the amount hereby appropriated."

So that it will read when amended, as follows:

"For opening a ship channel of sufficient capacity to accommodate the wants of commerce, through the most convenient pass leading from the Mississippi river into the Gulf of Mexico, $75,000. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply said moneys to the opening of said ship channel by contract, and at an early day in the next session of Congress, report the progress of the work, the amount necessary to complete it, and an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open, and any contract made shall be limited to the amount hereby appropriated."

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The following clause of the original bill was read:

"For removing the raft of Red river, $50,000."

The fourth amendment of the Senate proposes to strike out "$50,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000," and after the word "dollars" to add the following:

"And the Secretary of War be authorized to contract with the lowest responsible bidder, within this appropriation, for the removal of said raft, after giving public notice."

The section as amended by the Senate will then read:

"For removing the raft of Red river, $100,000, and the Secretary of War be authorized to contract with the lowest responsible bidder, within this appropriation, for the removal of said raft, after giving reasonable public notice."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HART demanded tellers on the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and Messrs. HART and ROBBINS were appointed; and the House being divided, the tellers reported that there were—yeas 29—deemed to be a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 90, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Clingman, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, Howard, John W. Howe, T. Y. How, John Johnson, R. W. Johnson, G. G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, McCorkle, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Bibbhaus, Babcock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Buell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Caskey, Chastain, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Edgerton, Edmundson, Floyd, Gilmore, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Holladay, Houston, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Mann, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Robbins, Robie, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stuart, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, and Wildrick—65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following clause of the original bill was read, viz:

"For the further improvement of the harbor of New York, by removing the rocks at Hell Gate, $20,000."

The fifth amendment of the Senate proposes to insert, after the word "Gate," the words "and Diamond's Reef in the East river;" so that the clause, if amended, will then read:

"For the further improvement of the harbor of New York, by removing the rocks at Hell Gate and Diamond's Reef, in the East river, $20,000."

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The sixth amendment of the Senate proposes to strike out the following:

"For the improvement of the channel at the mouth of Cape Fear river, North Carolina, $8,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The following clause of the bill was read:

"For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $15,000."

The seventh amendment of the Senate proposes to add, at the end of the above clause, the words, "to be expended at the point on the Milwaukee river known as the North Cut, surveyed by Lieutenant Centre."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays upon agreeing to this amendment; but they were not ordered.

Mr. SEYMOUR demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GOODENOW and HART were appointed.

The question was then taken, and there were—ayes 82, noes 35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following clause of the bill was read, viz:

"For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Michigan City, Indiana, $20,000."

The eighth amendment of the Senate proposes to insert after the word "Indiana," in the above, the words "or the laying down a floating breakwater and safety anchorage, as the Secretary of War may determine."

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

So the section as amended will read:

"For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Michigan City, Indiana, or the laying down a floating breakwater and safety anchorage, as the Secretary of War may determine, $20,000."

The following amendments of the Senate, inserting in the bill the clauses indicated below, were severally read and agreed to, viz:

9th. "For a survey of the Rappahannock river, Virginia, $3,000."

10th. "For a survey of Taunton river and New Bedford harbor, Massachusetts, $3,000."

11th. "For the improvement of Kennebec river, from the United States arsenal wharf in Augusta, Maine, to Lovejoy's Narrows, $6,000."

12th. "For a survey of San Antonio river, Texas, $1,500."

13th. "For the surveys of harbors at Sabine, Galveston, Paso Cavallo, Velasco, Brazos de Santiago, and Corpus Christi, and the rivers Sabine, Brazos, and Trinity, Texas, $5,000."

14th. "For repairing the public works at Little Egg harbor, New Jersey, $8,500."

15th. "For a survey of East Pascagoula river, Mississippi, $5,000."

16th. "For a survey of Providence harbor, Rhode Island, $1,500."

The seventeenth amendment of the Senate was then read:

"Insert in the bill the following, viz:

"For a survey and examination of the Falls of the Ohio river, by a board of topographical and civil engineers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, to report upon the expediency of an additional canal around said falls, and the comparative cost, advantages, and disadvantages of making such additional canal on the Kentucky and Indiana shores of said river respectively, and also the cost, advantages, and disadvantages of enlarging and extending the present canal so as to avoid the rocks at Sandy Island, retaining the present locks in their present condition, $5,000."

Mr. SEYMOUR demanded the yeas and nays upon concurring in the amendment.

Mr. HART. I would like to inquire how often has this been surveyed by the Government?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 94, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbighaus, Bowie, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Cobb, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Horstford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, John Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, Mason, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Price, Reed, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Townsend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, A. White, and Yates—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Bissell, Bragg, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Thompson Campbell, Caskey, Chastain, Cleveland, Colcock, Curtis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Gilmore, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, St. Martin, Stuart, Thurston, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

A message was here received from the Senate by Mr. DICKINS, its Secretary:

Mr. SPEAKER: The Senate have passed a bill of the House of the following title, viz: H. R. No. 322, "An act in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts," with sundry amendments, in which I am directed to ask the concurrence of this House. The Senate have agreed to the amendments of this House to the bill of the Senate (No. 223) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.'"

On motion by Mr. CARTTER, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 322) entitled "An act in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts."

Ordered, That the Clerk acquaint the Senate therewith.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled House bill No. 144, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes,' passed 3d March, 1851," when the Speaker signed the said bill.

The House then considered and agreed to the several amendments of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the harbor bill, viz:

18th. "For the repair of the sea-wall at Marblehead, Massachusetts, $500."

19th. "For a survey of the harbor of Georgetown, South Carolina, $3,000."

20th. "For a survey of Shrewsbury river, New Jersey, $1,500."

21st. "For repairing the piers at Kennebunk, Maine, $7,500."

22d. "For a breakwater at Owlhead Harbor, or at Rockland Harbor, in Maine, as the Department of War shall decide, $15,000."

The twenty-third amendment of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the bill, was then read, viz:

"For the further removal of obstructions, and the improvement of the harbor of Dubuque, $15,000."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays upon concurring in this amendment; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 78, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbighaus, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Briggs, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, George T. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horstford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Porter, Price, Reed, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thompson, Townsend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Disney, Dunham, Edgerton, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Gaylord, Gilmore, Gorman, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hubbard, Holladay, Houston, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Molony, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Abraham P. Stephens, Sweetser, Thurston, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—76.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANLY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; and the question being put upon the latter motion it was decided in the affirmative.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Several votes have been taken upon the amendments to the bill while I was absent upon the Committee of Conference, and I desire that my name may be recorded in the negative upon all of them.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman cannot object. I have a right to have my votes recorded.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is, that it is usual for gentlemen upon committees of conference to have their votes recorded.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order, which I wish to submit to the Chair.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to make a statement to the Chair. I am in the same situation as the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] having been engaged upon a Committee of Conference; and in consequence I have lost my votes, and I ask permission to have them recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect very distinctly what has been the practice upon that subject. The Chair knows that when a committee has leave of the House to sit during the sittings of the House, they have a right to record their votes.

Mr. STANLY. No leave was given in this case.

Mr. HIBBARD. I was absent on the Committee of Conference, and I request that my vote may be recorded in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will require the consent of the House to record the votes.

Mr. HIBBARD. Who objects?

Mr. STANLY. All of us here object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has been the universal practice of the House, when gentlemen are absent; by order of the House, to allow them to record their votes when they come in. I have done so myself repeatedly when I have been absent upon committees of enrollment, and committees of conference. If this were not allowed, you would not be able to procure any member of this House to serve upon those committees, at a time when perhaps it is essentially necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order. It is a question which, I believe, is pertinent, and I will just state it to the House, and it is this: Though it may have been usual to do it in cases where it would not change the result, yet the Chair must at once see that it cannot be allowed in cases where the votes in those cases would decide against the residue of the House, and perhaps defeat the intention of the House, because other members would not have an opportunity to change their votes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that under the rules of the House the gentlemen have not the right to vote.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I have to say that I will serve on no more committees of conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman from Arkansas misapprehended the point in this case. The gentleman from Tennessee voted upon the last amendment.

Mr. DUNCAN. I rise to call the gentleman from Alabama to order. The question has been decided and no appeal taken, and debate is therefore not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly knows of no rule that would authorize the gentlemen to record their votes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I appeal from that decision, because it has been the universal practice of the House, since I have been a member, to allow votes to be recorded under such circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been usual to allow members of committees sitting by order of the House, to record their votes. But it has been practice alone. There is certainly no rule controlling the subject. The rule is very positive that those gentlemen who are not within the bar when their names are called cannot vote. The gentleman from Tennessee appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STANLY. I move to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. JONES. Upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. AVERETT. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the appeal was laid upon the table.

The twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the harbor bill, was read, viz:

"For repairing the piers in Big Sodus Bay, New York, $10,000."

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment, and I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The twenty-fifth amendment of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the bill, was then read, viz:

"For improving Cape Fear river, at and below Wilmington, North Carolina, $20,000."

Mr. DAWSON. Upon that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Babcock, Barrere, Bennett, Bibbhaugh, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Green, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hebard, Henn, John W. Howe, Thomas V. How, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Porter, Price, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Snow, Staley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, and Yates—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Averett, Thos. H. Bayly, Babcock, Buell, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, McCorkle, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Molony, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Savage, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stephens, Sutherland, Sweetser, Thurston, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move that the House take a recess until six o'clock.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I object.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, informing the House that that body had agreed to the report of the Committee on Conference on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask to make a report from the Committee on Conference upon the Indian appropriation bill. The Senate have agreed to it, and it now only requires that the House should agree to it, so that the bill may be enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that there is nothing but the report to be received?

Mr. JONES. That is all. The committee have agreed that the Senate shall recede from their amendments disagreed to by the House, and the Senate have concurred in the report.

The report of the Committee on Conference was then, by unanimous consent, agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the harbor bill.

The amendments of the Senate inserting the following clauses in the bill, were severally considered and agreed to, viz:

25th. "For repairing the piers at Huron river harbor, Ohio, $10,000."

27th. "For continuing and repairing the breakwater at Burlington, Vermont, $10,000."

28th. "For repairing the piers at Conneaut, Ohio, $10,000."

29th. "For repairing the piers at New Castle, Delaware, $15,000."

30th. "For the further improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Connecticut, $10,000."

31st. "For the improvement of the river St. John, Florida, $10,000."

[A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, announcing that the Senate had passed the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853, with sundry amendments.]

The thirty-second amendment of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the bill, was then read, as follows:

"For the completion of the old line of survey, or the new line, as may be deemed expedient, for a ship canal across the peninsula of Florida, $20,000."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to ask the indulgence of the House, for the last time, for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SWEETSER. Will it be in order to move to take a recess until six o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object.

The question was then taken on the amendment of the Senate, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbhaugh, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Green, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hebard, Henn, John W. Howe, Thomas V. How, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Porter, Price, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Snow, Staley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dunham, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Gaylord, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, McCorkle, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Molony, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Powell, Richardson, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, R. H. Stanton, St. Martin, Sutherland, Thurston, Townshend, Wallace, and Woodward—65.

So the amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

[Loud cries of "Object!"]

The amendments of the Senate, inserting the following clauses in the bill, were considered and agreed to, viz:

33d. "For the survey of the sand bars in Newark, New Jersey, $2,000."

34th. "For improving the Levee across the mouth of the river Santiago, in the State of California, to turn it into its former channel, $30,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

The thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate, inserting the following clause in the bill, was read:

"For the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee river, $50,000, in conformity with the estimates of the War Department of the 13th July, 1852. For the improvement of the navigation of the Illinois river, the sum of $30,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for a division of the question, so as to take it first upon the Tennessee amendment, and then upon the Illinois.

Mr. STUART. Can that be done upon a Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can.

Mr. STUART. Is not the practice the other way with regard to Senate amendments? If it were an amendment of this House, it could be done under our rule, but the amendments of the Senate must be agreed to or rejected as a whole, I take it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is divisible. The House can reject one part and agree to the other.

Mr. STUART. I understand it to be reported as a single amendment from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. They are all in the same class. The Chair thinks that the amendment is divisible.

The question now being upon the first clause of the amendment, appropriating $50,000 for the Tennessee river,

Mr. DAWSON demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. HENDRICKS called for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put, and the amendment was agreed to—yeas 84, nays not counted.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the second clause of the amendment, appropriating $30,000 for the Illinois river.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Upon the adoption of that portion of the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

APPEALS FROM THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask the permission of the House to move an agreement to a verbal amendment made by the Senate in bill No. 232, providing for appeals from the Patent Office. It is merely a verbal amendment inserting the word "associate" instead of "assistant judge," as I had put it in the bill.

There being no objection, the question was taken upon agreeing to the Senate amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the second clause of the 35th amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bibbhaugh, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Porter, Price, Reed, Richardson, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Staley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Thompson, Townshend, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Yates—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Babcock, Breckinridge, Caskie, Chastain, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Gilmore, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jackson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Mason, McCorkle, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Robbins, Robie, David L. Seymour, Skelton, R. H. Stanton, Wallace, and Woodward—58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments of the Senate inserting the following clauses in the bill were severally read and agreed to, viz:

36th. "For the improvement of the harbor and breakwater at Waukegan, Illinois, $15,000."

37th. "That the Secretary of War cause to be examined and surveyed the river Savannah, from the city of Savannah as high up as the city of Augusta, the Ocmulgee up to Macon, and the Flint up to Albany, and the Chattahoochee up to Columbus, in the State of Georgia, and to report to Congress the amount of money which may remove any obstructions to navigation, and that the sum of $10,000 be appropriated for that purpose."

38th. "For filling in behind the United States sea-wall in the harbor of St. Augustine, Florida, with earth, $3,000."

The thirty-ninth and last amendment of the Senate, striking from the bill section two, was then read and agreed to, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the commissioners of the town of Wilmington, North Carolina, be authorized to levy and collect a tonnage duty, not exceeding four cents per ton upon all vessels not less than sixty tons, for the purpose of cleaning out the obstructions in the mouth of Cape Fear river, and that to effect that purpose, the said commissioners be authorized to pledge the receipts from the said tonnage duty, to pay the interest or principal on any loan they may effect for that purpose: Provided, That the Legislature of North Carolina, at its next session, order and authorize such a tonnage duty."

Mr. DUNCAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which these several amendments have been adopted and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent it can be done, otherwise a separate vote must be taken upon each amendment.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HOUSTON obtained the floor.

THE GARDINER CLAIM—CHARGE AGAINST

MR. CORWIN.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I ask the indulgence of the gentleman from Alabama to yield me the floor for a single moment. It will not take five minutes to do what I desire should be done. It will be remembered that this House, on Monday or Tuesday, appointed a Select Committee to investigate the claim of Dr. Gardiner and the connection which the Secretary of the Treasury had with that claim. The committee, as appointed by this House, have had two meetings, but before even the committee met the Secretary of the Treasury addressed a communication to the chairman of the committee requesting an investigation instantly, and desiring that it should be gone into. The committee met and informed him that he could attend. The mover of the resolution is also urgent, and desires a number of witnesses to be summoned. Mr. Corwin, also, wishes a number of witnesses to be summoned, some of whom reside in distant States. The committee, from what they have seen of this matter, have come to the conclusion that it is impossible for them to commence and get through with the investigation before this session closes. It is known to all the members that if the session closes before the investigation has concluded, that the committee is dissolved, and there the thing ends. It is a question involving the character of a high functionary, who is pressing the matter on one hand, and the mover of the resolution upon the other, and all we ask is to make this little report, and then for the House to make such a disposition of the matter as they think proper.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not object to making the report unless some discussion comes up.

The Clerk then read the report, as follows:

The Select Committee appointed to investigate the facts touching the connection of the Hon. Thomas Corwin, the present Secretary of the Treasury, with the Gardiner claim, allowed by the Board for the adjustment of claims against the Republic of Mexico, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, report, that there will not be time during the present session of Congress to complete the investigation which they are required to make by said resolution, or to procure the attendance of the witnesses who are named upon both sides, and whose testimony is regarded as necessary to the full examination of said claim, or the connection of the said Corwin therewith.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I may speak for every member of the committee, when I say that we want the facts understood, and all the parties to have justice done them. The letters are short, and if read, will show what Mr. Corwin desires.

The Clerk read the first letter, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, August 24, 1852.

DEAR SIR: Amongst the published proceedings of the House of Representatives on Monday, I have observed a resolution of inquiry into my connection with the claim of Dr. Gardiner, before the late Mexican Commission.

I see by the published proceedings of this day, that you are the chairman of the committee raised on this resolution. As the session of Congress is drawing rapidly to a close, I am sure you will fully comprehend my extreme anxiety, that your investigation, so far as I am concerned, should proceed with the utmost possible dispatch.

I most respectfully ask, that you will inform me by the bearer of this, when I may have the opportunity of presenting testimony to the committee. Very respectfully,

THO. CORWIN.

HON. ANDREW JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will just say in this connection, that the committee met immediately on the receipt of that letter, and Mr. Corwin was informed that he could attend the next morning, which he did. The committee then took the necessary steps, and it was agreed to make the report which has just been read, and which was in readiness to be made to the House the day before yesterday. After that report was agreed to, the letter now about to be read was sent to the committee.

The Clerk then read the second letter, as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, August 26, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I understood this morning, that the special committee, of which you are the chairman, have resolved that they cannot proceed with the investigation assigned to them.

The anxiety expressed by me to the committee, that it should investigate and report to the present session, induces me now to request that the committee shall ask and obtain leave to sit in the vacation, and close the matter by a report, so far as I am concerned, as soon as possible. Yours, respectfully,

THO. CORWIN.

(Hon. A. JOHNSON.)

Mr. JOHNSON. I will only add, that great anxiety is manifested by the Secretary of the Treasury on the one hand, and on the other hand, by the mover of the resolution, [Mr. OLDS,] that this investigation should be gone into. It is for the House to determine what course they will pursue.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I desire to ask if the mover of the resolution [Mr. OLDS] has not left the House and gone home?

Mr. EDGERTON. I will say in behalf of my colleague, [Mr. OLDS,] the mover of the resolution, who has been called home, that he is exceedingly anxious for the prosecution of this inquiry; and he requested me so to say to the House, that he is equally anxious that the committee should have an opportunity of sitting during the recess, and ascertaining the facts of the case. I move, therefore, if it be in order, that the committee have leave to sit during the recess.

Mr. GENTRY. Mr. Speaker, I do not undertake to express any opinion whatsoever, founded upon anything like an investigation of the charges and imputations that have been made against the Secretary of the Treasury, whether they are true or false, just or unjust. Certainly, so far as I can form an opinion from all my preconceptions of the character and principles of that officer, I should hold them to be false, unjust, injurious, and calumnious imputations. But yet it cannot be denied, that men of very high character have sometimes disappointed the expectations which such a character has given their friends and the public a right to entertain. We are not to assume that because an individual has maintained a high character, he may not fall from that high position, and disappoint the high expectations which have been raised, and which his friends have had a right to indulge. These imputations against Mr. Corwin are of a character which involve his official and personal honor. It is his interest to desire that this investigation, now, after all that has been said, should be made speedily and promptly, thoroughly and effectively, if indeed he feels that he is an innocent man. He has a right to demand that he should have the vindication which a full development of the facts of the case would give him. To so much as this, if he is an injured man, is he entitled from this House. On the other hand, those who have made themselves responsible for these charges, are interested in having an opportunity to make good those charges, that they, if they can substantiate them, may stand vindicated against the imputation of being false and malicious slanderers. Let the investigation, therefore, be had, and if the Secretary of the Treasury is guilty, let him be impeached, and if he is innocent, let him be vindicated; and let his calumniators stand branded with the infamy and dishonor which they will deserve. Therefore I say that this committee ought to sit during the recess.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that that report be laid upon the table.

Mr. GENTRY. Sir, I hope not. Every principle of justice revolts against such a proceeding. A member of this House has pertinaciously insisted upon this investigation. This House has so far entertained the subject as to appoint, upon his demand, a Select Committee to investigate the charges. The House now owes it to the country, to the officer whose character is implicated, to the member of the House who has made himself responsible for this proceeding, and to its own character, not to stop short of a full investigation.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing that gentlemen shall discuss this proposition as much as they please. All I want to do is to dispose of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I ask the permission of the House to take up that bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I appeal to the gentleman to hear me but for a moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my motion to lay the report on the table for the present. All I desire is to dispose of the civil and diplomatic bill. It will not take five minutes to do it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If my friend will yield me the floor for a moment, I think we can dispose of this other matter.

Mr. MEADE. I hope the House has sense of justice enough to vote against laying the report of the Select Committee on the table.

Several MEMBERS. That motion has been withdrawn.

[Shouts of "Order!" "Order!" and much confusion.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Alabama, whether he has withdrawn his motion to lay the report upon the table?

Mr. HOUSTON. I did withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Then the question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON,] that the Select Committee have leave to sit during the recess.

Mr. EDGERTON. I have reduced my motion to writing, and I ask the Clerk to read it; and upon its adoption I call the previous question.

[At this time the greatest possible confusion prevailed all over the Hall.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I gave way, as a matter of courtesy, to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] but I had no idea of losing the floor, or of yielding for any other purpose than to enable him to present the report of the committee. I now desire to occupy the attention of the House so long as to get the civil and diplomatic bill referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain any motion until the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is disposed of.

Mr. GENTRY. I suppose that by general consent, the House can refer the bill, if that is all the gentleman desires. There will be no objection to that, I presume.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous wish of the House—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. The point of order I make is this: that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] having yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] to submit this motion, it is not in order for the gentleman from Alabama to resume the floor until the proposition made by the gentleman from Tennessee is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON,] by enlarging the powers of the committee.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will hear my proposition read, he will see, I think, that it is broad enough.

The Clerk then read Mr. EDGERTON's motion, as follows:

That the committee have leave to sit in the vacation, to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses under oath.

THE CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman, I desire to make a suggestion which I think will relieve the House from this difficulty. If the House will informally pass over this subject until the gentleman from Alabama can move the reference of the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill, they can then go on with the discussion of this matter.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent that can be done.

No objection was made.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senate have returned fifty-five or sixty pages of amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill. It is utterly impossible that we can examine them as they ought to be examined, either in the Committee of Ways and Means or in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pass the bill this session. I therefore submit the motion that the House disagree to all the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference. The Senate expect us to do this. Several Senators have requested me to take this course. It is the only course that will save the bill.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. It will be recollected that at the last session a similar course was pursued, and the result was that two or three most important changes were made in the law. At all events, I insist on the amendments being read.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GENTRY. If the motion of the gentleman from Alabama shall prevail, the effect will be, I suppose, to refer all these amendments to a committee of conference. Now, I think that is a very objectionable mode of legislating. It is delegating all our powers of legislation to a committee of conference.

Mr. CABELL. I rise to a question of order. I submit that any member of this House has a right to insist upon the reading of these amendments before being called upon to vote upon them.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet taken up.

Mr. CABELL. But the proposition is to take it up.

Mr. HALL. If that be the proposition, then the gentleman has no right to call for the reading of the amendments. A majority of the House must decide whether they shall be read or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he had better make his motions in their regular order. The bill has not yet been taken up.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move that the House now take up the civil and diplomatic bill, with a view of non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate, and appointing a committee of conference.

The question was put, and the House agreed to take up the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the House non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate; and if it be competent, I also include in the motion that to appoint a committee of conference, and ask that the two propositions may be decided by one vote; and I call for the previous question.

Mr. CABELL. Is it not in order to call for a division of that motion, so that the vote shall be taken upon the two propositions separately?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House non-concur with the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill, and that a committee of conference be appointed. The Chair decides that the motion is susceptible of division, and the vote must be taken upon each proposition separately, if demanded by any member.

Mr. CABELL. I demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the propositions will have to be voted upon separately.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg to present this question of order—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky was first recognized by the Chair, and will submit his question of order.

Mr. STANTON. These amendments, or nearly all of them, contain appropriations. I submit, therefore, that under the rules of the House they must first be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The rule does require that the amendments shall go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to suspend that rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit that the rule has been suspended.

Mr. STANTON. Certainly not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order, which will take precedence to that of the gentleman from Kentucky, and which will obviate, I think, all difficulty. I submit that this bill was taken up by general consent.

Mr. CABELL. Not at all.

Mr. CLINGMAN. After it was taken up the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] moved to suspend the rules to introduce the motion to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate, and to appoint a committee of conference. The question was then put, and the rules were suspended, to enable the gentleman from Alabama to introduce this identical motion. That was my understanding of the matter. I beg to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to this statement, and ask him if it is not correct?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the view taken by the gentleman from North Carolina. The gentleman from Alabama moved to suspend the rules with a view of submitting his proposition to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate, and appoint a committee of conference. The Chair thinks the gentleman has not changed his proposition since the rules were suspended. He therefore decides that the proposition to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate is now before the House.

Mr. STANTON. I think the Chair labors under a misapprehension. My recollection is, that the rules were suspended to take the bill up, not to introduce the motion to non-concur with the amendments and appoint a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That was the recollection of the Chair for the moment, but he now believes that is not the history of the question.

Mr. STANTON. My recollection is very clear, that the rules were suspended for the purpose of taking up the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that the bill was taken up by general consent. The gentleman from Alabama then moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of submitting his motion. The rules were suspended, and the Chair now decides the question before the House to be upon the motion to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate, and to appoint a committee of conference; which motion, upon further reflection, he thinks must be taken as a whole.

Mr. CABELL. I desire to ask the Speaker one question.

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. CABELL. I ask the Speaker if I have not the right to ask upon what amendment the House are now called upon to act?

The SPEAKER. Upon all the Senate amendments to the bill.

Mr. CABELL. Well, what are they? Have I not the right to have them read, in order that the House may know what they are acting upon?

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question upon my motion.

Mr. STUART. I ask the Speaker if I was not recognized before the gentleman from Alabama, and if so, whether he had the floor to call the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama called for the previous question some ten minutes since, upon his motion. Since that time we have been indulging in questions of order.

Mr. STUART. Then I object to any further discussion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] calls for the reading of the amendments; I ask if it is not in order for me to move to dispense with the reading?

The SPEAKER. It is competent to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is it in order to move to refer this bill?

The SPEAKER. Not in the opinion of the Chair. We are now acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BAYLY. The rules were only suspended for the purpose of taking up the bill.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The previous question has been called.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair replies to the gentleman from Virginia that his motion is certainly out of order.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire if it is not in order to have these amendments read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I beg to tell gentlemen that it will take till to-morrow night to read the amendments.

Mr. CARTTER. I object to all further debate, and call for the question on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. What is the main question?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the rejection of the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. CABELL. I ask the Chair again if I have not the right to have the amendments read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that, strictly speaking, under the rule, any gentleman has the right to demand that the amendments be read.

Mr. CABELL. I demand it.

The SPEAKER. Then the Clerk will proceed to read the amendments.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to suspend the rule which requires that the amendments shall be read.

The SPEAKER. Under the circumstances, the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. STUART. I wish to suggest to the Chair that it is not by a rule of the House that this right exists; it is by parliamentary law. By parliamentary law every member has the right to have the amendment or the proposition, whatever it is, read before he is called upon to vote upon it. If it existed by our rules we should have a right to suspend those rules, but it is settled by parliamentary law, over which we have no such control.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I call for the reading of the 57th rule.

It was read by the Clerk, as follows:

"When the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the law upon this subject, as he understands it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] says this is parliamentary law, and the House have no right to suspend it. The Chair thinks that the rules of the House are also parliamentary law, so far as this House is concerned. Our rules adopt the parliamentary law; and we may, by a majority, repeal or suspend that law so far as its application to the House is concerned. There is and can be no question about it. We may suspend it the same as any rule of the House. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about it.

Mr. CARTTER. I renew the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to suspend the rules for the purpose of submitting a motion to dispense with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have not withdrawn the motion.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to ask the Chair if any member of this House, or all the members of this House, can be compelled to vote upon a proposition which has not been stated to the House by having it read? I protest against any such action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has misunderstood the Chair, though it has been the Chair's misfortune, and not the gentleman's fault. He has stated the proposition about five times, and if, in consequence of the confusion which prevails in the Hall, it is still not understood, the Chair will take great pleasure in stating it again.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays upon the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House were suspended for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to submit a proposition. The gentleman did submit his proposition, which is, that the House disagree to the amendments made by the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill, and that a committee of conference be appointed to meet a similar committee upon the part of the Senate. That is the proposition now before the House, and the Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the Chair had not stated it again and again.

Mr. CARTTER. I call for the question. [Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays. I would rather adopt every amendment than to reject them all and send them to a committee of conference. That course was pursued the last session, and some important and necessary amendments were lost in consequence.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. EWING. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if the Speaker has decided—for the confusion was such I could not understand—that we could be forced to vote upon a proposition, about which we know nothing?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated very distinctly—but the confusion in the Hall has been so great that he supposes he has been misunderstood by many gentlemen—that any member has the right to demand that the amendments shall be read. The Chair also declares that it is competent for the House to suspend that rule and to dispense with the reading. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ORR. I appeal from that decision. Mr. EWING. As I understand it, the rule, in practice at least, is uniform, that if the informal reading of any proposition before the House be called for by any member, it may be refused him by a majority of the House; but, if I understand the rules of the House, no member can be compelled to vote upon any proposition which he has never heard read. Now, I insist upon hearing each amendment to the appropriation bill read, before I am called upon to vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. EWING. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I object to any debate.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House adjourn. We are doing nothing here.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the appeal.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to state a simple proposition.

Mr. STUART. I object to any discussion.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and debate is out of order.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. STUART. I object to any statement or inquiry.

Mr. STANTON. Is it not in order to make an inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] asks the consent of the House to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. STUART. I object.

Mr. MEADE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. There is a question of order already pending, and it is not debatable.

Mr. MEADE. What is that question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be happy to state it, if the House will come to order.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Now, I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to the question of order, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hovstou] moved that the rules be suspended—the bill having been taken up by unanimous consent—for the purpose of submitting a proposition that this House reject the amendments proposed by the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and that this House appoint a committee of conference to confer with a committee upon the part of the Senate upon the disagreements between the two Houses. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] demanded that the Senate amendments be read. The Chair decided that he had a right to call for and have those amendments read. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] rose in his place, and moved a suspension of the rule which gives the gentleman from Florida that right. The Chair entertains that motion. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The Chair is not well informed upon which point the gentleman appeals. The Chair has stated the entire of this matter with perfect fairness.

Mr. EWING. No doubt of that; but the Chair does not understand my motion. I will state it.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to state briefly the decision of the Chair from which he appeals.

Mr. EWING. I will state it as briefly as I can. I understand that a member asking informally, and for the sake of information, to have an amendment or any proposition re-read is not entitled to it, and that this privilege may be refused to him by a majority of the House. The Chair decides that it is merely under a conventional rule of the House that any member may ask for the original reading, to know what he is voting upon, or is called to vote upon; but that the rule may at any time be suspended, and any member may be forced to vote upon any proposition which has never been read. I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I hope the 57th rule will be read.

A Voice. It has been read.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. "The rules of parliamentary practice composed in Jefferson's Manual, shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and order of the House, and the joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives." That is the rule of the House. Now, Jefferson's Manual, according to the recollection of the Chair, gives to any member, called upon to vote upon a paper, the right to hear it read. It thereby becomes part of the rules, and governs this body, according to our own written rules. The Chair decides that that rule, as well as any other rule in the book, can be dispensed with by a majority of two-thirds. Upon that point the Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am in hopes that the 57th rule will be read.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be again read, unless it is objected to.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object.

Mr. WARD. I would like to make a single inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be happy to respond to any inquiry gentlemen may make, if it is the pleasure of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I object; and I call every gentleman to order who is out of order.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MEADE. I wish to say one word.

Mr. HARRIS. This debate is not in order, and I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. MEADE. The gentleman does not know what—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Mr. MEADE. The gentleman does not know whether I am in order or not.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. There is a question of order pending, and debate is not in order.

Mr. MEADE. It is that question which I want to know.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts the House will hear the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to know of the Chair whether I understand the question?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order, as gentlemen insist upon enforcing the rules.

The question recurring upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table,

Mr. WARD asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. Give us the yeas and nays. It is an outrageous decision.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GENTRY. Is it in order to move an adjournment?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. GENTRY. Then I hope we shall proceed.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the principle involved in the appeal. It involves one single point. The Chair decides that the rule, under which a member may have a paper read at his discretion, may be suspended as other rules of the House.

Mr. MEADE. That is not the question.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. MEADE. The question is, whether I shall be compelled to vote upon a paper which has not been read?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" all over the House.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is exhausted in his efforts to keep order, and will be compelled to resort to the power which belongs to the officers of this House unless order is maintained.

Several Voices. "That is right!" "That is right!"

Mr. GENTRY. I hope the House will sustain the Chair.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire—

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Mr. MEADE. The proposition is stated from the Chair different from what it was before stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The Chair has repeated it again and again in precise language; and it is the question to be voted upon.

Mr. STANLY. I beg pardon of the Chair, but I wish to ask him one question.

The SPEAKER. If the House will indulge the gentleman, the Chair would be happy to hear him.

Many MEMBERS. "I object!" "I object!"

Mr. BAYLY. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. GENTRY. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. BAYLY. I have a right to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order in propounding a question to the Chair, for that is debate, and none is allowed.

Mr. BAYLY. I have a right, before I vote, to inquire what your decision is.

The SPEAKER. It has been stated.

Mr. BAYLY. Have not I a right to do that?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CARTTER. I ask that the call of the roll shall proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks gentlemen upon all hands to take their seats, and preserve their own dignity as well as the dignity of this body. The Chair announces again that unless gentlemen do obey the authority of the Chair, the Chair will call upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to aid him in executing the rules of this body.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Averett, Bockock, Bragg, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapin, Chastain, Chingman, Conger, John G. Davis, Dawson, Doty, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Faulkner, Floyd, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hays, Hendricks, Henu, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Geo. G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, Morrison, Murphy, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Perkins, Phelps, Red, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Scudder, Skelton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Strother, T. Taylor, Thurston, Venable, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, and Wildrick—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Babcock, Thos. H. Bayly, Barrere, Bibbhausa, Bowie, John H. Boyd, George H. Brown, Buell, E. Carrington Cabell, Caskey, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, Dimmick, Dockery, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodnow, Goodrich, Green, Hammond, Harper, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Holladay, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Mann, McCorkle, McQueen, Meade, Millson, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nevins, Orr, Outlaw, Penningman, Powell, Price, Richardson, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stuart, Sweetser, Tuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Welch, Woodward, and Yates—65.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules. I want to know if we are to vote upon what we know nothing at all about?

Mr. GENTRY. I rise to a question of order. I do not intend to delay or embarrass the Chair with unnecessary importunity upon any point of order, and it is my rule to submit even when I think it is wrong, rather than create confusion by unnecessary points of order.

The 57th rule says that when the reading of any paper is called for, and it is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House. My question of order is, that upon the question raised by my honorable friend from Florida, [Mr. CABELL], the simple question is, Shall the paper be read? That the House can determine; and the motion to suspend the rules is out of place, because it implies that it requires a suspension of the rules to do that which by an express rule of the House may be done by a majority of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes a distinction; and thinks that the gentleman will, upon reflection, agree with the Chair upon the point. The Chair again repeats, that any member upon the floor may have a paper read at the Clerk's desk upon which he is called upon to vote for the first time. No member may have it read a second time without a vote of the House. There is the distinction.

Several Voices. "That is right!" "That is right!"

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to read a paper which the rules of the House do not require to be read that that rule was made for.

Mr. GENTRY. It resolves itself into a sort of technicality. If amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill are not to be regarded as papers, then the 57th rule does not apply to them.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, AUGUST 30, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 152.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. GENTRY. I do not.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I call him to order.

Mr. GENTRY. I think other gentlemen would do well to act upon the same idea, and not annoy the Speaker with unnecessary questions of order.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Is the appeal still pending?

The SPEAKER. The appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. RICHARDSON here obtained the floor.

Mr. GENTRY. Will my friend from Illinois allow me one moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. GENTRY. In connection with the rule which I have read I wish to make one remark. The rule is very brief, and I will read it again:

"When the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House."

Now there is a note to that rule, as follows:

"As originally adopted, this rule contains, after the word 'for,' the words 'which had before been read to the House.' They were stricken out on the 14th of December, 1795."

The SPEAKER. Very good. If the gentleman will allow the Chair—and it embraces precisely one of the cases which the Chair gave a few moments ago—the Chair holds that a paper in the shape of a bill, for instance, to be voted upon, must be read under the law, and that you cannot dispense with the reading unless you dispense with the rules. But if the paper has been read once, it is not within the power of any one member to demand that it shall be read a second time. The rule provides, that if he be sustained by a vote of the House he may have it read. Again, it will embrace another case like this: If a member asks that a paper not before the House—a letter, for instance—be read, and it is objected to, he may, by a vote of the House, have it read. A bill or amendment to be voted upon must be read under the rule—the rule commands it—and it cannot be dispensed with except by a vote of two thirds. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I agree entirely with the decision made by the Chair; but the point I wish to arrive at is whether two thirds of the House can dispense with the reading of a proposition upon which members are called to vote? On that, probably, the Chair and myself will differ. I agree with the Chair that it is the right of every member to have a proposition read once. These amendments have not been read at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair might agree with the gentleman from Illinois, that it would be very tyrannical for the House to give a vote which would force any member to vote upon a matter he had not heard read. That is one point. Another is the rule by which we are governed in this matter. The Chair repeats, that our written rules adopt Jefferson's Manual, so far as they are not inapplicable and inconsistent with the other rules adopted for our Government. Mr. Jefferson's Manual, and the practice of all deliberative bodies, so far as the Chair knows anything about them, require a paper that is to be voted upon to be read. That is a rule. We have other rules, all, or any of which, the Chair decides may be dispensed with by a vote of two thirds.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The difference between the Chair and myself is this: I contend that you cannot by a two-thirds vote dispense with the first reading. The Manual, so far as it has been adopted, does not come within the category of the rules, and you cannot suspend it if any member objects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would be difficult for the gentleman to point to authority to sustain his position.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Is it in order to have read a case of the last Congress which is precisely in point?

The SPEAKER. If not objected to.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. A proposition to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. As the gentleman from Tennessee says there is a precedent in point upon this subject, I beg the House will let it be read.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House alone can it be read.

Mr. STUART. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would beg gentlemen to draw correct distinctions between the decision of the Chair and the objects to be arrived at by them. If the Chair were upon the floor, he might vote with those who thought it tyrannical to force a member of the House to vote upon what he never heard. That is one point, and the rule is another. The Chair has great confidence that he has stated the rule correctly.

A MEMBER. There is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. The question is, "Shall the rules be suspended that the reading of these amendments may be dispensed with?"

Mr. KING, of New York. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and the rules were not suspended—yeas 55, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Chastain, Clingman, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Doty, Duham, Eastman, Faulkner, Floyd, Gilmore, Gorham, Grey, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Geo. W. Jones, Letcher, Mason, McNair, Molony, Murphy, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Phelps, Porter, Reed, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Savage, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Stone, Strother, Taylor, and Venable—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bibb, Bibb, Biscoe, Bowie, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brooks, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caskey, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Daniel, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Goodenow, Goodrich, Green, Hammond, Harper, Haws, Hasenell, Haven, Hebard, Holladay, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, Meade, Millson, John Moore, Murray, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Penn, Penniman, Powell, Price, Richardson, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Tuck, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Wells, and Wildrick—91.

So the rules were not suspended, (two thirds not voting in the affirmative.)

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. My sole object was to prevent being called upon to vote upon propositions which had never been read.

[Cries of "Read on!" and "Object to discussion!"]

Mr. CABELL. I withdraw the proposition that the amendments be read, with a view that the bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee of Ways and Means; I care not which.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Florida that it is not within his power to withdraw an objection that will at all affect the reading of the paper, because the law of the House requires the paper to be read, and it cannot be dispensed with, according to the decision of the Chair, without a vote of two thirds, which vote has not been given.

[Cries of "Read on!" "Read on!"]

Mr. CABELL. I rise to a question of order. I rose in my place, and asked that these amendments be read. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] moved that the rule be dispensed with which authorized me to require them to be read. I now withdraw my proposition that they be read—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has misunderstood the course of proceeding entirely. When the gentleman from Florida rose, and asked that the amendments be read, the Chair directed the Clerk to go to the reading under the rule. The motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina was to suspend the rules, so as to dispense with the law of the House requiring the reading. The amendments must be read, the House having declined to dispense by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. If it be in order, I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. We are acting under the operation of the previous question, which was ordered upon the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Housron,] and no motion to commit is in order.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CABELL. Is it in order to ask for a vote upon the amendments as we proceed?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. The object of reading the amendments now, is to enable gentlemen to determine how they will vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, which is to reject the amendments in gross. We are acting under the operation of the previous question and a suspension of the rules, which enabled the gentleman to submit that peculiar motion.

Mr. CABELL. Has the gentleman asked the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It has been ordered by a vote of the House.

Mr. CABELL. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered to be put?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would.

Mr. CABELL. I then submit that motion. Mr. ORR. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. Whilst we are reading these amendments, no motion can be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and is of the opinion that a motion to reconsider is a privileged question.

The question was put on laying the motion to reconsider upon the table, and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 45.

Mr. CABELL. I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HART and ALLISON were appointed.

The question was again put, and the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table, the tellers having reported—ayes 85, noes 44.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to dispense with the reading of these amendments, because that is the precedent, although it has been stated otherwise.

Mr. LETCHER. I object. The Clerk proceeded with the reading.

Mr. CARTTER. I want the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his objection. He made it to punish his own friends, who objected to the dispensing with this silly ceremony of reading.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous pleasure of the body that the reading be dispensed with?

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to know if these amendments all go to the Committee of Conference, whether, when the report comes back, it can be divided?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. Mr. STANTON. Does the Chair hold that we cannot have a separate vote upon the amendments here?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so holds. Mr. STANTON. If that be the state of things, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the proposition made by the gentleman from Alabama, and it is a double one. It is, that the amendments of the Senate be rejected in mass, and that a committee of conference be appointed, to meet with one on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the House vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, we then take a separate vote upon each amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, that if the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama be voted down, the bill, under the rules, must be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, unless the rules be suspended so requiring.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Under the rules and practice of the House, the negative of the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama is a concurrence with all of the amendments of the Senate as they now stand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a different impression. He will decide questions as they arise.

Mr. EWING. I would ask whether the motion of the gentleman from Alabama can be entertained with reference to these amendments which have not yet been put in the possession of the House? He moves to reject the whole of them, although they have not been read.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent, the reading was dispensed with.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to be precisely correct in stating the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. My motion was to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The question was taken, and the amendments in gross were rejected, and a committee of conference was ordered to be requested of the Senate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider that vote, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE GARDINER CASE.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to take up the motion I submitted to the House to allow the special committee to sit during the recess.

The SPEAKER. That matter is before the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I claim the floor on that proposition.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] It seems that he claims the floor upon this subject. The Chair thought that the gentleman had reference to the other matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to amend.

Mr. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Illinois cannot amend when I offered the proposition and moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] either as giving way for the introduction of the proposition or as adopting it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I claim the floor upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is, whether the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] is before the House.

Mr. EDGERTON. I made my proposition verbally.

The SPEAKER. It is now before the House in writing, and will be reported to the House.

The resolution was then read, as follows:
Resolved, That the select committee appointed to investigate the connection of Thomas Corwin, Secretary of the Treasury, with the Gardiner claim, have leave to sit in vacation and send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses under oath.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is necessary, in order to terminate their labors before the meeting of the next session of Congress, that they should make their report to some one of the officers of the House. I propose, in the amendments I submit, to obviate the difficulty which exists in the proposition made by the gentlemen from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON.] The gentlemen who constitute the committee may get through in two or three weeks, probably in three or four. They do not want to remain here until the sitting of the next Congress. It is necessary, then, that power should be given them to make their report to the Clerk of the House. There is another amendment which I desire to make. I do not know very much about this Mexican Commission, but I take it for granted in the immense allowances they have made, that there are other cases where they have done wrong as well as in the case of Gardiner. I propose to give the committee power to inquire into all cases if it becomes necessary to investigate them, and make their report. I move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON,] then, in two particulars, first, to enlarge the powers of the committee, and second, to enable them to make their report to the Clerk of the House during the recess of Congress.

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a question of order, and that is, that when I offered my proposition to the House, I moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now ask the previous question on the proposition I submitted.

Mr. SWEETSER. I rise to a question of order, that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] is not in order, as it proposes to enlarge the powers of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My amendment is, that the committee have power to investigate any other claims that were allowed by the board appointed to sit upon the Mexican claims, and to transmit their report to the Clerk of the House during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SWEETSER. I make two points of order upon that proposition. My first point of order is, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has enlarged the powers for which this committee was raised, and is, therefore, not in order; and my second point of order is, that to authorize the committee to report to the Clerk of the House is not in conformity with our rules, and that such committee cannot report except to this House when in session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the first point of order, but is inclined to sustain the second. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. I wish to make a practical inquiry in relation to this subject.

The SPEAKER. A demand for the previous question is made, and all debate is cut off.

Mr. CARTER. I ask my colleague to withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. EDGERTON. I cannot. I believe my proposition is all that is desired by the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON's amendment was then read, as follows:

And that the committee have power to examine and report upon any claims allowed or rejected through the procurement of fraud or false suggestions before such Board established under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. The resolution constituting this committee was introduced, under a suspension of the rules, for the specific purpose of investigating the connection of the Secretary of the Treasury with this matter. Now, this is a proposition to introduce other investigations, and I make the point of order that it cannot be done now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman contend that it will not be in the power of the House to enlarge the powers of its committees, so far as to enable them to send for persons and papers, when the rules have been suspended for the specific purpose? The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALL. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HALL's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. CARTER. With the permission of my colleague, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee of investigation a single question, with a view to the practicability of its sittings during the recess. I am told that witnesses cannot be got here, and it is a useless provision.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. DUNCAN. I rise to a question of order. This amendment is very extraordinary. It proposes to send this committee to investigate perhaps one hundred cases, which have been tried by the commission established under the authority of the Government; and I ask whether it is in order to institute that inquiry without confining the committee to specific cases?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] made that precise question of order. The Chair overruled it, and the House sustained the Chair in its decision.

Mr. DUNCAN. Then I hope that the House will see the propriety of voting down the amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on Mr. RICHARDSON's amendment, and it was rejected.

The question then recurred upon Mr. EDGERTON's amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to state one fact.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!" "I object!"]

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So Mr. EDGERTON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to introduce the following resolution, which I ask may be read for information.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to purchase of the publisher, for the use of members of this House, twenty thousand copies of Stansbury's Report of his Expedition to the Great Salt Lake: Provided, The same are executed in like style, and at a price not exceeding that paid by the Senate for the same.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. FICKLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. TUCK. I have a matter upon which I wish—

[Shouts of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire must be aware that there is a motion pending to suspend the rules. A motion is made that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TUCK. If the House will permit me to say a word or two, I know they will not object to the request I am about to make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to indulge the gentleman if it is the pleasure of the House.

[Loud cries of "Object!" and "Order!"]

Mr. FICKLIN. What is it that the gentleman from New Hampshire desires?

Mr. TUCK. I have wished to make a speech on the subject of the fisheries, which I will now publish.

[Renewed shouts of "Order!" and "Object!"]

The question was then taken upon Mr. FICKLIN's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. CONGER to suspend the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire of the Chair if it is in order to make a very brief explanation?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CONGER's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the rules were not suspended.

PAY TO JOURNAL CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FITCH. I desire to do justice to one of our officers, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution for that purpose. I wish simply to state to the House that the Presiding Officer of the House knows more about this matter than anybody else, and I believe approves of the resolution.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to the present Journal Clerk of the House, out of the contingent fund, a sum which will make his annual compensation for his past services and until otherwise ordered, equal to that heretofore paid in the House and still paid in the Senate to the person performing a similar duty.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. FITCH. Then I move to suspend the rules to enable me to offer the resolution.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and on a division there were—ayes 67, noes 77.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon Mr. FITCH's motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put; and, on a division, there were—ayes 114, noes 17.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. FITCH. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would like to know what the Clerk now gets?

[Shouts of "Order!"]

Mr. FITCH. I will inform the gentleman with pleasure. He gets $1,500.

[Renewed shouts of "Order!"]

The question was then put on the adoption of the resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. FITCH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, no provision of law at present exists by which the lands in California can be surveyed and sold. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House—and if it be refused, I shall move to suspend the rules—to permit the Committee on Public Lands to report back Senate bill No. 7, which provides for the survey of the public lands in California, and the grant of preëmption rights to the citizens of that country.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. HALL. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER put the question to the House, and announced that it was decided in the negative.

Mr. HALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman is in time in asking for the yeas and nays on his proposition.

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn, and upon that motion I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and HENY were appointed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before the question is put upon the adjournment, is it in order to determine what time we will adjourn to?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move the day, within the constitutional provision, to which the House will adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose that, by a suspension of the rules, the House might determine to adjourn until nine o'clock, or some earlier hour than eleven o'clock, on Monday morning. I desire to fix an earlier hour, because I think it is necessary, and if I have the unanimous consent of the House, I will name nine o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. Eleven o'clock is early enough.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. There is a motion already pending to suspend the rules, and another motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it will obviate the objection, I will say ten o'clock, or eight o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Eleven o'clock is time enough.

The question was then put upon Mr. JENKINS's motion, and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to, and the House (at twenty minutes past seven o'clock, p. m.) adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following memorial and petitions were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. NEWTON: The memorial of Joseph R. Ingersoll and others, praying for the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Jesse Tuttle and others, of Harwich, Massachusetts, asking that an armed force of the Navy of the United States may be dispatched to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and other waters in that region, to give countenance and protection to the fishermen in their legal rights.

By Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of A. P. Russell, William Jennison, and others, of Montour county, Pennsylvania, praying the passage of a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the deposits of the public money to be made with said States by the act approved 23d June, 1836.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 28, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

THE LOBOS ISLANDS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary, transmitting a further report from the Secretary of State relative to the Lobos Islands, accompanied by a copy of the orders of the Navy Department to Commodore McCauley, which was requested by a resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant.

The message was read and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITION.

Mr. CLEMENS presented the petition of John S. Meldrum, praying indemnity for losses sustained while sutler to the thirteenth regiment of infantry during the late war with Mexico; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th June, 1853, reported back the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of the legal representatives of Jacques Clamorgan, late of Missouri, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853, to which various amendments have been made by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. When we adjourned last night, I said that I would examine the various amendments for the purpose of excepting to such as I thought would require a separate vote; but upon looking to the state of the business, I find there will be no time for that. We will have to trust to the House to revise our proceedings, and object to such amendments as are improper. There is one, however, which I wish to reserve for the purpose of adding to it. That is the amendment in relation to the insane asylum in this city. There is a mistake which it is necessary to correct, in relation to it. I hope the question will be taken upon all the others together.

The amendments made, as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one alluded to, were agreed to.

The excepted amendment is as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President of the United States, to purchase a site, containing not less than ten, nor more than fifteen acres of land, in the neighborhood of Washington, for the erection, furnishing, and fitting up of an asylum for the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy of the United States, $100,000: Provided, That the whole expense of purchasing the site, the erecting and furnishing and fitting up of the building shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to amend that amendment, by striking out the words "containing not less than ten, nor more than fifteen acres of land," so as to enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase a site, instead of limiting the quantity of land.

Mr. DAVIS. Will that answer the Senator's purpose? A site will be only a building place, whereas you want a large quantity of land.

Mr. HUNTER. It leaves it indefinite. It leaves to the Secretary to select what quantity is wanted.

Mr. WALKER. I would ask the Senator, if he has in his mind any given quantity of land which the officer has to purchase?

Mr. HUNTER. I will say, that the original ten or fifteen acres was according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior. Upon consultation with other persons, and indeed with the Secretary himself, it was thought that that would not be enough; that it would require about one hundred acres. I have thought, however, that it would be best to leave the quantity indefinite. If the appropriation is not limited in amount, he will only buy so much as will be found to be necessary. He may not be able to get one hundred acres—or more may be wanted; but, however, I am willing, if the Senator desires it, to say, "a site not exceeding one hundred acres."

Mr. BADGER. I think that had better not be done. Suppose they could buy one hundred and fifty acres for half the money, by going a little further out?

Mr. HUNTER. Very well; I will, then, let it stand as I first proposed it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. HAMLIN. There was an amendment made to the bill increasing the salary of two of the clerks in the office of the Register of the Treasury from $800 to $1,000. "The appropriation for the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messengers, and assistant messengers in his office," is $30,400. The increase in the salary of the two clerks will render it necessary to amend that sum by making it $30,800. I move to amend that clause of the bill by striking out "400," and inserting "800," making the appropriation $30,800. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to say, in relation to this bill, that I hope there will not be many more amendments offered. If there are, we shall be obliged to vote against them, whether right or wrong, because they will endanger the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment which the Committee on Finance have authorized. It is to insert in the bill—

For defraying the expenses of surveying and marking the boundary of the States of Missouri and Iowa, under the decision and order of the Supreme Court, $11,042 68.

I propose this with the permission of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT. Is there an estimate for it? Mr. JONES. I was going to say so. The appropriation was made at the last session of Congress, and put in the civil and diplomatic bill, but was struck out in the House on the objection of a Missouri member, who supposed that the appropriation had already been made. The estimate has again been made by the Secretary and approved by the Committee on Finance. The appropriation is absolutely necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That if A. Boyd Hamilton, the present contractor for executing the printing of the Senate and House of Representatives shall file with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, his written consent to relinquish his contract in terms, the said Secretary and Clerk, and the Clerk of the Printing Committee, are hereby authorized to settle up his accounts for all the work done, all the work ordered now in his hands, in process of completion, and all work that may be ordered by either the Senate or the House of Representatives prior to the assumption of his duties by the public printer under the act to execute the public printing and regulating the prices thereof, and for other purposes, under the rates allowed by the above-mentioned act, deducting thirty per cent. from the prices of the paper named in the said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I desire to offer an amendment, and call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to it. It is to insert the following:

For compensation to the late superintendent of the new custom house at New Orleans, for his services from July 1st, 1851, to January 1st, 1852, $1,472.

The PRESIDENT. Is that reported from a committee?

Mr. BELL. No, sir; but I think it is more legitimate than a thousand others which have been offered and acted upon.

The PRESIDENT. Then it will not be in order.

Mr. BELL. It provides for compensation to an officer who acted after his term of office had expired. He did not cease to continue his services, but he actually performed them after the expiration of his term of office; for which he has not been paid. I have a statement of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the service. He should have discontinued his work at the new custom-house on the 1st of July, 1851; but it appears, by the reports of the commissioner relative to the building, made from time to time, that he continued to act until the 1st January, 1852, for which he has received no compensation. The reason of that is stated in a preceding part of the report. I have only to state that, agreeably to a proviso annexed to the appropriation for the building—the act passed 3d of March, 1851—the salary of Mr. Crockett was discontinued after the 30th June, 1851; but he continued to act, as it appears by the reports of the commissioner relative to the building, made from time to time, until the first day of January, 1852. I called the attention of the Senators from Louisiana, in a private conversation, to this subject. Senators will remember that, at the close of the last session, we abolished, suddenly, the office of superintendent, or commissioner for building this custom-house at New Orleans, and entered into a new arrangement. Although he was notified of this on the 30th of June, 1851, it did not go into effect, except that the law prohibited the payment of any salary from 30th June, 1850, until the 1st day of January, 1852; so that he continued to discharge the duties until the 1st January, 1852. The Senator from Louisiana, if he has heard me distinctly, will probably know how this is.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, if such is the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. It appears to me to be a private claim. However, the Senate have seemed not to regard the rule.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is fully aware that the Senate has departed from the rule, and the Chair is therefore under the control of the Senate. The Chair has decided that, in his opinion, this is a private claim.

Mr. BELL. But I hope the Senate will not, in this instance, take the opinion of the Chair, and vote down the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair's suggestion was simply this: That many amendments had been brought forward of a similar nature, and the Senate had thought proper to entertain them, the Chair entertaining the opinion that they were not admissible; but it was the pleasure of the Senate to admit them. Now, if such is the pleasure of the Senate, this amendment will be received.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it my duty to insist on the rule. At this late period of the session, I am anxious to get the bill through and over to the House at once. If you put any more amendments on the bill, they will all be voted down. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. BELL. If gentlemen want to debate it, I do not desire to embarrass the bill.

Mr. PRATT. I think it inappropriate at this late period of the session to attempt to raise the salaries of officers employed by the Government of the United States. We cannot know—we have not time to inquire, what they are now receiving. We have not an opportunity of knowing what ought to be received, and what may be the necessary expenditures at the places at which they may be located. I hope this amendment will not be received. It is a private claim undoubtedly. I hope the Senate will not depart from the rule.

Mr. BELL. It has been received.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. BELL. It is no more a private claim than many which the Senate have admitted. But the honorable Senator seems to labor under a misapprehension of the amendment. It does not propose to increase the compensation of an officer. The Senator has made an objection to the amendment without understanding its nature.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to offer an amendment, to which I presume there will be no objection. It relates to the laborers upon the extension of the Capitol. We have provided for clerks who have constant employment, and it seems to me now that we should look a little to the interest of those who are frequently out of employment. My amendment is to add the following to the bill:

Sec. —. Be it further enacted, That to enable the Architect to pay the workmen on the extension of the Capitol thirty days' pay during the suspension of the work, the sum of $18,000 be paid out of the appropriation authorized by the joint resolution approved April 13th, 1852: Provided, That no workman shall be paid who was not employed at the time of the suspension of said work, or who was discharged for incapacity or irregularity of conduct.

Mr. ADAMS. I raise the question of order whether that amendment can be received?

The PRESIDENT. It cannot be received.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think the question ought to be put upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Under the rule of the Senate, the Chair decides that the amendment cannot be received, inasmuch as it involves a private claim. The rule is positive, that no private claim shall be incorporated upon an appropriation bill. From the decision of the Chair the Senator appeals. The question, therefore, will be whether the Senate will sustain the Chair in his decision.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HALE. I desire to propound a question to the Chair, whether it requires a majority to sustain him in his decision? Last night, while another Presiding Officer was in the chair, it was decided that it required a majority to overrule the Chair.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided that the opinion of the gentleman who then occupied the chair was correct. It requires a majority of the Senate to overrule the decision of the Presiding Officer.

The decision of the Chair was sustained by the Senate, and consequently the amendment was not received.

Mr. WALKER. I move to amend the bill by inserting in it, after the appropriations for the Territories, the following:

For the payment of the sum audited by the proper officers of the Treasury, to John Catlin, for his salary as Secretary and ex officio acting Governor of Wisconsin Territory, from the 10th of June, 1848, to March 4th, 1849, a sum not exceeding $1,817 26.

I have only to say, that the account of Mr. Catlin has passed the Auditor. Why it is not contained in the estimates submitted to us this year, I do not know, but the Senate once passed it without a word of objection. The papers were before the committee, the account was audited, and the Senate once put the allowance in the bill before it went to the House of Representatives; but in the great number of cases which were then submitted to the committees of conference, the papers were lost, and the account stands now upon the books of the Auditor as an audited account. The Senate has once passed it without a dissenting voice.

The PRESIDENT. It stands on the same footing as the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. WALKER. This is not a private claim, but it is to pay an officer of the Government for discharging his duty. His account has already been audited.

The PRESIDENT. It is the same thing, if the services were rendered after the term expired. The Chair will, however, put the amendment, as in other cases.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire to amend the following clause in the bill:

"For compensation and contingent expenses of the Auxiliary Guard, $14,800."

There are thirty members of that guard. By the present appropriation, fifteen receive $500 a year, and the other fifteen receive $420. At first, there was no difference between them, but since that fifteen have made application, and have had an increase of their salaries to $500. The other fifteen perform the same service, but receive a less salary, and I only desire an increase of $1,200 in the appropriation, in order that all may be put upon the same footing. I therefore move to strike out $14,800, and insert $16,000, and insert at the end of the clause, "each member of the guard to receive an annual salary of $500." This will be an increase of $80 a year to fifteen of the guard, and will make their salaries equal to those of the other fifteen.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE. I move to amend the following section in the bill, by striking out "$18,000," and inserting "$6,000:"

"For salary and outfit of a Commissioner to reside in China, including the additional compensation under the act to carry into effect certain provisions in the treaties between the United States and China and the Ottoman Porte, $18,000."

That is the appropriation made for the Commissioner to China. The Constitution, in my opinion, is directly against the appropriation being made at this time; and then another objection I have to it is, that it is inexpedient; but as it is in the face of the direct provision of the Constitution, I ask that the amendment may be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected, there being, on a division—yeas 17, nays 17.

Mr. MANGUM. I understand that last night the appropriation in the bill for the Census Bureau was stricken out, and that the Senate to-day have concurred in that. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact, that in the event no appropriation is made for the continuation of that service, the force must of necessity be disbanded, and the work cannot be accomplished. I move, therefore, to insert in the bill—

For clerk hire, stationery, rents, fuel, and contingencies, and the completion of the census of 1850, $49,000."

I alter the amount appropriated from $50,000 to $49,000. If gentlemen choose to disband the force, and discontinue the labor, they have to take the responsibility. I bring the question before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that, as the amendment changes the amount appropriated, it is in order; otherwise, it would not be.

Mr. BORLAND. I have a word to say on the subject. The appropriation was stricken out of the bill by a vote of the Senate last night. The Senator from North Carolina was not here. This morning, by another vote, the Senate concurred in striking out the appropriation. I undertook to show last night, and I think I did show—if, however, I did not show it then to the satisfaction of the Senate, I think I can do so now—that the appropriation ought not to be made. I based it upon the general statement, that, instead of there being no money in the Treasury appropriated to the census, there are $75,000 there. A note has been laid on the tables of Senators this morning, in which it is stated, that unless the appropriation is made the whole force will have to be disbanded. If there were time for the discussion of the matter, I could show, from papers in my possession, that that force ought to be disbanded; that more money has been wasted, squandered, than the Senate or the country would tolerate, if the facts were laid before them. There have been employed, at one time, I understand, nearly one hundred and ninety clerks. There are now employed from one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty clerks. The proposition, when it is stated, is monstrous in itself. Looking back to the Sixth Census, we find there were twenty persons employed, and $60,000 appropriated for compiling the returns. The whole cost of collecting the statistics, compiling them for publication, and printing and binding the whole document, and the abstract of the compendium, was $904,000. We have already paid $1,250,000 for this work; and paid for clerk hire, house-rent, and expensive furniture $208,000. They have now on hand $75,000 appropriated to this purpose, and not expended. Now, will any one pretend that $75,000 is not enough to go on with the compiling of the census returns until the next session, when, if a necessity exists for more, we can give it? I have a statement from the accounts in the Auditor's office here; and I find in them an item of expense which, I think, is very characteristic of the whole. The expenses of the individual sent to Europe to visit the World's Fair—paying the expenses of parties of gentlemen and ladies, from five to six, including their wine and other things added; and we are called upon to vote to pay the amount under the head of census expenses. We have an item of $1,430 for the expenses of the trip, with wine included in the list.

Mr. DAWSON. I would ask the Senator whether he has not observed that the receipt for the whole expenditure, and that the amount charged, are merely for the amount of the individual's expenditures—not for wine?

Mr. BORLAND. No, sir. I have an abstract of the amount which is in the hands of the printer; and I have one copy from the Fifth Auditor's office, in which the items are set forth; and in that the amount set forth as the expenses of the individual sent to Europe, corresponds with the amount here in those vouchers, and I say they contain the expenses of parties of individuals of five or six. In one instance, in Liverpool, there is a charge for £10, which includes a bill for the expenses of a young lady, and a wine bill. These are small matters, but they are characteristic of this whole proceeding. This individual was sent there without authority, and his expenses were paid for him, but the charges have been rejected at the Treasury.

The money has, however, been paid out of the contingent fund. Here are the vouchers. It amounts to between $1,400 and $1,500. It is a small amount, to be sure, but when we consider the extraordinary expenditure of $208,000 for clerk hire, $3,000 for house-rent, and about $3,000 for furniture, we shall come to the conclusion that it is time to look into it; especially as there is now an unexpended balance of appropriation of $75,000. With that amount they can afford to wait until the next meeting of Congress, in December. That is my view, and upon that I moved to strike out the appropriation. The Senate struck it out, and this morning concurred in it; and now the Senator from North Carolina avoids the question of order by reducing the amount $1,000. That may be strictly according to the rules of order, but I apprehend it is technical. But it remains for the Senate to say whether they will sustain it.

Mr. MANGUM. I mean not to enter into this debate at all. I do not desire to enter into disputes between individuals. I have simply to bring the naked fact before the Senate, which I have done, under the authority of a responsible person—that the forces of the Census Bureau must be discharged, unless an appropriation like this be made. Without knowing whether the fact is so or not, I do not undertake to vouch it. I bring it before the Senate upon responsible authority, and I desire the yeas and nays upon my amendment. If gentlemen think proper to refuse the appropriation let the responsibility rest upon them.

Mr. RUSK. I desire simply to state the reason that influenced me last night in voting to strike this amendment out, and which will influence my vote now—unless the objection be removed—against putting it in here. Senators will remember that in addition to the statistics which were collected by the Census Bureau, they have gone on, as many of us believe, beyond the law, to write histories of particular States. A history of one State was laid upon our tables. I have understood that notwithstanding there is a report upon the Secretary's table against the publication of these histories of States, that matter is still going on. I have heard so from a Senator who said he had his information from a gentleman who is engaged in writing the history of some State. Having this fact before me, unless I am satisfied it is not so, I cannot vote for the appropriation. It is accumulating a mass of unnecessary matter. I do not believe that the office have the means of accurately writing the history of a State. If they insist upon publishing these histories, they will be squandering a large amount of money in doing no good.

Mr. PRATT. I shall vote for this amendment. The Department, I understand, has recommended an appropriation much larger than that for the completion of the census. The Department is responsible to the public for the necessity of that expenditure. We have already expended, as the Senator from Arkansas says, more than a million of dollars in the preliminary steps by which this census is to be given to the public. A great deal of labor is yet necessary to perfect it, so that it may be sent to the people. Now, are we to stop this work, after the expenditure of more than a million of dollars, because the man who has charge of it is obnoxious to some Senators? Are we to go against the recommendation of the Department and stop this work, or run any risk of having stopped this important work, in which the people are certainly interested, upon which we have expended so much money, because this man happens to have offended my honorable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] or my honorable friend from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] or some other person? It seems to me, that if he be an improper man—I care nothing for him—the proper way would be to get rid of him. If he acts improperly, let us demand his dismissal; but do not let us stop the appropriation for the printing and completion of the census. I know nothing about this officer. I do not know that he is an improper one. I do not mean to charge him with acting improperly. But it is manifestly wrong that we should run the risk of having this work stopped for the want of an appropriation of $49,000. It was said last night that there were $75,000 remaining of the appropriation for the census. I know nothing of that. We have no means of ascertaining it. On the contrary, I this morning received from the gentleman at the head of the work a letter, in which he states, that if the appropriation is not passed, every single workman in the Department under his control, now preparing the census for publication, will have to be dismissed. I give that for what it is worth.

In reference to the question of the Senator from Texas, I know nothing; but I take it for granted that it cannot be so. This man is acting only as the agent of the Department, and I take it for granted that the Secretary of the Interior, under whose control this office is, would not suffer the public money to be squandered in the preparation of a history which the unanimous report of a committee of the Senate says ought not to be published. I do not believe, therefore, that these histories are being prepared. I know nothing, however, about the matter. But if the person at the head of the Census is an improper person, let us ask that he be dismissed. But do not let us injure the public service for the want of an appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state in relation to this matter, that the estimate of the Department was for $150,000; the House reduced it to $50,000, and the Committee on Finance left it where the House put it. In relation to the balance on hand, it appears by the papers which accompanied the bill from the House, that there were $71,000 on hand.

Mr. PEARCE. It is due to the Superintendent of the Census, that I should make an explanation of a matter in regard to which the Senator from Arkansas has manifestly fallen into an error, which error may extend throughout other members of the Senate, if this explanation be not given. The paper which the Senator has, is a list of vouchers. It does not pretend to be the account of the party admitted by the accounting officers. I understand the facts, in regard to those vouchers, to be these: The expenses of the Superintendent while on the tour were about $1,400. When he returned, he was not only called upon for his account, but for the vouchers. He was traveling in Europe with several ladies under his charge. When he was about to leave a hotel, and went to pay the bill, of course he paid the bill for the whole party. He did not take separate vouchers. It would not have been possible for him to have taken separate vouchers for his own expenditures. He took receipts from them for the expenses of the whole party; and now he does not ask that the whole bill should be paid to him. But when he is called upon to render up his vouchers, he says: Here are all the receipts I have received; you will perceive they include the expenses of the whole party; I cannot separate them; if you insist upon having them, you must take them as they are; but you will not allow them all; you will allow only those which are properly chargeable to me. That this is the case, is manifest, because in a party of six persons traveling in Europe for several months, the whole bill would not be as small as $1,400. Do you believe that a party of six persons traveling in Europe for several months, could do so at that expense? That would be less than $240 each.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not state that such was the fact. I stated that there were accounts for the entertainment of himself and his party of five or six persons at different places—not that they were all the while with him. For instance, at Liverpool there is a charge, in a single instance, of £10, or $50. In some places there are charges for six persons; in others, for five; and in one place there is a bill for the expense of a young lady who was under his charge. The account of the Superintendent is now in the hands of the printer of the Senate, and it is certified to by himself, the amount being $1,439. The basis of that account, furnishing the items, is the vouchers in the Fifth Auditor's office. I have an abstract of them, and they amount to thirteen hundred and some odd dollars—not as much as the account is. He expended more money than his vouchers show.

The vouchers were given in to sustain his account. So far from the vouchers showing more than what he got and expended, they fall short of the account stated by himself. It is stated there, in the note, that there are some vouchers, the precise amount of which is not known.

Mr. PEARCE. I have no doubt of it. But what is the explanation? A man who is traveling in Europe does not get a receipt for everything. When he pays his passage on a railroad, for instance, he charges that himself; and it is not customary even to take receipts at hotels. This gentleman appears occasionally to have taken receipts, and when he did so, he took them for the whole party. But when he is called upon by our very particular Comptroller for every voucher, he is obliged to give in the identical papers. He gives in the papers, which give the whole bill—so much for the party; but he never did ask, he never intended to ask, that the account should be allowed for the money expended for the whole party. When called upon, he had to exhibit every voucher, although it was not his intention, at the same time, to charge for the expenses of the individuals who were along with him; and that this is the case is manifest, because his whole claim is but $1,400; whereas, a gentleman could not travel with a party of half a dozen ladies without paying half a dozen times that amount. I think that is a sufficient explanation. The paper which the Senator had is not an official statement of his account, but is a list of the vouchers, made out by some person who happens to be one of the accounting officers. It is a mere statement of the different vouchers—what the amount of them is—but it is not stated how much is charged as due to him for his expenditures.

Mr. BORLAND. As the Senator says this is not an official paper, I will state how I got it. The First Comptroller addressed me a letter, containing one from the Secretary of the Interior, requesting me, as the mover of the resolution of inquiry on this subject, to call upon him to inform him if a statement of the account of the returns and vouchers would not be sufficient to answer the purpose of the resolution, without the vouchers themselves, as they were in foreign languages; and, in order to enable me to answer the question, whether I thought the statement of the account would answer in place of the vouchers themselves, he sent me an abstract from the Fifth Auditor's Office, to show what the vouchers were, and their amounts. It was upon that that I based the second resolution which I introduced, authorizing the Secretary to send the account instead of the vouchers. Was not this an official paper? It came with the letter of the Secretary of the Interior asking this intelligence, because it would be troublesome to give the vouchers. It is a statement of the account, and corresponds, as far as it goes, with the statement of the Superintendent Clerk, although his account contains $100 more than the vouchers. So all the vouchers are included in what is paid, and a balance is left unaccounted for of $100. Therefore, instead of being able to strike out any of the vouchers, the account overgoes the vouchers $100.

If the Senator from Maryland wishes to resume his remarks, I have done; but if he has concluded, I will reply to a remark made by his colleague, [Mr. PRATT.]

As to the question, whether this business should go on or not, I can answer it with great confidence. The statement of a single fact will show, conclusively, that this compilation of statistics of every kind, including the histories and all, is now going on. If that were not the case, I would ask why are one hundred and forty clerks employed? What can they be doing? The Census of 1840 required but twenty, at an expense of $66,000. Here, we have had nearly two hundred at one time, and now there are one hundred and forty. They have already been paid $208,000; and, as the chairman of the Committee on Finance says, when an estimate was sent into Congress, at this session, for $150,000 more, it was stated that there was a balance of $71,000 on hand. I have learned from the Treasury Department that there are about $75,000 on hand. I ask if these voluminous statistics, histories and all, are not included in what is going on with these one hundred and forty clerks? What can they want with more than $70,000 until the next meeting of Congress? The fact that the amount is asked for, is an answer, I think, conclusive to the question of the Senator from Maryland, that this work is going on, notwithstanding the unanimous report of the committee adverse to it.

Mr. PRATT. My statement was that the Superintendent is not to blame, if the histories are going on. They can only be going on under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. If the $70,000 is not necessary for the purpose of completing the work, then the $150,000 required by the Department was not necessary; and the blame, if any exists, should be laid upon the Department, and not upon this poor man, who is brought up here always as the groundwork of difficulty. The Government is wrong—the Department is wrong—if the thing itself is wrong; and if we have not confidence in the Department, we ought not to give an appropriation; but if we believe the Department was right in asking for the appropriation of $150,000, we ought to grant $49,000 to prevent the stopping of the work.

Mr. BUTLER. To some extent, I agree with the remarks of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] I do not think Mr. Kennedy should suffer entirely; but I do say, from the exhibition of the subject which has been given here, that this whole system of taking the census is tending to an enormous abuse. I recollect, when the subject was first under discussion, that I protested against this enlarging of the sphere of the office, so as to take in statistical information. The Constitution only requires that an enumeration of the white and black population shall be taken, so as to enable us to regulate what shall be the representation in the House of Representatives. Instead of that, we have seen a gentleman sent to Europe to learn how to take that enumeration. Why this gentleman should have been sent to Europe to learn how to perform any of the functions incident to his office, I do not know. The abuse is so enormous—so much in violation of the Constitution, both in its letter and spirit, that I would not care if the whole of it should fail. The only way to correct the wrong practices of the Government, is to let them fail when they violate the Constitution. I do not care one cent whether an appropriation is made to enable the Department to carry on this system. I believe it is all wrong.

Mr. MANGUM. If the Constitution has been violated it has been under the direction of Congress. Whether the honorable Senator concurred in that or not, I know not. I agree with him that the census ought to be restricted to an enumeration of the population, white and black; and I think that statistics of other kinds, if they are taken wisely, in a reliable manner, ought to be under the State authority. But I mean not to go into this matter. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate at this late period of the session. I simply desire to bring before the Senate the fact that the business must stop, and the force must be disbanded, unless the appropriation be made. I do this under the authority of the Chief of the Census Bureau, on his proper responsibility. He says that there is not a dollar that has not been used for this purpose except the appropriation made two years ago; and that there will not be a cent on hand to continue the work unless an appropriation is now made. For that reason I have moved to insert the appropriation of $49,000; and upon that question I desire the yeas and nays. I have no more interest in that subject than any other Senator.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORLAND. I have but a word to say. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] seems to have proceeded on the assumption that the proposition to strike out the appropriation was aimed at the Census Clerk. Sir, I aimed not at him. I say that there has been an abuse here. My opinion is that it is a very gross abuse, as I am able to prove at any moment. But I do not charge it upon him. I charge it upon the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. The Senator from Arkansas has spoken twice on this amendment.

The PRESIDENT. He has spoken more than twice.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senator had waited one moment I would have been through. However, I will relieve him, and will make no further remarks.

Mr. BRIGHT. During the period of seven years that I have been in this Senate I have never felt at liberty to make an appeal to this body, and what I am going to say now may be in bad taste, but it is a fact settled, that unless we cease talking and act we cannot finish the business of Congress at the time which we have appointed to adjourn. This is the first general appropriation bill making appropriations for carrying forward the entire machinery of the Government that we have had before us, and it is not half finished. You may add amendment after amendment here, but there is no probability that they will be considered by the House. I have six amendments before me, four of them recommended by standing committees of this body, and I would like to have offered them last night, but the position I occupied, being in the chair, precluded me from so doing; and such is my sense of public duty, I will not offer them this morning. I will run the chance of putting them in some other bill. I do hope that Senators will vote and let us get this bill to the House, so that we may take up the other appropriation bills.

Mr. BUTLER. I have only to say, that I will not vote unless I understand the subject. I said, when the river and harbor bill was taken up, that it would have the effect of compelling us to vote without knowledge; and I say, I intend to have discussion when it is necessary. I must have the knowledge necessary to control my vote on measures of this kind. I cannot vote in ignorance. When the river and harbor bill was taken up I saw what would be the result. That important political measure was taken up to the exclusion of the bills making appropriations of millions, and now upon them we are called to vote without knowledge. If it has come to that, I will sooner abandon the bills, and have no responsibility for them.

Mr. MASON. I was about to say very much what has fallen from the Senator from South Carolina. I have no idea, let it cost what it may, of being trammelled in proper debate upon an appropriation bill. I object to nothing which has fallen from the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT.] He has discharged what he considers his duty. He is a member of the Finance Committee; and he deems it his duty, as such, to get this measure through the Senate, so that we may take up other bills of a like character before the session closes. But I want to state this fact: that the very language which is held out to us now, was held out to him and other gentlemen when they insisted upon taking up the river and harbor bill, to urge it through in preference to these and other important measures. We told them what result we expected would follow—that we would be told, "You must not debate; debate must be cut off, or you will not get through the bill before the close of the session." I recollect that gentlemen were admonished when they insisted on giving precedence to the river and harbor bill, that the very state of things would arise that is now presented to us. I have taken as little time in debate as any gentleman. I never consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I think I may say so of myself. But if there be any measure offered as an amendment to this bill, which requires debate in order to explain its character, I will encourage that debate.

Mr. CASS. Knowledge come with talking, but for myself, I must say that there are some questions which I think I am competent to decide without talking; still, if any gentleman thinks I am not, he is perfectly at liberty to indulge himself in explaining the measure. I do not understand what the Senators from South Carolina and Virginia mean about the river and harbor bill. I would ask those Senators if I had not a right to vote to take up that bill in preference to others?

Mr. MASON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CASS. If they made predictions and now choose to fulfill them, is that a reason why we should alter our course? The gentlemen could as well have talked upon the river and harbor bill as upon this. Who prohibited them from talking until the end of the session? Nobody. Nobody could prohibit them. I repeat, the fact that that bill was taken up affords no reason now why we should have an interminable talking upon this bill. If that bill had not been taken up, every man might have talked on other measures from that day to this. Such is the mode in which discussion is carried on here. And for one, I say that whenever I think a bill is of such public interest as to be required to be taken up, I shall vote for taking it up.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not say that the gentleman had not a right to vote to take up the river and harbor bill, but I referred to the impropriety of taking it up at the time we did, when we were certain that this bill, which takes millions out of the Treasury, would come up at the very close of the session. Yes, sir; the gentleman does not want any talk when we come to appropriate money. It amounts to that. When we come to an appropriation bill, he wants votes, and no talking.

Mr. CASS. I put it to the Senator as a candid gentleman, whether I said so.

Mr. BUTLER. I say that is the inference. Talk upon political questions that might well have waited three months; but upon these appropriation bills vote, and do not talk. The river and harbor bill has been under discussion for fifty years past; was it important to take it up at this session? And then there was another measure introduced upon this bill which gave rise to the speech made by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] upon slavery. Sir, that Senator ought to have been answered. I have thus far foreborne to take part in these debates, and I will leave it for the Senator to say who has done the most talking so far as the different sections or interests of this country are concerned. If you are to balance accounts, I can say that the talking has taken place upon political questions; and now, when we are to vote, we are not allowed to investigate the matters upon which we are to vote. Sir, I say that topics have been brought up here, at the late part of this session, which ought to have been discussed by the month. The river and harbor bill was not discussed as it should have been discussed. The slavery question was not discussed as it ought to have been; and the oration of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has gone out to give a current to public opinion. It ought to have been answered. I yielded to the suggestion of friends not to answer it. But if gentlemen wait until the last days of the session, and then endeavor to suppress debate upon an important bill of this sort, they must take the consequences.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the Senators that the question is upon a solitary amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that, unless this appropriation is made, the publication of the census will necessarily be suspended. I have this to say, that, unless the census has been taken with much more accuracy in other States than in California, it is far better that its publication should be suspended. The census, I believe, shows a population in the State of California of 91,000. That is directly in the face of a census which had been taken by the State authority, showing a population of 300,000. In consequence of this error of the census agents, the State of California was deprived of at least one Representative, and came very near losing two. But this cannot be remedied. A census cannot be taken again until 1860, when the population of California will certainly exceed 800,000. We are deprived, therefore, of a representation in the other branch of Congress, to which we would have been entitled if the census had been correctly taken. Besides, I have but very little confidence in the statistical information obtained by the census agents. An examination of it in regard to some particular localities, has satisfied me that no sort of reliance can be placed upon it. If, therefore, the vote which I shall give to-day is calculated to suspend the publication of that census, I shall not regret it.

Mr. DAWSON. I have not made a motion in regard to, or said a word upon, the civil and diplomatic bill, notwithstanding the immense number of appropriations that have been presented, and the many discussions that have taken place. I desired for one to consider the position in which the body was placed, and to go quietly on and consummate every measure. But I am not going to sit here quietly and suffer the head of the Administration or the head of a Department to be charged with a failure to discharge his duty, or with an abuse of the power placed in his hands for the benefit of the Government, without saying a word. Can any Senator suppose that a personal and political friend of the head of the Department of the Interior will submit to that course? If gen-men desire debate in defense of public officers to cease, let them avoid the interposition of questions of this character. Has there not been an attack upon the Secretary of the Interior, which is to go through the country, and be injurious to his character as an officer and as a man? And yet we are called upon by the other side to close our mouths, because the hour is late. Gentlemen, cease to make it necessary for the friends of this Administration to say a word, and you will not hear from them. I did not intend to enter into this discussion. I intend now to pursue the even tenor of my course in endeavoring to perfect this bill, which is necessary to carry on the Government; but I will take occasion to say that the charge against the Secretary of the Interior has been sustained by not one single argument or fact, and further, that he has honestly, fairly, and honorably discharged his duties in regard to the matter under discussion. There has been no abuse of the power placed in his hands. If there has been, it should be inquired into; a committee should investigate it; and if it exists, the charge should be understandingly made.

It has been charged here even that the Secretary of the Interior sent the head of the Census Bureau to England; that that individual had charged the expenses of those who accompanied him to the Government; and that the Government had paid them. What charge more inconsistent? What charge could be made more calculated to make an unfavorable impression upon the public mind than this? And what was it made for? Was it made to attack an individual, or to attack those who are politically responsible for this? What does it amount to when I call the attention of Senators to the fact, that when the vouchers for the expenditures incurred by that individual were presented, it was done with the understanding that they in the aggregate contained his own expenses, and those who were with him; and that his own expenditures only were charged to the Government? But because an account of the vouchers had to come here, the charge is made that the whole of these expenditures were charged to the Government. In order to show that such was not the fact, when I heard this charge made, I saw the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject. He said that the Senate had called for the vouchers. A list of the vouchers was sent; but the amount paid by the Government was not a single cent more than the actual expenses of the individual; and yet, from the course of remark which has been pursued here, the presumption in the public mind would be, that the Government had paid the expenses of the whole party. I went to see if it were possible that Elisha Whittelsey and others could have suffered such a thing to pass. The papers upon their face would make it appear to be so; but when you come to look at it, you find that it is not so. So much for that. I shall not go into a discussion about it.

The proposition before us now is whether we shall to-day suspend the execution of the order of Congress in relation to the census—whether, after the expenditure of more than a $1,000,000, in paying your marshals, and your officers, to procure the information which you yourselves have ordered, you will now interrupt the work. The Senate will recollect that not one single dollar has been appropriated to carry out this census, save the first appropriation which was made in the census bill itself. It is said, and no doubt with a perfect belief of the fact, so far as information could be derived by the Senator from Arkansas, that there is a balance not yet expended. This objection can be easily met. Do you not recollect that, at the end of every quarter, this money is to be drawn upon to pay the various persons employed in the Census Bureau? And when we are told, and told directly, that there will not be a dollar to carry on this work, unless we make an appropriation, how are we met by our friends on the other side? We are told by some gentlemen that if this census be so and so, it ought to be arrested. We are told by others that the head of the Bureau is going on with the preparation of statistics, as he was ordered to do; and others say, if they thought he was doing so and so, they would vote to stop the appropriation. It is true a report has been made by a committee of the Senate adverse to the publication of certain parts of the census returns. But can the Government, which is acting under a law requiring it to do certain things, be arrested by a resolution which this Senate has never agreed to? If the resolution expresses the sense of the Senate, why not concur in it, and make it mandatory upon the Government? Is the Government to suspend its operations in respect to this matter, because a committee has reported that their plan should not be carried out, when the Senate has not concurred in that report? Gentlemen ought to look to these things.

No suspension has taken place in the preparation of this census, and no suspension will take place under such a state of things. The question now propounded to the Senate is this: Will you reject the amendment of $49,000, and thereby dissolve your Census Bureau, and turn loose all the men who have been employed, under the law, to prepare the returns for publication? There is the question. What do we ask? Only the amount of $49,000, out of the $150,000 that were called for. And why did the House of Representatives cut down the estimate? That estimate went upon the ground that the amount of $150,000 would be necessary to consummate the whole arrangement. Finding that there was some balance on hand, and that we were again to meet in three months, the House of Representatives justly cut short the appropriation. They knew that another appropriation can be made when we meet again to carry on the work if necessary. But now we are called upon by Senators on the other side to deny that small sum, and turn loose the one hundred and forty clerks now employed on the work. I trust it will not be done.

Mr. BUTLER. That I may not be misunderstood, I desire to explain a remark that I made when I was on the floor last. When I said that the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts had not been answered, I was far from meaning that what fell from other Senators in reply to it was not an answer. I must say here, what I have said in private, that the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] and the independent Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT,] were worthy of all praise. I have praised them in private, and that is enough for me to say. What I meant by my remark was, that the subject had not received the discussion which it merited.

The question on the amendment was taken, by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 33, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Brooke, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Clouens, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, James, King, Mallory, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, De Sausure, Douglas, Felch, Hamlin, Houston, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend the bill, by inserting at the end of the clause making the appropriation for the compensation of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury Department, the following:

And that the Second Comptroller of the Treasury Department shall be allowed a salary equal to that of the head of any other bureau, to commence from his appointment to office.

Mr. President, I will merely state, that last evening we agreed to an amendment giving to the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department an increase of his salary. The amendment was in the same terms as this is. I desire now to provide for the Second Comptroller.

Mr. GWIN. I think if the Second Auditor deserved an increase of his salary, the Second Comptroller is equally entitled to it. His labor is great, and he ought to have an increase of compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPHAM. I move to amend the following clause in the bill:

"For salary of the Minister Resident to Turkey, $6,000," by striking out "six," and inserting "nine." I hope there will be no objection to this. The salary of the Commissioner to China has been raised to $9,000; and we have given him an outfit. There is no outfit in this case.

The PRESIDENT. Is that a report from a committee?

Mr. UPHAM. I propose it with the consent and approbation of the Committee on Finance. They authorized me to propose it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that it is not in order.

Mr. WELLER. I object to it. There is no sort of necessity for increasing the compensation of the Resident Minister to Turkey. The office was originally a consulate. I believe the person who is now the Minister Resident is traveling through the Holy Land obtaining materials for writing a book. I have no doubt it will be a very valuable one, for he is a very learned gentleman; but I do not think this increase should be made.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to make a suggestion on the point of order. When the House sends us a bill making an appropriation for any purpose, there is nothing in the rule to prevent us from moving an amendment to the amount. Surely we have power to move to increase or diminish an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair, upon looking at the amendment again, decides that it is in order. It is merely to change the amount. As it was first read, he supposed it was a new appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to, there being, on a division—yeas 21, nays 14.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For the purchase—for the use of the Senate—of five hundred copies of the Digest and Index of the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, to be bound in the same manner as said Opinions, $875.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. When in Committee of the Whole, the following amendment of the Committee on Finance was disagreed to, under a misapprehension of the facts:

"For compensation of four draw keepers, and for fuel and oil for the lamps of the Potomac bridge, $2,755."

I will state that the same necessity now exists for draw-keepers and lights that did before a part of the bridge was carried away. The two channels are navigated now as formerly. The same necessity, therefore, exists for the lights. I therefore propose to amend the bill by inserting that provision which was rejected by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to move an amendment, to do justice to three or four individuals. In the clause making appropriation for compensation to temporary clerks in the office of the Third Auditor is the following proviso:

"Provided, That no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $1,000 per annum, except one whose salary shall be $1,600 per annum; and four whose compensation shall be $4 a day."

Four dollars a day makes $1,240 per annum. I propose to strike out the words "whose compensation shall be $4 a day," and insert, "who shall receive 1,200 per annum." The reason for this is, that if they are allowed over $1,200 a year, they will not obtain the increase of salary which is allowed by the bill to clerks whose salary is under $1,200. That will do great injustice to these four clerks. I propose, therefore, to strike forty dollars from their salaries in this case, so that they may be entitled to the increase. I move, therefore, to strike out "whose compensation shall be four dollars a day," and insert "who shall each receive $1,200 per annum."

Mr. BRIGHT. The effect of that will be to make regular clerks out of four persons who are employees—temporary clerks—in the office—persons I suppose who have forced themselves into the Treasury Department. I shall vote against the amendment. I shall not waste time in giving my reasons, but I do not believe that that or any other amendment would be granted by the House.

Mr. DAWSON. The persons who make this request are clerks in the Third Auditor's Department. The object is not to make them permanent clerks but to give them a salary of $1,200 a year, so that they may come within the increase provided for in this bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORTON. I have an amendment which I desire to offer. Its object is to place the salary of the Third Auditor of the Treasury upon an equality with that of the Second Auditor. He is in my estimation, a most laborious and efficient officer. His labors are as great, if not greater, than those of any other Auditor. We have already raised the salary of the Second Auditor, but not of the Third. I move, therefore, to insert in the bill at the end of the appropriation for the compensation of the Third Auditor, &c., the following:

And that the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department shall be allowed a salary equal to that of the head of any other bureau, to commence from his appointment to office.

Mr. CASS. I submit to the Senator whether this is the time to enter into the consideration of the salaries of officers. If we begin, where are we to stop? Certainly it must be obvious that we have not time now to enter into the subject upon this appropriation bill. I know nothing of this case. I do not know whether it is right or wrong; but, in this stage of the session it is impossible to go into the consideration of such questions. If we begin with one, the whole will be pushed at us.

Mr. MORTON. The objection of the Senator from Michigan, perhaps would have been a good one, if it had been urged when the proposition was made to increase the salaries of the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller, but I think it is too late now to urge that objection upon this bill, when amendments have been adopted increasing the salaries of those two officers. I think when this has been done, it would be invidious to make a discrimination against the Third Auditor. I am unwilling to sit silently in my seat and see such a distinction made. From my intercourse with the heads of bureaus I do not think we have a more laborious head of a bureau, or one who more richly deserves an additional compensation than the Third Auditor. I would not have urged the amendment at this time had not the example been set of increasing the salary of the other bureau officers.

Mr. CASS. I would have voted against the other propositions, if I had heard of them; but if we have done wrong once it is no reason why we should do so again.

Mr. HUNTER. It will be utterly impossible to proceed with this business of equalizing salaries. I voted against the other propositions, and should have had something to say upon them, but that I felt confident that the House would strike them out. I am free to agree with my friend from Florida, that the Third Auditor's salary should be raised as much as any of the others; but this is not the time to accomplish the object. We have no time to consider such questions. I hope the bill will be put upon its engrossment.

Mr. RUSK. A remark which has been made renders it necessary that I should say a few words. It has been said that it was unjust to raise the salary of the Second Auditor. I do not think it was unjust. I will vote for an amendment to raise the salary of any officer who presents what I stated was shown by the records of the office to be the fact.

Mr. MORTON. Did the Senator understand me to say it was unjust?

Mr. RUSK. I heard the remark made. I do not know by whom.

Mr. MORTON. I did not say it was unjust to raise the salary of the Second Auditor; but I said that if it was just to raise it, it was equally just to raise that of the Third Auditor.

Mr. RUSK. I stated, what was shown to be the fact, that the Second Auditor had done his business properly, and reduced the number of his clerks. He had forty-four clerks in 1849, and has but twenty-five now. The appropriation for the clerks in his office in 1849 was $51,000, while in this bill it is but $34,000. I stated that I did not believe there was any other head of a bureau who could show such a reduction. I do not mean to disparage the heads of other bureaus; I have no objection to raising their salaries; but I stated last evening that, in my opinion, there had been a reduction of the expenses in no other bureau.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have an amendment, which I presume will meet with no objection, as it appropriates no money. It is to insert the following in the bill:

The corporate authorities of Washington are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to provide that in any street, or avenue, or foot-way thereof, the carriage part in the center may be not less than forty feet, the side walks on each side of the carriage way may be fifteen feet, and the residue of the ground, between the side walks and the building line, may be inclosed by the owners of the adjoining property as ornamental courts or gardens, and for no other purpose whatever.

Some of the avenues in this city are one hundred and sixty feet wide, and it costs a vast amount of money to grade the whole width. The public authorities are of the opinion that by making the carriage way narrower, and the side walks as I propose, and then letting the balance be inclosed as ornamental gardens, it would save one half the expense of grading the streets, and at the same time improve the appearance of the city. The plan received the approval of the late Mr. Downing. I only propose to give the corporation the authority to do this if they think proper. They have not the authority under the present charter.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not examined the plan of my colleague. I have carefully avoided interfering with this subject, because I confess it will be better managed by the corporation than by us. I am apprehensive that the effect of the amendment will be to make a radical change in the streets and avenues of the city.

Mr. BADGER. It is too large a discretion to be granted at this late hour of the session.

Mr. SHIELDS. We cannot act on it with propriety now.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to insert in the bill after the clause, "For the erection of the west wing of the Patent Office Building, and completing the drains for the said building and the Patent Office Building, $150,000," the following:

Provided, That the work and the materials furnished by contract for such building, and likewise the materials for the extension of the Capitol, be measured agreeably to the original contract, and that no further payment be made until the measurement is made and reported, the contracts and the proposals to be put in the hands of the measurer or measurers, and he or they to be sworn before entering on duty, to examine and measure and report every part of the work and material without deviation from the contracts and proposals; and if it be shown that any extra materials are used, they to be rated at the pro rata price for materials only, and entered in a separate column of the account; and the same rule of measurement to be applied to all other buildings and other public works in this District; and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Treasury to arrest and stop any voucher not made in form and in accordance with the terms of the contract against which it is drawn; and it is hereby made a penal offense for every measurer and inspector of work or disbursing officer to make or present, or pass or attempt to pass, any falsely made or fictitious vouchers to draw money from the Treasury, on any contract or account whatever; and that all contracts shall hereafter be advertised at least sixty days before letting; and that all contracts now existing in relation to building the additions to the Capitolas as well as the Patent Office, not made according to law, are hereby canceled at the end of sixty days, and notice of the same shall be given in all the newspapers in the city of Washington; and that all contracts of every description which have been made without public notice having been given, where notice was required, shall be canceled after sixty days' notice having been given in the newspapers of this city: Provided also, That good and sufficient security shall be given for twice the amount of money at any time to be advanced to the contractor under any contract, and that bids shall be opened in presence of the bidders, if they or any of them should be present, and that notice to that effect shall be given in the advertisements for proposals, to be published agreeably to this proviso; and all contracts made without an appropriation of money for an object, the subject of a contract, are hereby canceled and declared void.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object to the consideration of that amendment in connection with this bill. It certainly comes within the rule. It relates to contracts disconnected from the appropriation. It is clearly not in order.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair does not see any question of order arising in the case. It involves no appropriation. It is simply making a provision with regard to contracts. The Chair is obliged to receive it.

Mr. HOUSTON. It has direct reference to the clause in the bill relating to the erection of public buildings, and is intended as a guard for the protection of the Government, and for no other purpose.

Mr. CLARKE asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. PRATT. I object to voting on that amendment, because I cannot tell whether it is right or wrong. It covers a whole sheet of paper, and proposes to regulate contracts that have been entered into, and declares certain contracts null and void. The only reason why I shall vote against it is, that it is impossible, from hearing it once read, for me to tell whether it is right or wrong. I cannot consent to vote for an amendment which I do not understand.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will attend to the reading of the amendment, it can be read again for his information. I am perfectly satisfied, when he understands it, that he will say it is for no other purpose than to guard the interests of the Government. If irregularities have been practiced, it is intended as a corrective to them. It is for no other purpose; and every one who considers it, must be satisfied that it is a proper amendment. I have submitted it to a number of gentlemen, and they think it is manifestly right to guard the Treasury of the country.

Mr. HALE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who introduced this amendment to the language of it. It strikes me that it is too sweeping, because it declares all contracts void which were entered into without certain requisites, whether they are executed contracts, or contracts executed in part, or entirely executory. What could be the effect of an act of Congress declaring an executed contract, or a contract executed in part, void? The terms of the amendment are entirely too sweeping. It applies to all contracts that have not certain regulations, whether they are executed, executed in part, or entirely executory. It seems to me it is too sweeping, and must lead to the danger of doing injustice. I shall vote against it.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the contracts have been executed, or executed in part, and payments have been made equivalent to the service rendered, the holders of them have an opportunity of entering into new contracts, as other people are able; so that I can perceive no difficulty in that. If they are made without an appropriation, or contrary to law, they are declared void. And, if made in conformity with law, or an appropriation, it requires notice to be given. I can see no objection to it.

The question was taken, by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 31, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Clarke, Clemens, Davis, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Feich, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Mason, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Chase, Cooper, Dawson, Downs, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Mangum, Miller, Pratt, Smith, Spruance, and Sumner—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following, after the appropriations for the Judiciary:

To refund to the county of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, the expenses of the United States district courts, which were paid by said county prior to the 1st day of January, 1844, the sum of $11,970 90: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to examine the claim presented by the county of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa; and if upon examination he is satisfied that, prior to the 1st day of January, 1844, the said county has paid money, which, in accordance with the instructions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, dated December 19, 1843, should have been paid by the marshal of the United States, he is directed to audit and control the same, and said amount is directed to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This was reported favorably upon by the Committee on the Judiciary at this session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to submit the following amendment, upon which I will make no speech, but merely ask the yeas and nays upon it: And that there be paid to the mechanics and laborers employed in Government works in the District of Columbia, twenty per cent. on the per diem they are now receiving.

Mr. HUNTER. A similar amendment has been ruled out of order by the decision of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. It has. This cannot be received.

No further amendment being proposed, the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time. It was read a third time and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes, to report back the same with amendments. I ask that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. HUNTER. I must object to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. This is a bill from the House, and it is not in the power of a single objection to prevent it being taken up now. It is in the power of a majority of the Senate to decide to take it up.

I move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking it up.

Mr. MANGUM. I shall vote against the motion, upon the ground that an Executive session is indispensably necessary to the public service.

Mr. HAMLIN's motion was not agreed to, by a vote on a division—ayes 20, noes 25.

PUBLIC PRINTER.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, the Senate proceeded to the election of a printer to the Senate.

The votes having been counted, the President announced the result. The whole number of votes cast was 45—necessary to a choice, 23.

Robert Armstrong received.....	35
G. Bailey.....	4
Gales & Seaton.....	3
John C. Rives.....	1
Blank.....	2

Robert Armstrong having received a majority of the whole number of votes, was declared elected public printer.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That an additional member be appointed by the President pro tem. on the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. FISH was appointed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the general consent of the Senate to take up the Indian appropriation bill, that we may act on the amendments returned from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to their amendment striking out lines seven and eight in page 10; that they disagree to the amendment striking from the amendment of the Senate lines ten and twelve, in page 10; that they disagree to the amendment striking from the amendment of the Senate, page 10, lines twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, and twenty-six; that they agree to the residue of the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate; and that the Senate recede from their fourth amendment disagreed to by the House. I ask that the question may be taken on the amendments altogether. The amendments on which we disagree relate to some items in the appropriations for California. In relation to these amendments, the Committee on Finance recommend the Senate to disagree to the House amendments.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to know from the chairman of the Committee on Finance what the House did with the proviso which I offered to the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. They substituted another in nearly the same words.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to have the substitute read.

It was read, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriation herein made, or that may hereafter be made for the benefit of any Indian or tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such Indian or tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, but shall in every case be paid directly to the Indian or Indians themselves to whom it may be due, or to the tribes or parts of tribes, per capita, unless some imperious necessity shall arise to require the payment to be made under the direction of the President of the United States; nor shall the executive branch of the Government now or hereafter recognize any contract made between any Indian or tribe of Indians, or part of a tribe, with any attorney for the prosecution of any claim against the Government under this act."

Mr. WALKER. The proviso has been somewhat modified, and it seems to me that the design of it is to give $25,000 to the agent concerned in the claim of the Menomonee Indians. I will not, however, raise a question on the subject. The principle I have been contending for has been established, and I will take the proviso with that modification.

The report of the committee was then agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move that a committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. GWIN, Mr. PEARCE, and Mr. BELL were appointed as the committee on behalf of the Senate.

PROTECTION TO LIFE ON STEAMBOATS.

Mr. DAVIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back to the Senate a bill entitled "An act for the better preservation of the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam;" and I am instructed by that committee to recommend to the Senate to agree to the numerous amendments made by the House of Representatives. Although the committee do not think that the bill has been improved by these amendments, in many respects, yet, at this late stage of the session, they think it better to concur in them. I hope the bill will now be taken up, and I will follow that action on the part of the Senate by moving a vote of concurrence in all the amendments without reading them.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senate will adopt the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts. The amendments are very numerous, and their reading would cause a great delay.

Mr. HUNTER. All I have to say is, that I cannot vote to take up anything until the appropriation bills are disposed of.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. TOUCEY. I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the bill as amended requires that the best life-boats which can be procured shall be made use of; and also, whether it renders necessary the adoption of the best life-preservers?

Mr. DAVIS. The bill, as amended, requires that metallic life-boats shall be used; but I do not know that the word "best" is used.

Mr. PRATT. There are somewhat more than one hundred and fifty amendments reported by the House of Representatives to that bill, and we are now asked, as I understand, for a vote of concurrence in them without even hearing them read. I hold in my hand a representation from the steamboat interests of the State of Maryland, in direct opposition to this bill; and I believe that feeling is shared by the same interest along the whole of the Atlantic sea-board. They state, that if the bill should pass, it will break up the steamers they have now running; that the bill is unnecessarily severe, so far as they are concerned; and that it would be completely ruinous to their interests. As I represent those interests on this floor, I cannot permit this motion to pass without making a solemn protest against it. The Senator who has made it asks this body, and asks me, to vote in favor of the adoption of these amendments, one hundred and fifty in number at least, in despite of the remonstrance presented to me by the whole of the steamboat interests of my State, without even knowing what the effect of one of those amendments may be. I cannot do it, sir; and I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has it in his power to cause the question to be taken on the amendments separately.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PRATT. I am desirous that the bill should not pass, and therefore there is no use in making the appeal, because it will only be made to induce me to agree to these amendments to facilitate the passage of the bill. I cannot concur in such a step, for the reason that I have stated—that the whole of the steamboat interests are opposed to the measure. In addition to what I have already said, I beg now to mention to the Senate that I have in my possession a resolution suggested by the steamboat owners, which I will submit for consideration. Their objection is not so much to the amendments as to the bill. To that they object in toto. They do not object to the amendments specifically. The object and the scope of those amendments are unknown to them. Possibly they are still more objectionable than the bill itself.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Why do they object to the amendments, if they do not understand them?

Mr. PRATT. I will now offer, as a substitute for the report of the committee, the resolution to which I have alluded. Its effect is to convey an instruction to the Committee on Commerce to sit during the recess, and inquire into this question thoroughly, so far as regards steamboat navigation in other sections of the country than the western waters, and that the committee do report such a bill at the next session of Congress as may afford adequate protection to travelers, without destroying the steamboat interests on the Atlantic sea-board.

The PRESIDENT. Is it offered as a substitute for the bill?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir. Allow me to say, that during the last forty years, not a single accident has occurred on the Chesapeake Bay, which would render the passage of such a bill as that at present under consideration necessary. It is inexpedient, then, to pass this bill; but if it can be made to apply solely to that section of country where legislation is imperatively demanded, I have no objection to its passage, together with all the amendments just as they came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman must confine himself to the consideration of those amendments. The subject-matter of the bill is not now before the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. I believe this bill to be very defective. I believe with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT,] that it will cause serious injury to the steamboat interests in his State, and in mine also. I have been notified that it will cause serious embarrassment to the steamboat owners in my State; but I think we should have some security for life, such as this bill proposes. As it does not go into operation before next March, and as Congress will be in session some months before that time, we can then amend it, if, on mature consideration, amendment appears to be advisable. In the mean time, I am most anxious that this bill should pass, as it is evident that something of the kind is essential; and I appeal to the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT,] not to persist in his opposition to the concurrence in the amendments.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Maryland. This bill has been a long time under the consideration of the House of Representatives. It passed this body by a great majority, indicating great unanimity; and it was so passed because it was understood that there were other interests than those of the steamboat owners concerned. It was very well known what feelings many of those persons entertained on this subject; that they much preferred the law of discretion to any enactment that Congress could make; that they were desirous of having this subject entirely under their own control, to go on in what manner they pleased, with a reckless disregard for human life, rather than have any legislation whatever. The bill, after much consideration, went to the House of Representatives, and it has been pursued thither by some of the steamboat gentlemen who, to my certain knowledge, have been treated with the utmost consideration, and the greatest respect paid to their wishes, so far as they were reasonable. The consequence is, that the character and tone of the bill have been so much lowered by amendments adopted by the House of Representatives that it has lost much of its efficiency. It is not sufficiently stringent, as it has been returned to us, for the protection of life and property. The foundations of the bill have not been disturbed, it is true, but the terms have been altered, and the tone abated to such a degree as very much to impair, in my judgment, its useful character. That change has been made as a concession to those interests which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] represents. Yet, after all these concessions have been made—and they are numerous—these remonstrants are no more disposed to accept the bill now than they were at first. The more considerate are willing to accept it; but there are some, I hope not many, utterly opposed to it in every shape, and appear to desire no law but the law of discretion, which is the right to expose life to imminent peril, and often to destruction. If the Senate is willing to permit such a state of things to exist, be it so. My own opinion is, that we had better adopt the bill as it came from the House of Representatives; and as it does not take effect until next March, we can amend it during the approaching session of Congress if it should appear to be too stringent in regard to the property of steamboat owners.

In this connection I will say, in justice to the committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, that at every step, and under all circumstances, they paid the most scrupulous regard to the rights of property. This point was never lost sight of for a moment, and some of the provisions complained of were adopted to relieve property from burdens, as far as possible. The various forms in which boats and machinery are constructed, make a large discretion in the inspectors necessary to meet each case, and to prevent a sacrifice of property by the exercise of a sound discretion conforming to the circumstances which exist. Most of the owners of steam tonnage have behaved with a becoming liberality, while some have been governed by views peculiar to themselves. Forgetting that a law cannot be made for individuals, but must be general, they require an impossibility, by urging upon Congress to make a law for the reckless, while it must not extend to the prudent. In my opinion, the prudent have nothing to fear from this act. They are timid without cause, and not sufficiently mindful of the terrible disasters which frequently occur. It is but a few days since seventy persons perished by drowning, while the bow of the boat Henry Clay rested upon the shore. Such were the disastrous consequences for the want of suitable means to extinguish fire! Such painful occurrences have been so frequent as to fill the public mind with deep sensibility, and there is almost a universal demand for greater security. None but boat-owners oppose such a step, and a very large majority of this class are believed to be heartily in favor of legislation. Now is the time; now the favorable moment. Many have come here to help a law along, and we should not send them away disheartened.

Mr. PRATT. Allow me to make a suggestion for the purpose of saving time. I understand that the bill is to go into operation in the month of March; it has been acted on by the House of Representatives; and suppose that it be now laid upon the table, under the rules, when we meet again in December—three months before it takes effect—we can take it up, and we shall then have sufficient time to consider and act upon the amendments of the House of Representatives. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he does not think that the public interest will be better promoted by taking this course than by hurrying on the action of the Senate now? We are, at present, pressed for time, and it is impossible that we can give all the amendments due consideration; the adoption of them, without reading even, is a course that I am strongly opposed to. Since we are informed that the bill will have the effect of destroying the steamboat interest in California as well as in Maryland, I think that the suggestion is entitled to some consideration from the Senator for Massachusetts. I feel indebted to the Senator for his kindness in permitting me to interrupt him while making the suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS. The proposition made by the gentleman has been considered; but it is supposed by some of the friends of this bill, that it still contains much of good, and they are of opinion that this is the time for action. Those gentlemen who came here from the West, and whose advice and assistance in framing the bill, has been of much value, might not be able to return at the next session. If it should be permitted to die for the present session, it will then be placed in a hopeless condition, and it will be almost impossible to revive it. This is no doubt what some desire, but we are anxious to obtain the good which the bill contains, and to secure the means it affords of giving some security to life and property. If it should appear that amendments are desirable, it will be as easy to obtain them hereafter, as to take up the postponed bill at a future session.

Mr. HALE. I have not, as yet, said anything respecting this bill, but I understand that it is a very important one. I have the declarations of its friends for that opinion. The Senator from Texas [Mr. RUSK] I believe stated that it was of more importance than any of the appropriation bills. Well, there are one hundred and fifty amendments to it reported to us by the House of Representatives, and we have no time to read, much less to consider them. Under these circumstances, I think there is much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] To test the sense of the Senate, I move a postponement till the second Tuesday in December, and that it be made the special order for that day.

The PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is not strictly in order.

Mr. HALE. Then, I move to lay it on the table; and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RUSK. I hope that the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. HALE. I will do so if you will renew it.

Mr. RUSK. I will do so.

Mr. BADGER. It is very questionable whether this bill could be taken up at the next session of Congress, under the joint rule. The rule is this:

"After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of Congress, all bills, resolutions, or reports, which originated in either House, and at the close of the next preceding session remained undetermined in either House, shall be resumed and acted on in the same manner as if an adjournment had not taken place."

Now, I think it is very questionable whether the rule can be so construed as to permit the bill to be brought up at the next session. Recollect that it is a rule relaxing the original parliamentary rule, and embraces no cases except those which are expressly included in it. I doubt very much whether it would embrace the case of a bill which had passed the Senate and House of Representatives, and which remained on the table, not on a question of passage, but solely on a question of concurring in amendments. I mention this, because I think it is very doubtful whether, under the rule, the bill could be taken up at the next session.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to say a very few words on this question, and shall commence by thanking, in the name of humanity, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] for the immense labor he has bestowed upon the preparation of this bill. It will form a page in his history, that his children may look upon with pride, when he is gone.

This is the only country in the world which has not passed stringent laws to regulate the manner in which that powerful agent, steam, is to be employed by individuals; this is the only country in the world where human life would be recklessly and wantonly sacrificed to the cupidity of steamboat proprietors, as we have seen repeatedly during the last ten or fifteen years. Some step was rendered absolutely necessary, and the Senator from Massachusetts has taken the right course in the introduction of that bill. The whole subject has been carefully investigated by that gentleman; he has obtained information on every side; his room has been open to persons representing all classes and interests; and, with a patience that did him honor, he has listened to all who desired to make any representations to him. He has read such memorials and documents bearing on the subject as I believe no other Senator, pressed with business, as we all are, could be induced to read. The whole measure has been carefully digested and matured by him; and, now, at this late stage of the session, this bill, which, from my own knowledge of the subject, and from the information of those who are much better acquainted with it than I can profess to be, is to be set aside for the purpose of gratifying the steamboat owners. Some of them, I have no doubt, oppose it, might and main, simply because they do not understand its provisions. They believe that they will be required to change all the machinery in their boats at once, and consequently that the cost of the machinery now in use will be thrown away. This is a mistake. The machinery now in use will be retained, if it is of such a character as to bear the test of inspection; that which will not do so should, of course, be rejected. And all the machinery to be made for future use must be submitted to inspection.

Some of the observations made to me by these steamboat proprietors, are not at all creditable to them, or to human nature. They have vowed their determination to defeat the bill; and have raised such paltry objections as the cost of some four or five buckets, which they will be compelled to supply, at something like a quarter of a dollar each, and the cost of a few axes, amounting, in the whole, perhaps, to not quite forty dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. Not the half of that.

Mr. RUSK. I dare say my friend from Massachusetts is right—the whole will not cost more than half what I have stated. And, sir, this opposition to the bill has been characterized by such a degree of pertinacity as I have never witnessed in outside pressure before; and I have seen much of it here. Their object appears to be the defeat of all legislation on the subject, and the power of exercising their own uncontrolled discretion.

The question for the Senate to consider is, whether they will act in such a manner as to protect steamboat interests alone; or whether they will throw some safeguards round human life, and prevent a repetition of those lamentable catastrophes which have occurred so frequently of late. The perils accompanying steamboat navigation, under the present system, are so great, and the chances of encountering an instant and horrible death are so numerous, that, for my part, I would rather encounter almost any risk than that with which I am threatened on the journey of some three or four thousand miles from this place to my home. However, my individual fate is a matter of no great consequence to the public—I must go at some time or other, and possibly I might as well go now, by the explosion of a steamboat boiler, as by any other means, at a future day; but, sir, I will candidly avow, that I would rather take part in an Indian fight; ay, or enter on a long Indian campaign, than venture on undertaking this voyage of three thousand or four thousand miles, as I must, to see my wife and children once again.

Mr. HUNTER. The whole question resolves itself into this: the bill, even if it were passed now, will not go into operation until next March. That being the case, I do not see any reason why those gentlemen who desire that it should be postponed until the next session should not be indulged by a compliance with their request. As to the ground taken by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] that the bill could not be revised under the rule, in case of postponement, I think he is in error, because the question will then come up on an "undetermined bill."

Mr. RUSK. There is one point which I forgot to mention, and to which I should now wish to call the attention of the Senate. If the bill is to become a law, and is to go into operation in March, it is necessary that the owners of steamboats should be allowed some time for preparation.

Mr. WELLER. It will be scarcely possible for them to be in readiness in California even then.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand the bill, and will not therefore undertake to speak on it; but remonstrances have been made to me by persons who represent that it will be ruinous to their interests, and especially in its operation on the Atlantic sea-board. For that reason I have been desirous that it should be postponed until next session, in order that I may have an opportunity of examining it, and of ascertaining whether it is practicable to pass such a measure for the security of human life, without infringing on private rights.

Mr. STOCKTON. At the risk of being considered wanting in those sentiments of philanthropy and concern for human life, which have been so eloquently and so fervently expressed by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. RUSK,] I must, with the candor becoming a Senator, say, that I am opposed to most of the details of the bill now under consideration, and that I propose to discuss all the amendments made by the other House. I will endeavor to make it as consistent with my notions of the great principles of human liberty and the rights of the citizen, as it is designed to be protective of human life.

Sir, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." We are here to consider—it is our undoubted duty to consider—what is necessary to be done for the better protection of human life on steamboats. But it is likewise our duty to consider what is due to steamboat property, and steamboat owners, as well as what is due to the protection of steamboat travelers. They are all our fellow-citizens, equally entitled to our consideration. But, sir, there is a principle, in my judgment, involved in this bill far beyond, in importance, either of those questions. It is this—how far the Federal Government, through the instrumentality of the two Houses of Congress, shall be permitted to interfere with the rights of personal property—or the private business of any citizen. I think, sir, that under the influence of recent calamities, too much sensibility is displayed on this subject; and I am afraid, sir, that too many, and too strong efforts will be made forcibly to constrain individual liberty, and to control private business. Mr. President, extremes are near each other—a good principle may go so far as to react upon itself, to the injury of society—the temperance excitement for instance. What man, what christian man will not raise his voice in favor of the great cause of temperance? But, sir, is it not likely to overleap itself? Can we shut our eyes to the dangers with which even that beneficent cause threatens the Republic? The pledge required in favor of temperance, while it is, in some measure, a constraint on the liberty of individual free action, is a voluntary principle, confined to the individual, and operating only on present time. But, sir, when they come to improve morals by coercion—to interfere with acknowledged rights of freemen, that is a more serious matter—that is a principle which, though at the moment beneficial in its effects, may be prejudicial to human liberty in all time to come. Would you enslave mankind—would you interfere with rights essential to human liberty and human dignity? Would you, to save any number of men from intemperance, reverse the decrees of God, which require that the principles, the heart of man should be altered, and substitute human enactments for that irreversible law, upon which alone any permanent reform may be expected? Sir, great caution should be exercised in the application of the humane principles upon which this bill is based.

When you are about adopting measures to save human life from destruction on board of steamboats, I would have you to consider the value of a man's life compared with his happiness and his liberty, with the freedom and happiness of our race. Life is transient and evanescent, but liberty and equal rights, I hope, will endure as long as truth shall endure.

Sir, we ought, indeed, to be the guardians of liberty; but it seems that we are to be not only the guardians of liberty, but to take under our charge all the men and women who choose to go on board a steamboat or not, as they see fit. Ay, sir, and on board a boat which is known to be in the constant practice of racing. If a man will go on board a steamboat that is not fit to carry him, because he can go for a quarter of a dollar less than by some other conveyance, are we to destroy, or in any way interfere with the proper rights of other citizens in order to serve him? It must not be forgotten that travelers themselves are not altogether free from just reproach and responsibility in this matter—they are the principal cause of these repeated losses of life. They must, they will go in the fastest boat; yes, sir, they will rush to that boat which carries them speediest and cheapest. It is to their pockets they look when they select a boat, and to the Government to protect their lives when on board. They will go in any kind of boat, and with any kind of a captain, to go a little cheaper, and then, when accidents do happen, as they will in all human affairs, they burn with desire to hang the captain and owners, entirely overlooking their own responsibility in the matter, and that they have been the principal cause of the mischief by encouraging the construction of light cheap boats.

Mr. President, I hope I entertain as strong and sincere feelings of respect for the lives of my fellow men, as any other gentleman upon this floor; but I hold it to be my imperative duty not to permit my feelings of humanity or kindness to interfere with that protection which I am bound, as a Senator of the United States, to throw around the liberty of the citizen, the investment of his property, or the management of his own business.

Sir, I raise my voice here on this occasion to say to Senators, that in this Chamber they have, in my judgment, done enough in past time to shake the principles of Democratic freedom; and that they had best take heed lest they go so far that they never can regain what has been inconsiderately lost. Look, for example, at your census laws. You have authorized Federal officers to go into the houses of your citizens and inquire into their number and condition, and when and where and how they were born.

Again, sir, some of the States have laws authorizing their public officers to go into the houses of citizens and demand how much property they own and where it is, how much they owe and how much is owing to them, and other things equally offensive to the feelings of an independent freeman as it is injurious to his business. And now, sir, you want to control him in the investment and management of his property! Let me ask, what will be left of human liberty if we progress on this course much further? What will be, by and by, the difference between citizens of this far-famed Republic and the serfs of Russia? Can a man's property be said to be his own, when you take it out of his own control and put it into the hands of another, though he may be a Federal officer? Can a man's property be called his own if your officer—who will certainly be a politician, and may be an irresponsible man—has the power to determine whether that property is invested according to his idea of law; and, if he sees fit, condemn it? The steamboat property in this country is owned by a numerous and respectable class of men, and perhaps as kind-hearted and humane as any of us—men, too, whose interests, as well as whose feelings, constrain them to look to the safety of their vessels, and to exercise a constant watchfulness, not only over their own interests, but also over the interests and lives of others intrusted to their care.

Sir, this bill will not attain the object intended. Let every one build his boat in his own way, but subject him to all the high responsibilities of a public servant and common carrier. If you take this kind of property out of the charge of those most interested in it, and put it in charge of men who have no sort of interest in it, except what they may derive from a per diem inspection, you will relieve from all responsibility very responsible parties, and do an inconceivable wrong to individuals and to society. Will that be right? Is it judicious? Then, again, you would apply the principles of this bill, intended, no doubt, for good, (and which, if extended only to those steamboats which run on western waters,—about which I know nothing,—might be valuable,) to boats on rivers, where they can almost touch the shore on both sides, and whose greatest difficulty is to keep from running ashore; and this is to be done in such a way as is likely to destroy the entire interests in such boats.

But I will not press the subject any further. I have thrown out these suggestions as the ground of my hope that the further consideration of this bill may be postponed. The law is not intended to go into operation before March next; and I think that in the mean time this bill may be so guarded as not to infringe on the liberties of others, while it may afford all possible guards for the safety of human life.

Mr. DOWNS. I am sorry to occupy the time of the Senate, but I cannot remain silent when such strenuous opposition is made to the passage of this bill, and when the pecuniary interests of a few steamboat owners are placed in favorable contrast with our duty to protect the lives of the public. I confess that I have heard many things, since I first had a seat in this body, which have surprised me; but the argument against the bill just delivered by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON], is the most extraordinary I ever listened to. I had thought that the criminal jurisdiction of the United States extended over the harbors, bays, and rivers of this country; and that the United States had the authority to punish the crime of murder in those waters. This bill is to punish murder, and nothing else.

Mr. STOCKTON. I do not deny the authority of Congress. I only intended to warn the Senate against its abuse.

Mr. DOWNS. I consider that the only question involved in the bill is this: Whether we shall permit a legalized, unquestioned, unchecked, and peculiar class in the community, to go on committing murder at will, or whether we shall make such enactments as will compel them to pay some attention to the value of life? I have no hostility, or prejudices, or resentments, against those persons who hold property in steamboats. I know that there are many honorable men among them. I know that, as a class, they may all be looked on as honorable and fair men; but I know something of their characteristics and peculiarities. Like the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk], I have had to travel much with them, and know that, like all men who are constantly exposed to danger—like the warrior, the soldier, accustomed to risk life at every moment—they have become indifferent and careless to the perils with which they are constantly surrounded, and expose the lives of others, who avail themselves of their means of traveling, recklessly and needlessly, to instant destruction. That feeling of careless hardihood, I know, exists among them; and I ask, is it not time that Congress should interpose, when we hear repeatedly of the fatal consequences it entails—when we know that three hundred persons have, as one of its results, perished within the last month on our waters, and when we are informed that no less than seven hundred lives have been lost by steamboat accidents within the last twelve months?

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to mention a fact. Seventy persons perished on board the Henry Clay, when the bow of the boat was on shore, solely from the want of proper means to assist their escape.

Mr. DOWNS. I know it well, sir. Yet, gentlemen here tell us that we should not interfere with private interests. I tell these gentlemen that if ever there was a subject that required the prompt and speedy action of Congress, it is that we have now under consideration. Nor is this the first time that the question has forced itself on the attention of a legislative body. Some years ago a law was passed in the State of Louisiana for a similar object, and I had some experience of the manner in which it was administered. I held the office of district attorney, and felt it to be my duty to institute a most rigid inquiry as to the causes of the numerous accidents, with a view to prevention; yet such were the defects of the law that not a single conviction could be obtained, and I became convinced that individual States have not a sufficiently extensive jurisdiction to enable them to enact such laws as will be operative. It is utterly out of their power to do so when a boat will sometimes pass through two or three States in the course of a single day. The question then comes before Congress, and we are to decide whether this wholesale, systematized process of murder is to go on, by which seven hundred persons have been hurried to a premature death in the course of a single year. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS], that the time is come for us to do something. We have needed some incentive to action, and we should proceed at once while our minds are made up.

I am opposed to any postponement. If the bill does become law, and if that law is to take effect in March, it is absolutely necessary that we should pass upon it at once, in order to enable the proprietors of steamboats to take those steps which it requires.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have not undertaken to deny the right of Congress to interfere, or the necessity of some interference, in regard to the safety of steamboats. What I have said is, that it is necessary to amend and to guard such a bill as that now before us from all unnecessary encroachment on the liberty or business of the citizen. The bill has been altered since it left the Senate, and is now hurried along under the influence of humane and honorable, but excited feelings. Reference has been made by its friends to recent accidents, and especially to the loss of life which occurred on board the Henry Clay, in justification of this measure. With regard to that melancholy event, I must say that I believe all who know anything about steamboat navigation will agree with me, that not a single life ought to have been lost on that occasion. At all events, my opinion is, that to a want of self-possession the great loss of life which occurred at that time is mainly to be attributed. The boat went on shore within six or seven feet of the railroad, as we have been informed; and all that seems to have been needful for the safety of the passengers was self-command enough to get on shore from the bow, thus keeping clear of the flames. But instead of which, they unaccountably and wildly rushed to the stern, into the flames or the water. Is there anything in this bill to prevent such a panic—such a scene?

If Senators will allow the consideration of this question to be postponed until next session, it need not delay the practical operation of this measure in any respect, as no one proposes that it shall go into force until next March. This reasonable delay will afford an opportunity to amend the bill in some way that may be advantageous and satisfactory to all. I confess my own willingness to make some of its provisions more stringent than they now are. The fact is, that gentlemen do not thoroughly understand the subject, and as it is altogether a practical subject, I may be excused for saying so. It is a matter that requires great practical knowledge and experience, and should be well considered. The mere fact of a steamboat having been recently destroyed by fire, is not a good reason why this bill, incomplete and ill advised as I think it is, should be passed. The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS], knows as well as I do, that the chief cause of steamboat accidents, is the use of bad and defective boilers. It is all very well to make provisions as to the manner in which steamboats should be constructed and navigated, but there is something else to be looked to; and that is the manner in which the boilers are constructed, and the quality of the iron of which they are made. Where one accident arises from burning up of a boat, there are a dozen from bursting boilers. Whenever a boiler bursts, and deaths occur in consequence, the public are always excessively indignant against the owner of the boat, when, in truth, not the owner, but the iron master and the boiler maker are—if anybody—responsible.

The person who purchases the iron may easily be deceived; an instance of the kind happened only the other day on the Erie railroad. The iron of which one of the wheels of an engine was constructed, was so bad in quality, that it broke, and several cars were hurled down an embankment thirty or forty feet high. I hope Senators will consent to the postponement of this bill. I do not desire its rejection. I merely require such a delay as to enable us to modify it, and make it a reasonable bill. I am willing that it should be stringent in its provisions; but, at the same time, I desire that it may be intelligible, and that it may not interfere, more than is indispensable, with the rights of private property. If this request is accorded, I will then use my best exertions to aid in maturing such a bill as will not only satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] but also the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] and the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Downs.]

I now move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. JAMES. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to say one word?

Mr. WELLER. I wish to say a word, too, and hope I may have the opportunity.

Mr. STOCKTON. I must persist in my motion. If I open the door every gentleman in the Senate will speak.

Mr. WELLER. I am as desirous as any gentleman that the debate should come to a close, but I wish to say one word on the question.

Mr. STOCKTON. I must persist in my motion. I am appealed to by so many friends that I cannot withdraw.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FISH. Allow me to inquire whether, if we lay this bill over, we will not destroy it? I hope that those who have a decent regard for human life will not destroy this bill by a side-blow.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 8, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Butler, Clemens, Hale, Hunter, James, Pratt, and Stockton—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bortland, Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Hamilton, Houston, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Miller, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, Wade, Walker, and Weller—43.

The motion to lay the bill on the table did not prevail.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JAMES. I do not rise to consume the time of the Senate. I will merely say that when the bill was under the consideration of this body on a former occasion, I was absent, and that I had no opportunity of expressing my objections to it either here or elsewhere. If the bill should pass in its present shape, it will be almost impossible to comply with its provisions. I hope, therefore, that a committee will be appointed with power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to report a substitute to the bill now before us.

Mr. DAVIS. One word. It is indispensably necessary that time for preparation should be allowed the steamboat owners. This bill affords them time; but if it should not now be passed, we shall be compelled to commence de novo next session.

Mr. STOCKTON. I hope the question will be taken on the amendments separately, and I ask that they be read.

Several SENATORS. No, no. Allow the question to be taken on all the amendments at once.

Mr. STOCKTON. The bill is a most important one; and if it is passed at all, it should be done properly.

The question was then taken separately on the first four amendments, reported from the House of Representatives, and they were agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I would remark, that it is very injudicious to pursue this course. The amendments are read by the Secretary at the desk, and no one is aware of what effect the mere insertion or striking out of a word, or words, may have upon the general provisions of the bill. If the amendments are to be read, the Senate should be made aware of their import, by reading the clauses as amended.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have one word to say. This is the same course that we pursued with the river and harbor bill; the same course that was pursued with the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and I will undertake to say that not half a dozen gentlemen beyond those who reported the bills, knew the effect of a single amendment. We knew something about the general provisions, but nothing about the details of those bills. What could I, who have never been on the lakes, know about the appropriations for the harbors situated there? I never saw the estimates and surveys upon which those appropriations were recommended, but was obliged to confide in those gentlemen who took the subject in hand. We have to take these things on trust, and I am prepared to swallow this steamboat bill on trust, just as we have done many others.

Mr. BAYARD. It is a mere absurdity—the words “insert” and “strike out,” together with “the amendment of the House of Representatives.” The recurrence of the formula is ridiculous, and conveys no information to the mind of a single Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] that I know he is a humane man, and that I hope he will spare us the infliction of going over these amendments.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am so circumstanced that I could not yield to the solicitation of my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] or of the gentlemen near him; nor could I yield to any solicitations in the world; but I see the utter hopelessness of the conflict, and that my objections to the passage of the bill will be of no avail. Feeling this, it is a matter of courtesy to the Senate that I should withdraw my call for the reading of the amendments separately. Before sitting down, I wish to say a word to the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON.] He says that the civil and diplomatic bill, and that the river and harbor bill were passed by this body upon trust. I wish to say to him, that I take no care for such measures, for when a bill comes before us for the mere taking of money out of the Treasury, it concerns me very little; but when you come to encroach on the great principles of Government, the foundation on which the whole fabric of human liberty rests, I cannot see an attempt made to sap a single pillar without raising my warning voice; and will tell honorable Senators, in the words of the immortal Jefferson, that “eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.” The allusion of my friend from Missouri will scarcely hold good as to this bill. I now withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANGUM. Is the question on the adoption of all the amendments?

The PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. MANGUM. Then I hope the question will be taken.

The question was taken on the concurrence by the Senate in the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives, and they were agreed to.

PROMOTION OF USEFUL ARTS.

The bill from the House of Representatives, in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts, was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Having been amended, on motion of Mr. BADGER, the bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in, and the bill, with the amendments, was read a third time and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the Senate to the amendments of the Senate to the bill “making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853,” agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and have appointed Mr. GEORGE W. JONES, Mr. JAMES L. CONGER, and Mr. HARRY HIBBARD, the committee of conference on their part.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Army bill. It has been reported from the Committee on Finance with various amendments, and it is important that they should be acted on at once.

Mr. BELL. I think that I was entitled to the floor, Mr. President, and I was about to propose that the Senate should take up a bill that appeals for support to the heart and sympathies of every man. It will be an act of disinterested benevolence which we have in our power to perform, and we are now called upon to exercise that power. The bill to which I refer is House bill No. 76, for the relief of the insane; and I throw myself on the indulgence of the Senate in asking them to take it up at this moment. I desire to do so, because I perceive that it is the only opportunity which will be offered during the present session, and that if it falls in arrear of the appropriation bills it will be impossible to take it up. I appeal, then, to honorable Senators that, if they are in favor of this bill, and if they desire that it should be passed, they will vote down the proposition to take up any other measure until this has been considered.

The motion made by Mr. HUNTER was agreed to, and the bill entitled “An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853,” was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. I move the adoption of the first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance. It is to strike out the words within brackets, and insert those in italics:

“For subsistence in kind, [six hundred and fifty thousand,] one million and forty-seven thousand one hundred and eighty-five dollars.”

This is according to a reformed estimate from the Department. The first estimate was for $1,118,000. In March, they found that owing to some reforms which had been introduced, it could be reduced to $1,047,185—to the amount which we propose to insert. In the House of Representatives it was reduced to $650,000 on two calculations; one was—and, indeed, to some extent it was correct—that there are not as many men in actual service as the muster-roll shows; and again, that the amount appropriated in the deficiency bill, by way of advance for subsistence, was to be deducted from the estimate. But it will be seen that it has been always recommended as a standing policy that they should have that sum in advance; for by having more time to provide supplies, they could lay them in more economically. The Committee on Finance, therefore, propose to restore the reformed estimate, $1,047,185. It is less than the expenditure of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment recommended by the committee is the insertion of the words “one hundred and sixty thousand” after the word “million.” The clause will then read:

“For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster’s Department, consisting of fuel, forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster’s Department, at the several military posts and stations and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the first and second regiment of dragoons, the companies of light artillery, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and also for the authorized number of officers’ horses when serving in the field and at the outposts; of straw for soldiers’ bedding, and of stationery, including company and other blank books for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the pay and Quartermaster’s Department, and for the printing of division and department orders, Army regulations and reports, one million one hundred and sixty thousand dollars.”

This was the expenditure of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in the following clause, to strike out the words “two hundred and twenty-five,” after the word “mules,” in the last line but one, and insert “three hundred;” so that the clause will read:

“For the incidental expenses of the Quartermaster’s Department, consisting of postage on letters and packets received and sent by officers of the Army on public service, expenses of courts martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation to judges advocate, recorders, members, and witnesses while on that service, under the act of March 16, 1802; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, store-houses, and hospitals; the construction of roads and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the act of March 2, 1819; expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters, other disbursing officers, and trains, when military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the internment of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including hire of interpreters; spies and guides for the Army; compensation of clerks to officers of the Quartermaster's Department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July, 1838; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the various expenses required for the first and second regiments of dragoons, the companies of light artillery, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, including the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes, iron, hire of veterinary surgeons, and medicines for horses and mules, $300,000."

Mr. HUNTER. The estimate furnished by the Secretary of War was cut down in the House of Representatives without any good reason, and the Committee on Finance have merely recommended a restoration to the amount of the estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

"For fuel and quarters for officers of the Army serving on the Coast Survey, the payment of which is no longer made by the Quartermaster's Department, $5,500."

Mr. HUNTER. There has been a question raised as to the manner of defraying this expense, as these officers are now engaged on the Coast Survey. The committee have thought it most advisable to insert an appropriation for the amount in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance is to strike out the word "five" after the word "million," in the last line of the following clause, and insert the word "eight." It will then read:

"For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and horse equipments, from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and army depots; of subsistence, from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; freights, tolls, and ferriages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, wagons, carts, drays, ships and other sea-going vessels and boats, for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters, transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require that it be brought from a distance, $1,800,000."

This is a restoration to the amount named in the estimates of the Secretary of War. It will be perceived that the Committee on Finance differed with the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, solely in regard to the estimates for the Quartermaster's Department. These estimates were less than the expenditure of the preceding year, and we did not choose to concur in the reductions made by the House of Representatives, and give occasion for a deficiency bill; which we believed would have to be introduced if we reduced the appropriation not merely below the expenditures of last year, but below the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. A similar amendment occurs in the following clause: The Committee on Finance recommend that "sixty-five" be stricken out of the last line but one, and "ninety-five" inserted. It will then read:

"For ordnance stores and supplies, as follows: for procurement of side arms and accoutrements of artillery, infantry, cavalry and riflemen, materials for and preparation of siege and field ammunition, wages of mechanics engaged in making carriages, implements, equipments, harness, &c., and for purchase of miscellaneous supplies of ordnance stores for issue to the Army, $95,000."

The committee have acted on the same grounds in this, as in the preceding case. They saw no good reason for refusing the sum of $95,000 for the purchase of ordnance stores and supplies; but they apprehended that if the estimate be cut down below that amount, there would be another deficiency bill sent in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add to the second section the following:

"But nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the President from authorizing appropriations for the subsistence of the Army, for forage, for the medical and hospital departments, and for the Quartermaster's Department, to be applied to any other of the above-mentioned branches of expenditure in the same department, and appropriations made for a specific object for one fiscal year, shall not be transferred to any other object after the expiration of that year."

The section will then read:

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the President of the United States, or the Secretary of the proper Department, under his direction, to transfer any portion of the moneys appropriated for a particular branch of expenditure in that Department to be applied to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be, and are hereby, so far as relates to the Department of War, repealed; and no portion of the moneys appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of any expenses incurred prior to the first day of July, 1852. But nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the President from authorizing appropriations for the subsistence of the Army, for forage, for the medical and hospital departments and for the Quartermaster's Department, to be applied to any other of the above-mentioned branches of expenditure in the same department, and appropriations made for a specific object for one fiscal year, shall not be transferred to any other object after the expiration of that year."

Mr. HUNTER. It will be observed that this clause, as it came from the House of Representatives, took away the power of transfer entirely. It also provided that no portion of the moneys appropriated for this year, should be applied to the payment of any of the expenses incurred during previous years. On consultation with the Secretary of War, it was found that he had no objection to that portion of the bill which provides that the appropriations for the fiscal year shall be confined to the expenditure of the year. But the Committee of Ways and Means thought that the power of transfer had been carried too far, and proposed to sweep it away entirely. The proposition of the Committee on Finance is that it shall be put on the footing of the law of 1820, cutting off the powers of transfer granted under the act of 1842; under which, in my opinion, all the difficulties have had their origin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert in the third section the words printed in italics, so as to make the section read as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, approved the 28th of September, 1850, as provides extra pay to the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the United States serving in Oregon and California, be, and the same is hereby, continued in force for one year from the 1st day of March, 1852, and that the provision of the last-mentioned act be, and is hereby, extended to New Mexico during the current year, provided for by this section, and that $300,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That one half of the additional pay herein allowed to enlisted men shall be retained until they are honorably discharged: Provided further, That said officers and men shall receive only one half of the increased amount over the regular pay allowed by law."

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance propose this amendment in pursuance of a recommendation from the Secretary of War. It will be perceived that the section grants additional pay to the men in California and New Mexico; and the Secretary states that the detention of half the additional pay until the men are discharged will tend to prevent desertions.

Mr. SHIELDS. The amendment is, in my opinion, a very correct one; but I find that the section is very different from the one with which the Department furnished me. The estimate is far less than the amount actually requisite.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Illinois, that it seems there has been a correspondence between the Committee of Ways and Means and the Secretary of War. He made an estimate of what the total amount would be, if the previous allowance was given, but he thought it might be cut down; but did not say how much it might be reduced. The Committee of Ways and Means cut it down one half; and as we had no rule to go by, and had increased, in some instances, the amounts they recommended, we thought it would be better to adhere to their determination in this case.

Mr. SHIELDS. I know what the previous allowances were. The amendment which I have prepared, will decrease them; but it is perfectly satisfactory to the Department, because the same exigency does not exist now, at least not to the same extent, for an increase of pay, as did some time since.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois that if he has any amendments to offer, he had better wait until those recommended by the Committee on Finance are passed. We have but one more besides that now under consideration.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add the following additional section:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the unexpended balances remaining of sums appropriated for fortifications, and now liable to revert to the surplus fund, are hereby appropriated."

Mr. HUNTER. It will be remembered that in the civil and diplomatic bill, a clause in relation to the surplus fund was inserted providing that after two years appropriations shall be carried to the surplus fund. I have been informed by Colonel Totten that it is necessary to insert this clause here for the purpose of enabling the Department to make use of some unexpended balances for the purpose of keeping the fortifications in repair. My information leads me to believe that considerable inconvenience would be caused by its omission, if the clause in the civil and diplomatic bill to which I have referred becomes law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance are through with their amendments.

Mr. RUSK. I have an amendment which I wish to come in after line one hundred and forty-three, page seven:

For completing the survey of the route from the valley of the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean, in addition to the balance unexpended under the act of the 3d March, 1849, $34,996.

There was formerly an appropriation for this survey, and it was partially completed; the balance of $20,000 now remains, and I am desirous of having this further sum appropriated for the purpose of completing this important work.

The PRESIDENT. Is the amendment in accordance with the estimates?

Mr. RUSK. It is.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the estimate in pursuance of law?

Mr. RUSK. It is to carry out a law passed in 1849.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer several amendments. I will hand them in seriatim. The first is to strike out the third section as it stands, and insert in lieu of it:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That for extra pay to the commissioned officers of the Army of the United States serving at posts west of the States of Missouri and Arkansas, and in the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh military departments, the sum of $326,665, on the following basis, to wit: there shall be allowed to all commissioned officers $1 50 per day, in addition to their present pay and allowance. And to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, serving at the posts above-mentioned, $731,892, on the following basis, to wit: there shall be allowed to each non-commissioned officer and soldier, serving as aforesaid, in addition to present pay and allowance, a per diem equal to the pay proper of each as established by law; one half of said extra pay to be retained until he shall have been honorably discharged."

I will state that the effect of that amendment will be to reduce the allowance from $2 per day to $1 50 to each commissioned officer, and that it embraces the department of Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he has, possibly, gone beyond the recommendation of the Secretary of War in that amendment. Does it embrace California, Oregon, and Mexico?

Mr. RUSK. And Texas?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Mr. HUNTER. Does it also include Fort Leavenworth?

Mr. SHIELDS. No. It was prepared by the War Department. I have only diminished the amount without changing the plan. The next amendment I have to offer from the Committee on Military Affairs is the following:

"That paymasters' clerks shall be entitled to receive one ration per day when on duty at their stations, to be computed at the prices now authorized when traveling on duty."

These persons now receive $700 a year, and this amendment will give them twenty cents a day in addition. The amendment will follow the other sections in the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I offer the following amendment:

For the pay and equipment of mounted riflemen, finding their own horses and forage, of the volunteers serving under the command of Captain J. C. Frémont in California during the year 1846, as appears from the muster rolls in the War Department, and for the subsistence and supplies furnished to such volunteers in said service — dollars; and the Secretary of War is authorized and required to appoint three competent officers of the Army of the United States to examine, and report upon all such claims as may be presented for subsistence and supplies of all kinds, furnished or taken for the use of said command while thus engaged in the public service. And that upon being satisfied of the correctness of the claims which may be reported on favorably, in whole or in part, shall proceed to audit and pay the same; and for the expenses of the said board of officers, the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated.

In accordance with an estimate from the Department, I propose to fill up the first blank with $16,527. The amount of those claims which have been liquidated, is $24,714, and the amount still claimed $26,055, making altogether about $67,000. I move to fill the blank with $67,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I would like to have some explanation of this amendment. I understand that it proposes to establish a commission to ascertain the expenses of the battalion raised in California under Colonel Frémont.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes. A bill for that purpose has already passed the Senate this session, and it has gone to the House of Representatives; but it is well known that that bill will lie on their table during the present session. The payment of these claims has been so long delayed that it is time the Government should adopt some means of satisfying them. They must be met some time or other; as the Senate has already taken action on the subject, I shall not waste time by discussing it at length now.

Mr. WELLER. I think the Senator from Illinois will find that the entire amount required for the pay of the battalion is $101,000; and the estimate of which he speaks is an estimate for the subsistence and supplies that have been furnished, and amounts to $67,000. I would suggest to him the propriety of including both, so as to make the amount $168,000.

The amendment proposes to appoint three officers of the Army, whose duty it shall be to investigate all these claims for supplies and subsistence furnished to Frémont's battalion in California. It is well known, at all events it is in California, that there are many of these claims which are fraudulent, or of a doubtful character. I do not think we ought to pay all the claims which may be presented; because I am satisfied there are several of them of a most extravagant character. For instance, there are some claims for horses furnished at the rate of $125 apiece, when it is well known that in 1846 horses could be purchased in California for from $15 to $25 apiece. Therefore, I hold that it is necessary that there should be a commission appointed for the purpose of investigating all these claims. But I think it is necessary to insert $101,000 for the pay of the officers and men. The pay rolls have been admirably kept by a gentleman of high character—Major Reading—who is now in this city.

Mr. SHIELDS. The gentleman from California is correct. I have looked since at the estimates, and I find that there are $101,000 for pay, and $67,000 for subsistence and supplies. I therefore move to fill the blank with $168,000.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from Illinois, I understand, now proposes to fill the blank with $168,000. I wish to make a statement before the vote is taken on that motion. I think there can be no dispute that the amount ought to be increased in some degree. Some of these claims have not been presented to the War Department. There are a number of subsistence claims which have not been presented. For instance, the claim of Arguello passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. That amounts to about $11,000. A number of other claims have been filed before Congress, but not in the Departments. There are various other claims amounting to about $25,000 or $30,000, which have been acted upon or are now being acted upon by the committees of Congress which have not been filed at the War Department. I hope, therefore, that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will put the amount at $200,000. As I have stated, one claim for $11,000 has passed the Senate; there is another—Mr. Alexander's claim—amounting to about $5,000, which has been referred to the appropriate committee, and there is a claim of Mr. Melish also before the committee, which have not yet been acted upon. These claims have been presented to my own knowledge. Then there is the claim of Thomas O. Larkin, which was presented to Congress at the last session, and which, I believe, has not been presented to the War Department. I therefore ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to fill the blank with $200,000. I think it will be perfectly safe to put in that amount.

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not know that I understand the object of this amendment, but I remember very well, some years ago, about the time these expenses were incurred, a bill was reported appropriating $750,000 for the purpose.

Mr. GWIN. And it passed the Senate.

Mr. ATCHISON. Now it seems that this appropriation to pay Colonel Frémont's battalion, and the quartermaster's and the commissary's department of the expenditures of that Commission, during the time that battalion was in the service of the United States, amounts to $101,000. It is very strange to me that these expenditures have diminished in this way. It is contrary to the usual course.

Mr. WELLER. We do not suppose that $100,000 will pay all the claims against the battalion, because it is well known that good claims to the amount of at least $800,000 have been presented; but we suppose that this appropriation would be sufficient to pay all the claims which require no investigation, and that are here in the city. It will be necessary to make an appropriation to pay the balance of the claims after there has been an investigation.

Mr. ATCHISON. Very well; that is all right.

Mr. SHIELDS. The pay of this battalion can be ascertained from the muster rolls. I intended to make provision that we should pay them according to the muster rolls, instead of putting the amount in the amendment; but I agreed, at the request of Senators, to put in the amount, for it is the same thing in the end. The number of claims that can be ascertained definitely can very easily be arranged, but the residue cannot be so easily ascertained. They will depend upon the proof made before the board, and upon what the board may determine. I say there is no use in making an appropriation of an amount of money at this time to pay the whole, because the board will not be able to act until we meet again; and the object is merely to make an appropriation that will cover the claims that are plain and clear, and about which there is no question, and not those which are litigated and disputed.

Mr. GWIN. I will take the Senator's amendment as it is.

The motion to fill the blank with $168,000 was agreed to.

The amendment, as thus modified, was adopted.

Mr. SHIELDS. The next amendment which I have to offer is to add:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the second section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the accounts of the public officers and others who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico," approved March 3d, 1849, shall be so construed as to extend to officers and other persons who were engaged in the collection of military contributions as collectors in any part of Mexico or California, during the war with Mexico, so that the benefits of the provisions of said section shall apply equally to all, whether they have paid into the Treasury all the public money in their hands or not.

This is to supply an omission in the former law. It was intended that payment should be made to those men; but the construction given to the act by the Attorney General was, that it was confined to sea-ports, and did not extend to inland ports. This is merely accomplishing what ought to have been done by previous legislation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. The next amendment is to add:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Board of officers designated by the act of the 3d of March, 1851, to procure sites for the military asylums, by and with the approval of the President of the United States, be, and they, or a part of them, are hereby, authorized and directed to examine the Blue Lick Springs and the land attached thereto, and if the same be found eligible for the purpose, and can be secured of the proprietors, or any suitable quantity of the land, including the buildings, at a reasonable price, to purchase the same for the Government of the United States, and to locate thereon the Western Military Asylum.

I would state that both the Committee on Military Affairs and the committee of the House have agreed upon this proposition, and that it meets the concurrence of the Department.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is giving an advantage to the proprietors of one site. It confines the officers to the selection of one place, and they can select no other, provided that the price of this satisfies them.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will merely state that the commissioners who have examined this matter in the West, have made no location; but it is considered that this is the most eligible site in the West, and can be procured for one fifth the amount of money required for any other location in that region of country; but the amendment does not require them to take it. It is the wish of the Departments, and of the Military Committees, that this place may be examined, and be procured, if it can be obtained on reasonable terms.

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not understand this matter exactly; but I think that the Senator from Virginia understands it. The effect would be to confine the officers to the selection and purchase of the Blue Lick Springs, in the State of Kentucky, for the Western Military Asylum. The Senator from Illinois says that this site can be purchased at a smaller sum than any other eligible site in the West. I do not see how this can well be; for I know something of the Blue Lick; I know it is considered a very valuable property. It is made valuable because it is so extensive and so fashionable a watering place. It is perhaps more so than any other in the State of Kentucky or the western country. Now, unless there be something peculiarly healthy in the waters of the Blue Lick, there is nothing to recommend it as a healthy place, or to induce the commissioners to locate the asylum there more than at any other place that I know of.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will merely state that the commissioners did not examine that portion of the country. They did not know that this place was salable at the time they made their examinations. It has since been ascertained that this site can be procured for a much smaller sum than any site in that portion of the country where they intend locating this asylum. I believe it is a very eligible and very healthy site. All they want is permission to go and examine it; and if it is found eligible, and can be purchased at a reasonable price, that they shall have authority to purchase it.

Mr. ATCHISON. I withdraw my objection. I care nothing about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Allow me to say to gentlemen that the amendment does not compel the officers to buy it. If they cannot procure the property for a reasonable price, of course it will be their duty not to buy it; but if they can get it at a reasonable price, and if it answers their purpose, then they are authorized to make the purchase.

Mr. SHIELDS. To remove all objection, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "and directed," so as merely to authorize the officers to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. The next amendment I have to offer, is to add:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to procure a sufficient number of camels, to ascertain whether or not they can be naturalized and rendered serviceable upon this continent, and that the sum of $30,000 be appropriated for the purpose.

This question was brought up by the former chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, (Mr. Davis, of Mississippi,) and at that time I helped to vote down the proposition. Since then the Committee on Military Affairs have made a thorough examination of this matter, and they have come to the conclusion, that if camels can be naturalized and acclimated in this country, through the whole South and Southwest, and away to the Pacific, they will perform better service for us than any mode of conveyance that we have yet adopted. All that we want is to make the experiment. There was a time when we had no horses in this country; and camels are known at this moment to be the cheapest mode of conveyance in the East. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WELLER. If this great good is to result from the use of camels, perhaps the country would be glad to know who it is that confers it upon them, and I therefore call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bell, Borland, Charlton, Clemens, Dawson, De Sausure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Mason, Meriwether, Pearce, Rusk, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, Underwood, and Wade—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradbury, Bright, Broadhead, Brooke, Butler, Cass, Downs, Felch, Houston, Hunter, King, Miller, Norris, Pratt, Walker, and Weller—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have several amendments now to offer from the Committee on Military Affairs, all of the same class, and I suppose they might as well all be put together.

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That in the adjustment of the State of Maine, under the act of the 13th June, 1842, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be and they are hereby directed to include and allow all claims which have been heretofore presented under said act: Provided, It shall be satisfactorily shown that said claims have been actually allowed and paid by said State.

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War allow and pay to the State of Virginia all sums that may have been advanced by that State to the officers and men of her regiment of volunteers engaged to serve for and during the war then existing between the United States and Mexico, for pay for their services from the day of their enrollment until they were mustered into the service of the United States: Provided, The same has not been paid heretofore by the United States to any of the officers or men for said service.

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized and required to pay to the State of South Carolina, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums of money as were paid by said State in 1838, 1839, and 1840, for services, losses, and damages sustained by her volunteers in the Florida war of 1835, 1837, and 1838, while in the service of the United States, and on their return from said service, as were ascertained and allowed by a board of commissioners appointed for that purpose by an act of the Legislature of said State in 1837: Provided, however, That no interest shall be allowed upon the moneys paid to the State of South Carolina under the provisions of this act.

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That in the settlement of the claims of the State of Georgia, under the provisions of the act of the 11th August, 1842, providing for the settlement of the claims of Georgia, for the service of her militia, which have heretofore been suspended or disallowed, the accounting officers of the Treasury Department allow and pay, upon proof that the State has allowed and paid the same, all accounts for forage, subsistence, hospital stores, medical services, and transportation, which have not been heretofore allowed by the United States, and that for the pay of mounted infantry, the pay of cavalry be allowed, the same to be paid out of the fund appropriated by the act of the 11th of August, 1842."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment:

"To refund to the State of North Carolina the amount of money advanced and transportation furnished to the volunteers from that State, during the late war with Mexico, the sum of $9,352 53, with interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the 1st day of March, in the year 1847, until paid."

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "with interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the first day of March, in the year 1847, until paid." All the bills for this purpose which have been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs have been without interest. I do not understand that we agreed upon the payment of interest in this case. Certainly it has been stricken out of the others; and I think all ought to be put on the same footing.

Mr. BADGER. I think my friend is mistaken.

Mr. CLEMENS. I think I am not mistaken about the action of the committee in never recommending the payment of interest.

Mr. BADGER. I think that interest has been allowed in some cases, if not in all cases, for pay and equipment of troops engaged in the prosecution of the war with Mexico.

Mr. CLEMENS. I think we struck out interest in every case. I wish to state that if interest is to be retained in this case, it is not reported by the committee, and the amendment is out of order. We have never agreed to report any bill allowing interest. It was a mistake, I understand, in the printed bill from which this amendment is taken, by which interest is allowed; and when we agreed to report the other bills, we struck out the interest. I reported the South Carolina bill, and I know there was an express provision inserted that interest should not be allowed.

Mr. BORLAND. After the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, an explanation is due to myself. The bill for the payment of these expenses incurred by North Carolina passed the Senate two years ago, allowing interest. I heard no objection to it then, but it failed in the House for want of time, or some other cause. At this session, the purpose was either to have a new bill, or have the old bill incorporated as an amendment upon this bill. My understanding was that we were to report the bill exactly as it had been passed before.

Mr. DAWSON. The principle we have adopted is this: If the State has paid out interest on the money she advanced, then we refund her the interest; and in all bills passed authorizing an appropriation of that kind, the Committee on Military Affairs have made that recommendation; but otherwise, their action is as the Senator from Alabama says.

Mr. SHIELDS. As a general principle we have refused to allow interest. I do not know how it may be in this particular case.

The amendment of Mr. CLEMENS to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer an amendment, which is to add:

For refunding to the State of Michigan the amount advanced by said State in organizing, subsisting, and transporting volunteers previous to their being mustered into the service of the United States, during the late war with Mexico, $20,000, which said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and cancel the claim of said State, as presented and now on file in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Governor or other proper officer of the State of Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the bill by adding:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in adjusting and paying the accounts of the State of Florida, for the services of her troops, under the act of February 27, 1851, to pay to said State all sums of money actually paid, or assumed to be paid, by that State, on account of the suppression of Indian hostilities, in relation to which said act was passed: Provided, The said payment shall not exceed the amount specified in said act.

Congress, in 1851, appropriated $75,000 to the State of Florida, for the payment of debts incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in 1849. In accounting at the Treasury, the accounting officers allowed less money to these troops than Florida actually paid out. The balance of the appropriation of $75,000 accordingly remains in the Treasury. The mounted men in the Florida volunteers have been paid less than the mounted men in the Army of the United States, by a rule of the accounting officers. This amendment has been drawn under the supervision of the Auditor; and he says that it is all that is necessary to enable him to pass the account. The money is already in the Treasury, having been appropriated; but, under their rules, it cannot be paid over.

Mr. CLEMENS. Has this case ever been acted upon by any committee?

Mr. MALLORY. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLEMENS. And I think we rejected it.

Mr. MALLORY. Not that I know of. It was handed back to me by one of the members of the Military Committee, who suggested that I should offer it when similar amendments were offered to this bill.

Mr. DAWSON. This was referred, together with similar claims, to the Committee on Military Affairs. The difference is between the pay of mounted infantry and cavalry. We adopted the principle that we would pay them as cavalry. This case was one that came into my hands as a member of the Military Committee, and I returned it to the Senator from Florida, suggesting to him to offer it as an amendment to this bill. It is in precise conformity with the Georgia and South Carolina cases which have already been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. CLEMENS. Does this provide for anything but the difference between the pay of mounted infantry and cavalry?

Mr. DAWSON. That is all.

Mr. BRADBURY. In order to make the amendment conform to bills which have been passed on this subject heretofore, it will be necessary to change its phraseology. This amendment provides not only for the payment of money actually paid by Florida, but of money "assumed to be paid" by that State. Perhaps it is a verbal mistake.

Mr. MALLORY. It does not exceed the amount already appropriated. She has not been paid all that she expended, and this amendment is to enable the accounting officers to pay the State the amount she actually expended.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to strike out of the amendment the words "or assumed to be paid;" and for this reason: When a State pays out money, you have the best assurance that she pays no more than is regarded to be a fair equivalent; but sometimes, by forms of legislation, a claim may be assumed which a State would never pay. I do not know that it is so in this case, but we may establish a bad precedent. I think that in all cases we should withhold payment until the State actually pays, for if we begin to adopt a principle that we will pay that portion which the States are simply assumed to have paid, you will have regiments got up as Falstaff's was, the accounts passed, and the amount assumed, and then they will come to Congress for payment. Indeed, the usual phraseology of such bills ought to be very strictly examined, because we know that there are cases where the muster-rolls have been made out, and we have paid for fifteen hundred men for fifteen months, when there were never three hundred together for three weeks.

Mr. BORLAND. Where was that?

Mr. BRADBURY. No matter. The fact is so.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Maine is right. This amendment does not comply with the rule the Military Committee have adopted, from which we never depart.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say a word to my honorable friend from Maine, which I think will show him that his apprehension is entirely unfounded. Congress has appropriated $75,000 in full liquidation of these debts paid, or assumed to be paid, by the State of Florida.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not yet got through with the amendments from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I would ask the Senator to withdraw this amendment, and then he and I can confer about it and put it in such a shape as will make it acceptable.

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the accounting officers of the United States Treasury are hereby directed to ascertain the amount justly due to Henry L. Kinney for subsistence, medicine, forage, &c., furnished by him to the company of Texas mounted volunteers, commanded by Captain Charles M. Blackwell, from September 10, 1849, to December 10, 1849, and pay him the same out of the sum of $72,000 already appropriated for such purpose by virtue of the second section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1851," approved September 30, 1850: Provided, That the same shall not exceed the sum of $6,114 76.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have an amendment which I now offer that may not be strictly in order, but it is recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has passed this body frequently. I hope there will be no objection to it. It is to add as an additional section:

"And be it further enacted, That the accounts of Adjutant General Roger Jones shall be settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury according to equity and justice, and in such manner as to allow him the pay and emoluments of his commission of Adjutant General from the time of the reduction of the Army in 1821, to March 7th, 1825, when he was restored to his rank and commission in the staff of the Army: Provided, That the pay and emoluments of a captain of artillery during the same period be deducted therefrom.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish to override the rule. I have voted for this measure as a separate bill on three or four different occasions, and I am very glad it has passed this body, and I am sorry that it has not got through the other House. I believe the money is justly due and ought to be paid. I would ask the Chair whether the rule that excludes private claims from appropriation bills is now in force?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHT. Does it apply to this bill?

The PRESIDENT. If a question of order be raised, the Chair must decide the amendment out of order; but if it be the desire of the Senate, the Chair will put the question on the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish only to make a statement to the honorable Senator from Indiana. I have acted upon the ground that this bill has passed here very often, and that it will pass sooner or later. I am not going into the merits of the case, but we know it will finally pass; and owing to the circumstance that this gallant officer has so recently deceased, and left a very large family, and that this money may now be ten times more valuable to them than the same amount hereafter, we agreed to report it as an amendment to this bill, and hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the claim. As I said before, I have voted for it three or four times, and would vote for it again as a separate measure; but I will raise no question, if the Senate are disposed to agree to it. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have one more amendment to offer by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the principal assistant in the Engineer Bureau of the War Department shall receive a compensation not less than the principal assistant in the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department now receives.

This is to supply an omission in former legislation, by which injustice was done to this officer. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have now gotten through with the amendments which I have been instructed to offer by the Committee on Military Affairs. I wish to offer one now which I have not been able to submit to the committee, but for which I have the recommendation of the Department. It has come to me at such a late hour that I have not been able to get the committee together to act upon it. I will preface it by stating that now on the Pacific coast, as has been often stated by the Senators from that portion of the country, there is only one gun of large caliber. Guns must be taken there sooner or later, and the object of my amendment is to enable us to send a few there now, so that after a fortification is built, they can be used, and in the mean time if anything serious should happen, which I hope may not be the case, the Californians can use them themselves. The amendment is to add to the appropriations:

For armament of fortifications, $150,000, of which $100,000 shall be applied for the purchase and fabrication of guns of the heaviest caliber, with their carriages and equipments, for the defense of the Pacific coast of the United States.

Mr. CASS. Ought not that to go into the fortification bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not know that we can have any fortification bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I doubt the propriety of increasing the appropriations in this bill by adding amounts in this way. This has not been estimated for until very recently, and it seems to me that we are accumulating arms fast enough.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would state to my honorable friend from Virginia, that by this appropriation it is intended to obtain that species of arms which are known as Paixhan or Columbian guns, which are well known to my honorable friend from New Jersey, [Mr. Stockton.] We want but a very few in California, and they ought to have been there long ago. In case we should get into any conflict in that neighborhood, they would be very useful. That coast must be fortified sooner or later, and you cannot fortify it without having such guns as these, and by sending them there now they can be used as temporary defenses, if necessary; thus only anticipating what must occur at some time.

Mr. WELLER. I am very glad that my honorable friend from Illinois has submitted this amendment. Every one must see the necessity of having guns of the heaviest caliber, and of the greatest magnitude upon the Pacific coast. You have been attempting to get up a war, here in the Senate, at all events, with Great Britain, upon the subject of the fisheries. If a war should arise, the Pacific coast would necessarily be the first point of attack, for the reason that there is a vast amount of commerce there which is unprotected. Our harbors are wholly unprotected; and if we should be involved in a war, as many persons fear, guns of this caliber will be absolutely necessary; and I apprehend there will be a necessity for their use, and that within a very few years, upon that coast.

Mr. CASS. I have no doubt whatever that an armament of this description should be there. I have no objection to that; but I should like to know of the honorable chairman what number of guns of that description we have on hand; and whether they cannot be sent from somewhere else. There is a great disposition under this Government to accumulate objects of this kind. I called for a report from the War Department at the last session, and it was laid upon our tables towards the end of the session. From that report it appeared that the United States had six hundred thousand muskets on hand, and were manufacturing thirty thousand or forty thousand more. I do not recollect the exact amount of the number of other arms and of the men engaged in the various arsenals. But I know that the report showed that the number of muskets was equal to, if not greater than those that Napoleon had when he got into his war with Russia.

Mr. SHIELDS. There are very few of these guns.

Mr. CASS. That is precisely what I want to know. We all know that there are forts in this country on a scale unsuitable for the present or any prospective wants of the United States. Look at Old Point Comfort. Ask members of Congress about it, and they will tell you, and ninety-nine men out of every one hundred in the country will tell you, that it commands the entrance of the Chesapeake Bay. There is hardly a man who does not think that Old Point Comfort commands that entrance, but it no more commands the entrance of the Chesapeake than it does of the Thames. It is in fact a wanton abuse of the public Treasury to be spending money on such objects. But I am not going to argue that point in an incidental manner. I wish to obtain information as to whether we have got any guns of this description, and if so, why they cannot be sent there without much expense.

Mr. SHIELDS. I concur in every word that fell from the honorable Senator from Michigan. My own investigations have brought me to precisely the same conclusions. We have filled our arsenals with arms. We have got so many on hand that we are not able to avail ourselves of improvements in their manufacture. So that if we were to get into a war, a great many of them would be useless. But there are very few of these guns in the country. There are not one hundred guns of this description now on the continent. These large Paixhans cost about $1,000 apiece. They will cost $1,000 apiece by the time you get them to California. My impression is, that the Department contemplate having one hundred of these guns taken to California, if they can, for $100,000, and use the other $50,000 for a temporary magazine, and powder, and shot, for these guns. But my impression is that we might as well confine the appropriation to $100,000; that is, to provide for fifty guns; and fifty, in my opinion, will be capable for the present. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the appropriation asked for will not be diminished. There is not a gun on the Pacific coast, except one or two small ones. The entrance to the harbor of San Francisco, which is less than a mile wide, presents one of the finest places in the world to be fortified, and yet there is not a single gun there. Then there is the harbor of Monterey. You can shoot a pistol across its entrance. It can be defended as easily as any harbor in the world; but there is not a particle of defense there of any description. I hope the appropriation asked for will not be diminished. Every cent of it is needed; and we need arms there at this time.

Mr. CASS. I trust the appropriation will be diminished. It must be evident to the Senate that there is no proper information before us which will give us light as to the matter. It is no use for gentlemen to say it is this, or that, or the other. We should have specific information.

Mr. GWIN. Permit me to state to the honorable Senator that there is a most able report from a special board presented to us at this very session on this subject. It is in the possession of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs; and in that report, they make estimates for this appropriation.

Mr. CASS. I have seen all that before. I have seen reports of fortification engineers from the time of General Bernard, who commenced a system that would have swamped the revenues of England, if it had not been stopped. I want to know what number of these guns we have on hand and in what part of the country they are? As provident statesmen legislating now, we ought to know what we have got on hand. I think the honorable gentleman from Illinois is entirely right in proposing to reduce the amount to be appropriated until we can have some information. It is not a very long while till next winter, when we meet again.

Mr. SHIELDS. To speak reasonably, I think that fifty of these immense guns—ten-inch Columbiads and eight-inch Columbiads—are as much as can be used at present at that point; and they are the proper guns to fortify that point. No other guns can do it. Although the honorable Senator from California thinks the amount ought to be $100,000, I think $50,000 for this purpose will be ample, and I therefore move to amend the amendment so as to make it read:

For armament of fortification $100,000, of which $50,000 shall be applied to the purchase and fabrication of guns of the heaviest caliber, with their carriages and equipments, for the defense of the Pacific coast of the United States.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask my friend from Illinois, whether an appropriation of $50,000 will pay for the fifty guns of which he speaks?

Mr. SHIELDS. They are estimated at $1,000 apiece.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I crave the attention of the Senate for a moment, while, in performance of a duty, a sacred duty, devolved upon me as a Senator of the United States, I propose an amendment to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. President, Mrs. Priscilla D. Twiggs lost a husband and a son in the recent war with Mexico. With patriotic ardor, at the call of their country, they rushed to the battle-field, and both found, where heroic valor led them, a bloody grave. It is hardly necessary for me to say anything more but this: that the gallant son left the United States and joined our armies in Mexico as a second lieutenant of infantry, with the promise that his commission should soon follow him. He was killed before he received that commission, and before he was regularly, or rather technically mustered into service. The accounting officer of the Treasury could not, therefore, under existing laws, pay her the amount of $233 33, which would have accrued to him if he had been mustered into the service of the United States as a second lieutenant of infantry. His mother petitions the Senate, through me, to authorize this small amount of money to be paid to her as his legal representative; and now I ask the Senate, as the most direct and practicable way of complying with the just claims of this unfortunate and doubly bereaved lady, that they will (passing over if necessary all ordinary forms of legislation) adopt this amendment by a unanimous vote. The pittance asked is the pay prescribed by law for a second lieutenant of infantry, from the 1st of June, 1847, on which day he entered into the service of our armies in Mexico, to the 12th of September of the same year, on which day he fell in battle. In proposing payment of this debt Senators must not suppose that I make any appeal to their sympathies. No, no. I can only ask, in the name and on behalf of this almost broken-hearted lady, who has given her husband and her son to her country—justice—even-handed justice. I send to the desk the proposed amendment:

For payment to Priscilla D. Twiggs, of the amount of the pay and allowances which would have accrued to her son, George D. Twiggs, had he been regularly in the service as a second lieutenant of infantry, from the 1st day of June, 1847, the date on which he left the United States, to the 12th September of the same year, when he fell in battle at the National Bridge in Mexico, $233 33.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can verify the statement of the honorable Senator from New Jersey. I feel in debt, as it were, to this unfortunate family. This young officer was coming out to join a regiment of which I had the command at the time—the regiment of marines. Major Twiggs, his father, fell in the battle of Chapultepec. I appointed him to command the storming party at the storming of that place, and I saw him fall. I was close to him at the time. So that, as far as I am concerned, I could not let this occasion pass without saying, that if this young gentleman had lived, he would have taken a place in the command which I had the honor to lead. His father occupied a high position. He was a brave and gallant officer. He fell in the storming of Chapultepec, and his son fell on his way to join him. I take it for granted that there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair considers the amendment as received, and the question is on its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the appropriation for "completing the light-house at Sand Key, Florida," by adding to it the following:

And the construction of said work shall be continued and completed under the Topographical Bureau, by J. W. P. Lewis, who has hitherto had charge of it.

That involves no expenditure of money, and I can explain it in a few moments. Mr. Lewis is an engineer of Boston, of great skill. He prepared the working drawings and superintended the construction of this large and beautiful light at Sand Key, near my own residence. He conducted this work at a time when it was reported to be impracticable by an officer of the Army. He overcame those difficulties which were supposed to be insurmountable. About one half the amount required was expended, when the appropriation gave out, and the officers of the Army were compelled to discontinue his services, because of the existence of a law which compelled them to employ an Army engineer. I propose now to do justice to this gentleman, who has devoted a life to this service. He studied engineering in England, and brought his knowledge of it here. I propose that we shall have the advantages of his talents and of his abilities. There is no objection to him whatever, I believe. I have known him a long while, and he is a very worthy engineer.

Mr. CASS. This sort of legislation makes mere ciphers of the Departments. If we go on in this way the Secretary of War will not be responsible at all. If you appoint the man who is to do the business, you destroy the functions of the Administration.

Mr. HUNTER. I agree with the Senator from Michigan; we ought to leave these things to the proper Departments. We ought not to interfere with the appointing power.

Mr. WELLER. If I understand the amendment it makes an appropriation of $44,000 for the completion of the light-house on Sand Key. I should like to know from the Senator from Florida how much has already been appropriated for the construction of that light-house? I know that it has been a very expensive one. Even our light-houses on the Pacific, where everything is so expensive, are to be done for $25,000 or $30,000 apiece. I desire to know before I vote upon this proposition, how much money has already been expended for the construction of this light-house?

Mr. MALLORY. This amendment makes no appropriation whatever. The appropriation is already in the bill as it came from the House. I would say to the Senator from California that I believe that the light-house is to cost nearly $100,000. But it is an iron-screw pile-light, one hundred and forty feet high, built upon a barren island, and the appropriations for it, so far as I can learn, have been most economically and properly expended.

In reply to the honorable Senator from Virginia, I would say that this structure was commenced under the Topographical Bureau. Mr. Lewis is the gentleman who made the working drawings, who superintended all the work, and has had charge of the work up to this time. His services have been discontinued for the want of an appropriation, and also because of the existence of a law requiring works of this kind to be performed by engineers of the Army. I think there would be no objection to this proposition on the part of the officers of the Army. This individual has been in their employ for four years, and has exhibited great skill and talent. I am satisfied that if the structure be placed under his charge it will be completed in the most perfect manner. And I believe no man in the country understands the subject as well as he does.

Mr. BADGER. I agree with the Senators from Michigan and Virginia. This is a very improper mode of legislating. Let me put a case to the Senator from Florida: Suppose this gentleman should die—laying aside every other objection—of course the work would stop, because the law designated a particular man who was to go on and superintend the application of the money to the construction of the work. If there is anything in the law requiring an officer of the Army to be detailed for the purpose, let that law be repealed so far as it applies to this light-house. That is very different from this proposition. As the Senator from Michigan says, there is no proper responsibility on the part of the executive departments, if we undertake to go and select persons to carry on these works.

Mr. WELLER. I believe this is the third appropriation which has been made for the construction of this light-house. The first appropriation, I think, was $20,000; then there was an appropriation of $33,000 to complete it, and now we are called upon to appropriate $44,000 more.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment proposes no appropriation. The appropriation is already in the bill; and the question pending is on the proposition of the Senator from Florida to employ a particular individual to do the work.

Mr. WELLER. May I not discuss the propriety of the appropriation on this amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is in order to do so; but it is more strictly correct to speak to the amendment pending.

Mr. WELLER. I merely desired to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that a year ago $33,000 were appropriated to complete this light-house, and now we are called upon to appropriate $44,000 more.

Mr. MALLORY. I will modify my amendment to meet the objection of the honorable Senator from North Carolina. I feel that justice should be done to this individual. But I will modify my amendment so as to leave the Secretary of War to employ any one he pleases. I think we ought to have the services of this engineer in completing the work. He has already overcome difficulties which were considered insurmountable, and has carried the work almost to completion. We wish the advantages of his labors; and I wish to use language, so that it may be understood that we wish him to be continued.

Mr. BRADBURY. I understand that this individual is the only person who made an examination of the site of the light-house, who was of opinion that it was practicable. The officers of the Army who examined it, gave it up; but he went further, and through his genius and his skill we have been able to carry forward the work thus far. Now, I think it would be doing a great wrong to leave the law in such a situation that the Department would be unable to avail themselves of the services of this distinguished individual. Whether the amendment should stand in the form presented by the Senator from Florida, or in the form suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, will not be very material, so that justice is done.

Mr. BADGER. The statement of the Senator from Maine of itself is sufficient to show the impropriety of this appropriation. What do we know about the genius of Mr. Lewis? Are we to take evidence here and ascertain whether he discovered the site, whether he assisted by his genius, and skill, and dexterity, the officers in carrying on the work, or whether any one else cannot do it? Can we possibly determine that matter? Then, if we do it in this instance, why not in every other case appropriate for building such a light-house at a particular point, and then say Robert Jones, or Captain Snooks shall be the man to superintend and direct the work? This is a matter which ought to be left to our executive officers.

Mr. MALLORY. I have already told the Senator from North Carolina the particulars of this matter. After this site had been recommended by various boards of underwriters, and by mercantile men all over this country, as a proper location for a light-house, it was examined with a view of placing one there, and a law passed requiring that a screw-pile light should be put there. There was no alternative but to put up that description of light. Officers of the Army examined the spot, and pronounced it impracticable. This gentleman had paid particular attention to the construction of screw-pile lights in England. He examined the place after the officers of the Army had pronounced it impracticable, and said he would engage to put a light there. He was appointed the engineer, and made drawings and specifications for the construction of the work. There is no such work on the continent of America as this. I have no doubt the Secretary of War would be glad to have authority to employ this individual, but as the law now exists it cannot be done.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend from Florida. This gentleman, I believe, is a very skillful engineer—so far as I can understand, one of the very ablest in our country, in the management of works of this kind. But the difficulty has been in the War Department. They were compelled to remove him, because they were bound to employ Topographical Engineers. They had no desire to remove this gentleman; and therefore I would suggest, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, that the Senator from Florida modify his amendment, so as to give the Department a chance of employing any one they choose. I have no doubt they would select this gentleman.

Mr. MALLORY. In accordance with the suggestions of various Senators, I have modified my amendment so as to read:

And so much of any act of Congress as requires that an officer of the Army shall be employed in constructing said work, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to pay to each of the survivors, or to the heirs of those who have died, of the Seminole warriors who were mustered into the service of the United States at Fort Brooke, in December, 1835, an amount equal to three months' pay, and allowances of a private soldier in the Army of the United States: Provided, That the amount so paid shall not exceed $3,870: And provided, also, That such amount paid shall be in full of all claims of said friendly Seminoles during the Florida war, for compensation and indemnity on account of losses sustained.

In 1850 a provision passed in one of the appropriation bills, providing for the payment of these Indians. It was adopted by both Houses; but, by some mischance, it was not incorporated into the enrolled bill, in the hurry and confusion of the last night of the session. The subject was again referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they made a report upon it in favor of the claim. They have now instructed me to offer it as an amendment to this bill. The reason why the claim has been so long delayed, is on account of the loss of the muster roll, which has since been supplied by Captain Casey. These Indians were under the command of Major Betton. Captain Casey, who was an officer in his command, has since supplied the deficiency of the muster roll. Hence we have full proof as to who the claimants are. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to inquire whether this amendment was not voted down on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. BELL. It was presented either on the bill, or on the deficiency bill, and a question of order was raised, as to whether or not it was a private claim. Now, I appeal to any Senator on this floor, if there is any pretense for saying that this amendment provides for a private claim. These Indians are as much entitled to this pay, by our laws, as our own soldiers. It is a provision for past services; and the report which has been made on this subject from the Department, will show that these services were valuable. These Indians were regularly called into the service by General Gaines.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that the amendment can be received, as it is merely an appropriation to meet expenses incurred by the Government in employing these Indians, and not yet paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriation for medical and hospital department of the Army:

To enable the President of the United States to procure the surrender of the patent issued to William T. G. Morton on the 12th day of November, 1846, for his discovery of the anæsthetic properties of sulphuric ether, $100,000.

Mr. SMITH. I rise to a point of order. I object to the introduction of this amendment, on the ground that it is a private claim. It is the subject of a petition to the House of Representatives. In the House of Representatives it has been referred to a select committee, and that committee have not yet reported.

Mr. BORLAND. I believe they have reported.

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; but Dr. Morton has prepared a report, which, it seems, they have caused to be printed. I have been here watching this subject the whole session, and—

Mr. BADGER. I rise to a point of order. Is this discussion in order? I thought the Senator from Arkansas was entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut rose to a point of order. He will state his point of order, and not go into a discussion of the merits of the question.

Mr. SMITH. I do not intend to go into its merits; but I shall have something to say about the merits of the proposition, if necessary. I contend that this is a private claim. It is not insisted that it is founded in law, but in equity. A petition has been presented to the House of Representatives, and that House has appointed a select committee on the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if the Senator from Connecticut is at liberty to discuss the subject?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. SMITH. My point of order is that this is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has read the amendment, and he considers that there is no question but that it is for the benefit of an individual; but inasmuch as it proposes merely that the Government shall purchase a patent for its use, it cannot be considered a private claim under the rule, and therefore the Chair decides that the amendment is in order.

A long debate ensued upon the amendment, in which Messrs. BORLAND, SMITH, BADGER, GWIN, SHIELDS, HALE, DOUGLAS, BRADBURY, WALKER, SOULE, MANGUM, TOUCEY, BROOKE, PRATT, MALLOY, SEWARD, and HUNTER participated. [This debate will be found in the Appendix.] The amendment was finally rejected, by a vote of yeas 17, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Borland, Brooke, Clemens, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morton, Shields, Soule, Stockton, Sumner, Walker, and Weller—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Dawson, Downs, Felch, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, King, Mangum, Meriwether, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—28.

Mr. DOWNS. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For continuing the hydrographical and topographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may lead to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation, $50,000.

The PRESIDENT. Is that reported by a committee?

Mr. DOWNS. It is recommended by the Department of War, and the estimate is furnished by the Secretary of War and Topographical Bureau. It is to continue a work already commenced.

Mr. HUNTER. There is a provision in relation to that matter in the river and harbor bill, which has passed the House to-day.

Mr. DOWNS. I think that cannot be the case. I am inclined to believe there is some mistake in that, because the bill, as it left the Senate, had no such provision in it. An appropriation was made a few years ago for this work, but it is now exhausted. This is recommended by the Topographical Bureau, after giving a detailed account of the progress of the work, and also by the Secretary of War. I have the estimate.

The PRESIDENT. Does the amendment conform to the estimate?

Mr. DOWNS. Yes, sir; exactly. I will read the report of the Secretary of War made in January last, on the subject:

“WAR DEPARTMENT, January 20, 1852.
“In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, dated December, 1851, that the Secretary of the Department of War communicate to the Senate any reports which have been received in reference to the inundations of the Mississippi, and to state whether any further appropriation is required to complete the surveys and investigation heretofore furnished, I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the Chief Topographical Engineer, accompanied by the reports of Lieutenant Colonel Long, of the Topographical Engineers, and of Mr. Charles Ellet, civil engineer, submitting an estimate of $50,000 for the further prosecution of the investigation in reference to the inundations of the Mississippi river.”

This is signed by the Secretary of War, and directed to the President of the Senate.

Lieutenant Long, in his report, limits himself to an exposition of what has been done by Captain Humphrey's command, and of what is not required to be done. He also enters into the question of the funds necessary for the future operations. From this the estimate is now submitted of $50,000 for the ensuing fiscal year, for the further prosecution of the investigation in reference to the inundations of the Mississippi.

I will state that some years ago this survey was suggested to, and approved by the Government, and an appropriation of $50,000 was made for the purpose of surveying the whole delta of the Mississippi, to see if it were possible that a plan could be devised to prevent the great inundations which occur there, and which are becoming more and more destructive every year. In the first instance a preliminary report was made by a board of engineers, giving the results of a reconnaissance and general view of the work, with suggestions of what ought to be done, showing the necessity for a complete survey of that portion of the river. It was a mere preliminary report. After that two commissions were organized, one of the Topographical Engineers, with Colonel Long at its head, to survey the delta proper and the shores of the Mississippi; and another, under a civil engineer—Mr. Ellet—whose special duty it was to examine the mouths of the Mississippi. They have made exceedingly interesting and valuable reports. So far as the mouth of the Mississippi is concerned, I suppose the subject has been thoroughly investigated by Professor Ellet, and the appropriation no longer extends to that branch of the work. Colonel Long has made a report showing the progress of his work, which is also exceedingly interesting; but there is a large portion of the work which was originally suggested by the preliminary examination which yet remains to be done. This applies altogether to the topographical survey. It is a work of great interest. It has been only partially executed. The proper authorities—both the chief of the Board of Engineers and the Secretary of War—recommend the appropriation. If there ever was an appropriation which should be made this is one. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes not counted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have been permitted to use an amendment which was prepared by the chairman of the Committee on Finance. It is to do an act of justice to one of the executive departments of the Government, by making a little increase in the salaries of the clerks in the Quartermaster's Department. It is to allow the chief clerk in that Department $1,700 salary, two clerks, $1,600, and one clerk $1,400. The Quartermaster General has recommended it. I have his letter before me.

The PRESIDENT. That will not answer. The recommendation must be from the head of a Department.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance never acted upon that. The amendment was prepared in pursuance of the letter of the Quartermaster General, but the committee did not act upon it.

The PRESIDENT. To be in order it requires either to be estimated for by the head of a Department or to be reported from a committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is just as much in order as various propositions which have been made to increase salaries in the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I have an amendment to propose, which depends for its adoption upon the good faith of Congress and upon the importance of the work. It is true the appropriation proposed is a large one. I shall make a brief statement in reference to the grounds upon which it may be made. It is to insert the following in the bill:

For the construction of Fort Delaware, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT. Is that reported from a committee?

Mr. BAYARD. It is not; but it is founded on an estimate from the War Department which I hold in my hand.

Mr. President, I ask for this appropriation on the ground that the good faith of the Government is pledged to the erection of the fort, and on the further ground that common justice to the defense of three States of this Union requires that it should be made. I have nothing to do with any other fortification, because this stands on a double ground. The ground of good faith is the one on which I mainly rely. During the war of 1812—on the 27th of May, 1813—the State of Delaware ceded to the United States Pea Patch Island, for the purpose of erecting forts, batteries, and fortifications for the protection of the river Delaware and the adjacent country, upon the express condition that they would not only erect, but maintain and keep up those fortifications at their expense. That was the condition of the cession of the soil and jurisdiction over it. The United States accepted the cession on those terms. They proceeded, after the war, to erect a fort on the island. Subsequent to its erection, it was, in 1828, destroyed by fire. After it was destroyed, no step was taken to rebuild it; and owing to the negligence of the agents of the Government, the title to the island became involved. A reason which was always assigned for no further appropriation was that there was an insecure and uncertain title. But that arose from the negligence of the General Government, and from the negligence of the General Government alone. The agents of the Government made no application to the State of Delaware for the title. They chose to entangle themselves by agreement after agreement and all sorts of neglect. Things remained in this way down to 1847, when the matter was brought, with the evidence of the title of the State of Delaware, before a tribunal competent to decide—chosen by the agreement of the party who claimed as against the United States and against the title of Delaware—and referred to one of the most distinguished lawyers of our country. The decision was in favor of the State of Delaware; and that was entirely settled.

The excuse, therefore, for the delay in complying with the pledged faith of the Government has been removed since 1847, a period of five years; but the first stone of that fortification has yet to be laid. You have embanked the island. It contains about ninety acres of valuable land. In its present condition, for other purposes, it is worth from $70,000 to $100,000. We have the right, beyond all controversy, in Delaware, if you do not comply with the condition imposed by the grant, to recover the island from you. I do not deny that there may be legal difficulties in reference to a suit, considering the Government as the owner of the property; but I think they can be overcome. We, in Delaware, want to know the determination of Congress—whether they mean to comply with their faith or not; and if they do not, we will see if we cannot assert our legal right to recover the island. That is the reason why I place this proposition before you. But I say further, if you refuse this appropriation, you are bound by every obligation of morals to recede the island without entering into a legal contest with Delaware; because the condition is as express in the act of cession as it can be. You have violated that condition by your neglect for fifteen years, and for a period of five years more, when, with no pretense, you have refused an appropriation for the fortification. So much for the question of good faith; now for the importance of the work.

The island is situated immediately opposite the mouth of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which is the great link of communication through which, in case of war, the whole coasting trade of your country must pass from the Chesapeake Bay. It is the sole defense of the States of New Jersey, Delaware, and a part of Pennsylvania; and the sole sufficient defense of the city of Philadelphia, in the case of war, against the incursions of a foreign enemy commanding a fleet of steamers; for as to Fort Mifflin, it is a little work, which, though it might avail against one or two sailing vessels, could not possibly restrain the advance of even an ordinary fleet of steamers. The position of the island is such that works erected there would render it impossible for any fleet to advance up the Delaware. By it you may protect the whole coast, both of New Jersey and of Delaware, and obtain a new means of controlling the possibility of an enemy taking possession of your breakwater at the mouth of the bay, and maintaining it during a war as they did during the last war. You also secure the impossibility of an enemy's attacking the most valuable powder establishment in the country—so valuable that during the war of 1812, through its whole progress, you had four thousand volunteers stationed in the State of Delaware for their protection, because they were absolutely necessary for your purpose; and now they are far more important and extended than they were then.

I do not mean to go further into any argument. I only wanted to bring the matter fairly before the Senate. But I submit that there is no constitutional objection in the way of this appropriation. The faith of the Government is pledged for the maintenance of the fort. That is the great ground on which the appropriation is asked. I have nothing to do with your policy as to whether you will make appropriations for other fortifications or not. I suppose that the Government of the United States, when it pledges its faith, is not going to break it either to an individual or to a State. I am aware that the State of Delaware has but a small vote in both Houses of Congress. I am aware, of course, that her influence is commensurate only with her vote; but I do hope and believe that other States will look to this, that if the United States can break their faith with a small State, they may hereafter break it with a large State; and the principle of bad faith in any Government can only tend to its disgrace and injury. I therefore ask the Senate to agree to this appropriation, because a policy prevails in the other House not to go on with a system of fortification improvements that originated with the Government; that, though the United States have erected works, which are not yet completed, for the defense of New York; though they have erected works on other points of the sea-board, the whole coast of Delaware, the State of New Jersey, and the city of Philadelphia stand undefended by a single work, and that, too, when the Government holds the soil ceded to it by the State of Delaware on the pledge that it would erect the work for which I ask the appropriation. I cannot conceive that a stronger case could be presented. It does not stand on any system of policy. It commends itself to Congress because it is founded upon the express pledge of the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. We have a whole page of estimates for fortifications. If we adopt one, we may put the fortification bill on this bill. I hope we shall not commence with that at this hour of the night upon the Army bill. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is a great deal of force in what the honorable Senator from Delaware has said in relation to this point. It is one of the most important points on the Atlantic sea-board; but it is a part of the general national defenses, and I regret to say that it seems that these defenses are about to be wholly abandoned. I should vote for this amendment most cheerfully, only it ought to be connected with a great many other points that are equally exposed and require equal defenses. The question with the Committee on Military Affairs was whether we would embarrass this bill with this necessary and essential subject, or wait until the next session when we could take it up and systematize it. We finally concluded that we could not dispose of the question this session.

I would be glad to vote for this appropriation, but I wish to vote for it only in connection with other points equally necessary.

Mr. BAYARD. I admit that the argument of the Senator from Illinois would be all-powerful if the amendment rested simply upon the importance of the work; but the difference between this and others is, that the faith of the Government is pledged for the erection of this fort. That is entirely thrown out of view in the argument of the Senator. You cannot avoid the terms upon which Delaware, small as she is, ceded the jurisdiction of the island to you, except on the principle of breaking the faith of the Government, after the grant is executed. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I want my State to know your determination.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am reluctant to say a word at this time upon the subject of the defenses of the Delaware. I do not know that I would have introduced it myself at this late period of the session; but as it has been introduced by my honorable friend, [Mr. BAYARD,] and as the State of New Jersey has a deep interest in the question, a duty seems to devolve upon me, as one of her representatives, to say a word or two in favor of this proposition to reconstruct the fort on Pea Patch Island, in the Delaware river. I was not at all surprised to see a disposition on the part of Senators to vote down this appropriation almost without a hearing. Sir, Delaware and New Jersey are amongst the smallest States in this Union. When I look around this august Senate, I perceive that those who, like myself, represent the smaller States of this Confederacy, are but a handful when compared with the rest of this body; but, sir, this will not deter me from the effort to have justice done upon this occasion to the smaller States. In truth, it is my chief inducement to rise and say a word in behalf of those States. I hope and expect that an appeal to your magnanimity will not be in vain. We hope from that magnanimity what we cannot expect from your fears. Although these States are comparatively of small geographical dimensions, Senators will remember that whilst we represent small States of the Union, we are delegates from the Old Thirteen. Mr. President, when I advert to the Old Thirteen, I cannot forget that New Jersey suffered as much in the fearful struggle for independence as any other State, and that the part she took in that contest was as meritorious as that of any other State. Sir, it may be safely assumed that New Jersey was the battle-field of the Revolution; and it is not too much to say that, upon her soil, the battle of independence was fought and won. Does not this entitle her defenses to some consideration from Congress, especially when you remember how small an amount of all the appropriations of Congress at this session, as well as other sessions, will inure to her advantage, whilst the interest of the other States has been so much your care and concern? Sir, since the adoption of the Constitution, there has been no State admitted into this Union, with the exception, perhaps, of one, of smaller dimensions than my own State. The equality supposed by our fathers to have been obtained by that Constitution, has been proved by experience to be more nominal than real. By commanding majorities in the other House of Congress, the larger States are all potential in this Government; but we do not complain of this. It was nominated in the bond, and all the obligations assumed by New Jersey, she has, and will redeem, cost what it may.

Your appropriations are made for commerce and navigation, and even for agriculture, without a murmur; but when we attempt to speak here of the other great interests of New Jersey, we can scarcely get a hearing. Those interests which my constituents hold very important, as connected with State and national defense, are not permitted to be introduced into Congress without opposition. Whilst you have given to commerce, and to navigation, and to agriculture, the highest possible encouragement, what have you done, comparatively, for all other interests? To navigation you have given the exclusive navigation of your ten thousand miles of sea coast, and a costly navy to attend upon it, and protect it wherever it goes. To agriculture you have given the best and cheapest lands in the world. Having refused to aid us in the development of our resources for defenses, the least we can expect from you is, that you will redeem your pledged word, and erect this fort. We are told that it is too late in the session. Sir, it is never too late to do good or to act justly. We do not ask this as a mere boon. We say that Delaware and New Jersey have an indisputable claim upon the Government to build this fort, and to protect the Delaware river in every possible way against hostile incursion. We are, to be sure, small States—we have but few men at arms—we are weak—we are quite helpless, on the Delaware against an enemy. One steamer may now come, unharmed, up the Delaware to Philadelphia and Camden, and on their way may kindle all the barns and dwelling-houses on both shores in flames. With the war-speeches of grave and sedate Senators yet tingling in our ears, who will deny the possibility of such an occurrence? I feel and know the necessity for such or other defenses, and I say that it is time you redeemed your pledge to build that fort. You received a good title for the land upon the consideration that you should build a fort. For five years you have been in possession, under a good title, and for five long years you have neglected to fulfill your pledged word; and now, for the first time, we come and ask that you would fulfill your promise. We cannot compel—we entreat you, in the names of New Jersey and Delaware—we appeal to you, in consequence of their revolutionary services—in consequence of their valuable and unflinching services in the formation of the present Constitution. Your encouragement of commerce, under that Constitution, has built up on our borders large and wealthy cities, and has annihilated our foreign commerce. With one of the best sea-ports on the coast we have no foreign commerce. Your Treasury books will show that with eighty thousand tons engaged in the coasting trade, we have no foreign trade. This amount of tonnage engaged in the coasting trade shows our facilities for commerce; and yet, such has been the result of your policy, as to make all our commercial advantages inure to the benefit of other States. Notwithstanding, we have submitted to this inevitable result without a murmur, and have sustained the present Constitution with unflinching fidelity, as we aided in establishing it. Now, is it too much for us to ask, by this amendment, that you fulfill the pledge which you made to build the fort upon land granted to you for that purpose by the State of Delaware?

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to make another remark on the importance of having this fort erected. The island, as I stated, contains about ninety acres, and lies midway in the channel of the Delaware, between the States of New Jersey and Delaware, and directly opposite the mouth of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal. In the event of a war, there being no defenses there, except the slight ones at Fort Mifflin, forty-five miles above it, the island could be taken possession of by the enemy; and if he did take possession of it and cast up field-works, you would find it almost impossible to dislodge him. It is perfectly capable of being made the residence of five thousand or ten thousand men; and in the hands of an enemy you would have no means of assailing it successfully, for he could connect himself with his vessels and have the means of harassing and utterly devastating both States, and also of attacking Philadelphia.

I will mention the basis of the estimate. The recommendation is that $200,000 can be most judiciously expended. The whole amount of the estimate for the construction of the fort is $530,000; and the reason why the sum named in the amendment can be most judiciously expended arises from the fact, as one of the engineers has stated, that wherever a work is to be constructed, the larger the appropriation at the time the less proportion the contingencies bear to it; and it is always sound economy not to make too small a partial appropriation.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken resulted—yeas 19, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bayard, Borland, Brodhead, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Spruance, Stockton, Walker, and Weller—19.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradbury, Charlton, Clarke, Downs, Felch, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Smith, Underwood, and Wade—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken on all the amendments together. I would except the one in relation to Fort Delaware, but as we have just had the yeas and nays upon it, I will not.

Mr. MANGUM. I desire to except that amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see that any practical good can result from reserving it. We have just had the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. MANGUM. I see no recommendation for such an appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. But the Senate have just decided it.

Mr. MANGUM. I know that.

The PRESIDENT. It is not a matter for discussion. A Senator can ask to have the question taken on all the amendments separately, if he desires it. If there be no objection, the question will be taken upon all the amendments together, with the exception of the one mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina.

All the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one mentioned, were concurred in.

On the question to concur in the amendment, "For the construction of Fort Delaware, $200,000,"

Mr. MANGUM asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Borland, Brodhead, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Spruance, Stockton, Walker, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradbury, Bright, Brooke, Charlton, Chase, Clarke, Davis, Downs, Felch, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Norris, Seward, Smith, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, and Wade—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I renew the amendment which, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I withdrew when in Committee of the Whole:

And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the claims of the State of Florida, for the services of her troops, under the act of February 27, 1851, by the provisions of the statute for the settlement of the claims of Virginia, for like services, as prescribed by this act.

That was prepared by the Committee on Military Affairs, since it was offered this afternoon; and it is placing Florida upon a footing with Virginia and other States which have been legislated for.

Mr. DAWSON. The committee ordered the report to be made. The amendment which was withdrawn this morning went to a greater extent than the committee intended. This is in precise conformity to the one which passed for the State of Virginia. It prescribes the same rules that are to be followed in the case of Virginia.

Mr. HUNTER. I make no objection to that.

Mr. BRIGHT. This is in substance the same amendment which was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. It was then withdrawn.

Mr. BRIGHT. It comes from the Senator from Florida alone, and is not recommended by any committee. That is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. The same proposition was before the Committee on Military Affairs; but that committee rejected it, at least so the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS,] a member of that committee, stated to me; and he told me, if I would appeal to him, he would so state. I understood the honorable Senator from Florida, when he presented the amendment before, to state that the money had already been appropriated.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. And that all that was required was authority from the General Government to entitle Florida to pay the money.

Mr. WELLER. To receive it.

Mr. BRIGHT. No; I understand that the money has been appropriated to the State of Florida, but that legislation is now necessary in order to give Florida the right to pay it out. I understood the Senator from Florida to take that ground.

Mr. MALLORY. The explanation is simple. To reimburse Florida for the expenses of suppressing hostilities in 1849, Congress passed an act granting $75,000. In adjusting the claims of Florida for the money paid, the accounting officers were compelled to pay her troops less money than the same description of troops in the Army are entitled to by law. It was suggested by the accounting officers that this was unjust, and a resolution to remedy it was prepared under their direction, and submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. A member of that committee returned the resolution to me, saying that it covered too much ground, and suggested to me to prepare one placing Florida on the same ground as other States, viz: paying her mounted volunteers eight dollars a month. I understand that is the whole ground of the amendment. It simply places Florida in that respect on an equality with other States.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is said that there will be an end of time; but I doubt whether there will ever be an end of the claims that Florida will present for money to pay for this class of demands which they allege they have against the Treasury of the United States. There has been more money appropriated out of the public Treasury to pay claims in Florida, arising from Indian hostilities and various other modes and forms, than in any other little State in the United States.

I confess I do not understand this claim, and for that reason I am unwilling to vote for it. I am willing to undertake to pay claims in Florida upon the same principle that we have paid claims in Virginia, by an act of Congress passed for the relief of Virginia; but they may be very different cases, and rest upon very different foundations. I say, I do not profess to understand this case. It may be just; but if it were so, why did the Committee on Military Affairs decide against it? If it be a just claim, why has it not been paid long since? Various applications have been made to Congress from time to time by Florida to pay this class of claims; and I confess frankly, that I suspect all these claims, and am inclined to believe that they have not merit in them.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, if the honorable Senator from Indiana had given one single reason why this amendment should not be adopted, I would submit at once. He says he suspects this claim. Why, sir, I understand that the amendment has been prepared by the Military Committee. It has certainly been prepared by one member of that committee, and only one could prepare it. He drew it up and submitted it to me, and I had so much confidence in his judgment, that I did not take the trouble to read it through. This is not the same amendment which I prepared with the consent of one of the Auditors of the Treasury, and offered this morning.

It is said that Florida has received a great deal of money from the Treasury. I deny it, sir. But when she gets a thousandth part from the scrapings of the Treasury, which the great West (which the Senator from Indiana in part represents) gets, then we may come here and plead guilty of getting too much. When Florida gets paid a thousandth part of her just claims for which she is now contending, then she may be open to the imputation of getting something from the United States. This Government engaged years ago to remove the savage tribes of Indians from Florida, who had kept the State in consternation and terror for over ten years; and we repeatedly called out our troops, whom the Government of the United States was pledged in honor and faith to pay; and when we ask to be paid for them, we are answered, that we have received too much money for this description of claims. Is that the way to treat a claim presented here by a sovereign State? Why, you have voted amendment after amendment of this sort to other States, and why should you deny it to Florida?

When the gentleman says he suspects the amendment, let him point out where any suspicion upon it lies? These accounts are now before the accounting officers of the Treasury, and it has been suggested to us by these officers to prepare some such proposition as this; that justice required it, and the moment it was passed they would pay the money.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I regret very much that this little amendment has elicited any discussion. It is a very simple question. By the act of 1851 there were $75,000 appropriated for the reimbursement of Florida for moneys advanced and paid by that State, and for obligations incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in 1849. These obligations were incurred by Florida in calling out her troops for the purpose of suppressing these hostilities. The difficulty has arisen as to the difference between the pay of cavalry and mounted men. If Florida had paid her cavalry as mounted men, there would have been no difficulty; but the Comptroller, in the settlement of the accounts, thought that he was bound by the act of 1836, which provided that the troops called out for the suppression of Indian hostilities in the Florida war should be paid as infantry. Florida called out mounted men, and she, under her State laws, paid them as cavalry—paid them at the rate of eight dollars per month, instead of seven dollars per month, the pay of infantry. It is therefore simply intended by this amendment to reimburse Florida for the additional dollar per month which she has paid to those men. It is not asking of the Senate to add at this time one dollar to the appropriation bill, but it is simply to apply one dollar per month out of the $75,000 appropriated in 1851, to pay these troops as mounted men.

I regret exceedingly that the honorable Senator from Indiana should have thought proper on this occasion to make what I consider a fling at Florida.

Mr. BRIGHT. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. MORTON. It is true that the Indian war in Florida cost this Government an immense amount of money; but that has been no fault of the people of Florida. Forty millions have been expended in that war; not for the benefit of the people of Florida, but for the benefit of the Army of the United States, and the hangers-on of that Army. I have never seen ten citizens of the State of Florida who were benefited $1,000 by the Florida war. Many of the citizens of that State lost all their property by the war. The expenditure of $40,000,000, part of which came from those people, did not inure to their benefit, but to the benefit of the Army and its hangers-on.

Mr. RUSK. There is another ground upon which this appropriation, or rather this diversion of an existing appropriation, ought, as it seems to me, to be granted. By the law under which the accounts were settled at the Auditor's office, there was a distinction drawn between these and other troops; and that distinction amounts to the pitiful sum of one dollar a month. Now, the proposition is to put Florida upon an equality with every other State in the Union. The money has been appropriated, and is now in the Treasury, and this is merely to allow the money to be paid to Florida in the same manner that other States have been paid.

It has been said that the Florida war has cost the United States a great deal. That is true, sir; but it has cost Florida more. It has broken up her settlements. Her people have lost nearly all their property. Nay, more; many of them—men, women, and children—who were entitled to protection by the strong arm of this Government, lost their lives. It seems to me that it is perfectly reasonable and eminently just to put these troops on the same footing with similar troops who served in other States.

Mr. SHIELDS. I merely wish to state that the same principle has been applied to Virginia, Georgia, South Carolina, and other States.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, whether, in the case of Virginia, Georgia, and South Carolina, the United States have paid mounted men at the rate of eight dollars or seven dollars per month?

Mr. SHIELDS. Where the mounted men were mustered as such, they were paid seven dollars a month; but in Georgia, where they were mustered as cavalry, we have made a provision similar to this which is proposed now to be made for Florida.

Mr. PRATT. The true question, in my view, is this: Under the then existing laws of the United States all soldiers engaged in this war were entitled to receive only at the rate of seven dollars per month. The State of Florida paid to some, if not all, of the soldiers whom she employed in that war, eight dollars per month. She, therefore, exceeded by one dollar per month the limitation prescribed by the act of the Federal Government. It would give me great pleasure to vote with my honorable friends from Florida on this question, if the same principle has been applied to any one of the cases which we have incorporated into this bill. Have we in any one of these cases gone beyond the act of 1836? If the United States have gone beyond that, then I am willing to vote for this claim. Are the cases which have been referred to analogous to the one presented for the consideration of the Senate?

Mr. MORTON. I beg leave to say a word in reply to the honorable Senator from Maryland. The act of 1836, as I said before, provided that the troops engaged in the suppression of Indian hostilities in Florida should be paid as infantry. I think that the Comptroller of the Treasury made an error in applying this act to the payment of troops called out in 1849. I think the act of 1836 had expired; or, at all events, the act of 1851, expressly provided that Florida should be reimbursed the money which she had paid, and the obligations which she had entered into for the suppression of the Indian outbreak in 1849. I think, therefore, with due deference to the opinion of the Comptroller, that he erred in making the act of 1836, which applied to the payment of troops engaged in 1836, applicable to the troops engaged in 1849, and paid under the act of 1851.

Mr. DAWSON. I will answer the interrogatory of the Senator from Maryland. Georgia advanced money to pay her troops at the rate of eight dollars per month, or one dollar per month more than the Government of the United States authorized her to pay. When Georgia called upon the Federal Government to reimburse her for the amount of money which she had paid, the United States fell short one dollar per month. But an amendment has been adopted to-day, on this bill, which provides that Georgia shall be reimbursed at the rate of eight dollars per month—the amount which she paid.

Mr. PRATT. Then, that amendment ought to be reconsidered, or this ought to be passed.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is proper that I should say, in justification of my objection to this claim, that the refusal of the Committee on Military Affairs to recommend it, is a sufficient objection to my mind to vote against it. Under the rule, unless a claim be estimated for or recommended by some standing committee of this body, it is not proper to place it upon a general appropriation bill. I am aware that the rule has been departed from in every appropriation bill that we have thus far considered. It is a very thankless task to oppose claims of this character, and I expect that I shall do much less in future than I have in times past in regard to them.

Mr. SHIELDS. My honorable friend shows that he is a great friend of economy. In this particular instance, he exhibits a very remarkable zeal. The Committee on Military Affairs did reject the claim when it came in originally, but since then the committee have reexamined the matter, and now they place this claim precisely where they have placed all the others, and have done for Florida what they have done for the other States—no more, and no less.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS. I now renew the amendment which I offered, and which was rejected by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It is to insert:

"For continuing the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may lead to determining the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation, $50,000."

I will state, in addition to what I said before, that this amendment is offered in pursuance of a recommendation of the head of the War Department; that it is necessary to carry out the work which has already been commenced, and that, in fact, the $50,000 already expended will be, in a great degree, useless if this additional appropriation be not made.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that this appropriation, originally, was made to guard against no ordinary evil. It was not to provide for an ordinary case. For nearly the half century that Louisiana has been in the Union, we have never asked any appropriation for this purpose. It was only after the sales of Government land extended up the Mississippi river, and the consequent extension of the levees, that, from some cause, in the years 1849, 1850, and 1851, a state of things was produced which never had existed before. There was a general inundation then of a large portion of this country. That which had been supposed to be reclaimed before was not free from it. From the very commencement of the settlements on the Mississippi, the citizens there, without the aid of the Government, had carried on this levee system, and had, to a great extent, protected their country out of the lands thus reclaimed by the State. The people themselves leveed their own lands. Your records show that the United States have received some $2,000,000 from the sales of lands thus reclaimed, without spending a dollar for their reclamation.

You will recollect, Mr. President, that in 1849 so great was this calamity that almost one half of New Orleans itself was overflowed. Under these circumstances, everybody admitted the necessity of doing something. The researches of science had not then, and they have not yet, pointed out the most effectual way. Different ideas have been suggested; but it has been concurred in by everybody that the ablest engineers that could be detailed by the Government, should be appointed for the purpose of making surveys of this delta, and, if possible, to solve the problem whether these inundations could be prevented, and if so, the best way of doing it. Engineers differed in opinion. Many of the most experienced entertained different views. Some preferred raising the levees, and stopping the water's running out. Others have supposed that the only effective way would be to change the system, and open new outlets instead of extending the levees. This is a matter of life and death, not only to Louisiana, but to a large portion of Arkansas, Missouri, and Mississippi.

The first board of engineers appointed made a general reconnaissance. They took a view of the river from near St. Louis extending down to the Gulf. They saw the vast extent of the work, and the great difficulties which were experienced. This enabled them to suggest the points of investigation. They concurred in making the preliminary report. The board was regularly organized, and the surveys were commenced. They have made progress in that work, but it is far from being completed. They have not even gone far enough yet to give a definite opinion as to the best modes in which works should be commenced.

The United States have made a large donation of these overflowed and swamp lands to Louisiana and other States, for the purpose of preventing inundation. They have already appropriated to Louisiana some 8,000,000 acres, which are now at the disposition of the State authorities. The State has, as yet, adopted no definitive plan for their reclamation, because these surveys have not been completed, and no man can yet indicate the best mode of improvement.

I ask, under these circumstances, whether it is not reasonable that this amount should be appropriated? This is a question of great importance. The United States are greatly interested in it, because they have a vast quantity of public lands to be benefited. The improvement of this delta is very important to nearly all the commerce of the Union. These inundations are dangerous to all the commerce connected with New Orleans. In regard to a subject of so much interest, when a system has already been commenced, it seems to me that it would really be a hard measure of justice to Louisiana, Mississippi, and all the other States interested, to stop in the midst of the work in this way. I have not been unreasonable. This is the only amendment that I have offered to this or any other appropriation bill for Louisiana, or that section in which I am interested. I have let these bills take their course. But, sir, this is a question of life and death with my constituents. A large portion of the finest agricultural lands in the world in Louisiana is liable to be overflowed every year, and a great deal of it has been overflowed for three successive years. We wish to see whether it is not possible to enable us to avoid it. Is it not reasonable that the attempt should be made? The United States have undertaken the work, and now will they refuse to carry it on? Will they break down in the midst of it? I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. This is a very important matter. It is proposed now to continue this work which has been begun by the United States. It is deeply interesting, to be sure, to the citizens of New Orleans; but it is not only interesting to them, but to the whole valley of the Mississippi, and to the whole country. The overflows on the lower part of the Mississippi threaten not only to submerge a large extent of country of the most valuable lands in the United States, but also to take down some of the bayous there, and block up or injure, or perhaps destroy, the only port which the great valley of the Mississippi has. Under these circumstances, it is a matter of vast importance that the United States should go on with this work, to see whether some plans may not be adopted by which these inundations may be prevented. If some plan can be devised, immense benefits will result not only to the State of Louisiana, but to the valley of the Mississippi, and to the commerce of the whole country. The small expenditure asked is a mere drop in the bucket, compared with the great interests to be promoted by it.

Mr. SOULE. It will be expected that I should say something in connection with this amendment. I originated the measure two years ago, when an appropriation of $50,000 was made for the purpose of effecting this survey. Will not the Senate consider that, having gone into that investigation already, having begun such an important work, they are committed to see it out? Why, it must strike every member of this body that unless the appropriation which is required, in order to enable the Department to carry out that great survey, be made, the expenditure already incurred will be a total loss. Under such circumstances, the Senate, considering that they have already committed themselves by the original and initiatory appropriation, cannot, with propriety, recede from what they have done, but must carry out what they have begun. In other words, the fate of this amendment will decide the question whether or not the $50,000 already spent shall be squandered to no purpose. If that be the meaning of the Senate, then this amendment should be voted down; but if, on the contrary, the interest of the country, and the good faith with which the Government should prosecute every undertaking, when once gone into, should be sufficient considerations for granting the appropriation which is asked. I can hardly conceive of any reason which would induce any Senator to vote against the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that the river and harbor bill was the proper place for this provision. This bill should be confined to appropriations for the Army, and that was the reason why I would not vote upon it a scheme for fortifications, for they belong to another class of appropriation bills. I wish to keep the bill clear of all extraneous matter. But I am so anxious to get to a vote, that I will make no argument upon the subject.

Mr. DOWNS. The first appropriation for this object was made in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to this amendment, and it was at his suggestion that I proposed to put it on this bill in preference to any other. The work is being done under the direction of military officers, and, therefore, no place seems so appropriate as the Army appropriation bill. I call for the yeas and nays upon my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Borland, Bright, Brooke, Charlton, Chase, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Meriwether, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Sumner, and Weller—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bradbury, Brodhead, Clarke, Davis, Foot, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Seward, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were then ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time; and the amendments having been engrossed, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the Committee of Conference appointed on the Indian appropriation bill to meet a similar committee of the House of Representatives, have instructed me to report the result of their deliberations to the Senate, which is, that the Senate recede from their amendments to that bill which have been disagreed to by the House. In making this motion, Mr. President, I must be permitted to express the mortification which I experienced at the ignorance displayed by those who represented the other House on this committee of the subject-matter of our discussions—an ignorance that I fear, if permitted to rule the proceedings of that House, will prove disastrous to the best interests of the State I in part represent here.

The question submitted to the Committee of Conference, was the propriety of appropriating a contingent fund for the service of the Indian Department in California; a fund to dispatch messengers from one section of the Indian country to another, in an emergency; a fund to enable the Superintendent to hire an escort of mountain men to attend him in his visits to the hostile tribes, instead of calling for a detachment of the Army to accompany him, which latter course, if time permitted, I could show will cost four or five times the amount that would be required, if the Superintendent was permitted to hire his own escort. A single case will prove this. The Superintendent must keep his office at San Francisco, the great center of intelligence for the State. He is informed of Indian troubles near Los Angeles: Instead of going to the Army depot at Benicia, only thirty miles from San Francisco, and taking an escort from thence four hundred miles to Los Angeles, if permitted to hire an escort of mountain men, experienced in the habits of the Indians, he would go alone to Los Angeles, and there get his escort, visit the disturbed districts, perform his duty, and then dismiss the escort. This would save the expense of eight hundred miles transportation. Any one who has traveled in that country, will at once see what an enormous additional expense this transportation will add to the expedition. And if, as is most probable, there should be a collision with the Indians, of what service would these regular soldiers be in a contest with the mountain Indians? It would be like starting an ox-team after what is called in our country a jackass rabbit, as fleet, if not fleetier, than a greyhound. But all this additional expense leading to future deficiency bills, all of this exposed inefficiency to divert the other House from its pennywise and pound-foolish policy in regard to California, passes for nothing with those who control its deliberations.

Another item submitted to the Committee of Conference, was a fund to pay the expenses of the agents in traveling through these districts. They are not allowed a cent to travel from point to point, although the Indian territory in California is a thousand miles in extent, in a region where traveling is very expensive. If an agent hears of a collision or expected collision between the miners and Indians within the bounds of his district, requiring his immediate presence, he is not permitted to buy a horse, or pay for his subsistence, in going to the point of disturbance to execute the duty for which he was appointed. What protection can agents thus provided extend to the Indians? We have taken their acorns, grass-hoppers, fisheries, and hunting-grounds from them. The ponds where the wild fowl assembled in the winter, offering them for the time an abundant supply of food, is now the mining and agricultural region of our citizens. The Indian must perish from cold and hunger, if this Government does not interpose to save him. From his hunting-ground we export an annual average value of $60,000,000 in gold, and the revenue paid to the Treasury, from one port in California, exceeds $3,000,000 annually, and yet the miserable pittance of $120,000, to feed and protect these original inhabitants of the country, is refused and cut down $20,000, by the grossly unjust policy adopted by the other House. If this is to be the policy of this Government towards these people, it will form a dark page in our history, if it does not bring the vengeance of Heaven upon us as a nation.

I now move that the Senate recede from such of its amendments as have been disagreed to by the House.

The motion was agreed to.
So the bill was finally passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL, ETC.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. HAYES, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

An act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers; and

An act in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1853, and for other purposes;" that they asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that they had appointed Mr. Houston, Mr. Appleton of Massachusetts, and Mr. George W. Jones of Tennessee, managers at the same on their part.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and,

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was

Resolved, That they insist on their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the conferees, on the part of the Senate, be appointed by the President of the Senate.

And Mr. HUNTER, Mr. WELLER, and Mr. UNDERWOOD, were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask the Senate to take up the bill from the House of Representatives, which lies on the table, granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi river, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will go on with the appropriation bills. I want to take up the Post Office appropriation bill next. There is a bill from the House on the table, in which my constituents are interested. It is "An act making further provision for the satisfaction of Virginia military land warrants;" but I wish to go on with the appropriation bills to-night.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it will take but a few minutes to dispose of the bill which I wish to have taken up.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it will take some time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That bill will give rise to debate. I know a gentleman who has an amendment prepared to offer to it.

The PRESIDENT. The bill cannot be amended now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has never been read once.

The PRESIDENT. That is the very reason why it is not subject to amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can the bill be taken up now for action?

The PRESIDENT. The bill has not been read a first time. After it is read the first time, it requires unanimous consent to read it a second time on the same day.

The motion of Mr. BORLAND was agreed to; and the bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask that the bill may be read a second time now.

Mr. FISH. I am under the necessity of objecting to the second reading of the bill at this time.

Mr. BROOKE. I rise to a question of modesty.

Mr. BADGER. That is a novel question in this body.

Mr. BROOKE. I wish to put a bill upon its passage, to which there can be no objection. I call it a question of modesty because I have never had the assurance yet to get up here and demand or ask for the passage of any bill; and I now ask the Senate to take up the bill from the House of Representatives to amend an act entitled "An act for the discontinuance of the office of surveyor general in the several districts so soon as the surveys thereof can be completed, and for abolishing land offices in certain cases, and for other purposes."

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall go on with the appropriation bills.

The motion of Mr. BROOKE was not agreed to.

MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

The bill making further provision for the satisfaction of Virginia military land warrants was read, and passed to the second reading.

LAND DISTRIBUTION BILL.

Mr. FISH. I move to postpone the previous orders for the purpose of taking up the bill from the House of Representatives, "making grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," commonly known as Bennett's land distribution bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from New York will permit us to go on with the appropriation bills and dispose of them.

Mr. FISH. I would be very willing to give way to the Senator from Virginia, if I thought there would be another opportunity of getting up this bill. I have been trying for the last ten or twelve days to get an opportunity to call it up. I have yielded from day to day in order to allow the appropriation bills to pass, but discussions of all kinds have crept in till this late hour of the session, and now when I have an opportunity of taking the sense of the Senate, I really do not feel justified in yielding that opportunity.

Mr. SHIELDS. At this late hour on Saturday night, to take up a bill that will be discussed until the end of the session is, I think, a most extraordinary proceeding.

Mr. PRATT. Who will discuss it until the end of the session?

Mr. SHIELDS. I am prepared to enter into its discussion if it should be taken up.

Mr. FISH called for the yeas and nays on his motion; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brooke, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, Downs, Fish, Foot, Hale, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mangum, Miller, Morton, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Stockton, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Charlton, Chase, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mason, Meriwether, Norris, Rusk, Shields, Soule, Sumner, Toucey, and Walker—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move now to postpone the prior orders in order to take up the bill from the House "making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853."

Mr. GWIN. I think the naval appropriation bill has precedence.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; this was reported first.

Mr. HALE. I wish simply to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance if he proposes to take up the naval appropriation bill to-night?

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall be able to dispose of all the appropriation bills to-night.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported from the Committee on Finance, with an amendment, which was to add:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby authorized, whenever he shall deem it discreet, to dispense with the route agents now sent with the mails from New York to California, and in lieu thereof, to appoint not more than two resident agents to take charge of the mail service across the Isthmus to Panama, and to allow said agents, for salary and personal expenses, not exceeding $3,000 per year for each of said agents, which shall be paid out of the money annually appropriated for the transportation of the mails."

Mr. HUNTER. That amendment was recommended by the Postmaster General. It is a limitation on the number of agents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOULE. I propose the following amendment:

To enable the Postmaster General to contract for the transportation of the mail by steamboat from the Lake House to New Era, on the route No. 6116, from Donaldsonville to Washington, in the State of Louisiana, $7,000.

A few words will suffice to put the Senate in a position to judge of the merits of this amendment. There is a line known under No. 6,116 running from a place on the Mississippi river, called Donaldsonville, to a place in the interior of Louisiana, called Washington. The mail runs three times a week on that line. It has to cross three small lakes from the point designated as the Lake House, to the point where it meets the river going up to New Orleans. At this moment that mail is carried in open skiffs, and the dangers of navigation are such that there is no security for the mail, and least of all for the passengers. The small amount asked will enable the contractor to carry the mail through these three lakes three times a week in a safe manner, and so as to afford security to those passengers who may wish to go with the mail. The matter has been laid before the Postmaster General, but as he entertains some doubts whether he possesses authority under the act of 1845, he was prevented acting upon the proposal, although, from the conversation which I had with him, he seemed to approve of the arrangement. The amendment is proposed under the authority of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I hope it will meet with no opposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have an amendment to offer from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, by way of additional section:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General is authorized to contract with the Ocean Steam Navigation Company for one additional trip on the Havre line, and one additional trip on the Bremen line, until the expiration of their existing contracts, receiving and delivering mails at Southampton, Cowes, or Plymouth, as the Postmaster General may direct, according to such schedule as shall be prescribed by the Postmaster General, in order thereby to maintain through such lines and the Collins line, a regular weekly communication by American mail steamers between the United States and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; but the compensation for such additional trips shall not exceed the compensation allowed for each trip under the said existing contract: Provided, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to negotiate with the contractors for changing the terminus of the Havre line from Havre to Antwerp, in Belgium, and to make an agreement for such change if he shall think proper; but the increased compensation to be allowed for such change shall be limited to a pro rata allowance for the increased distance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have another amendment to offer as an additional section:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the route agents be, and the same is hereby, increased to $1,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this bill. It is the bill which has passed the House of Representatives, which we commonly refer to under the title of the Wheeling Bridge bill. It is for the purpose of preserving that important national structure from being taken down. The Senate will recollect that I asked them to take up the bill the other day as a separate bill; but that was refused me, and therefore I offer it as an amendment to this bill:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the bridges across the Ohio river at Wheeling, in the State of Virginia, and at Bridgeport, in the State of Ohio, abutting on Zane's Island in said river, are hereby declared to be lawful structures in their present position and elevation, and shall be so held and taken to be, anything in any law or laws of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the said bridges are declared to be, and are established post roads for the passage of the mails of the United States, and that the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company are authorized to have and maintain their said bridges at their present site and elevation; and the officers and crew of all vessels and boats navigating said river, are required to regulate the use of their said vessels and boats, and of any pipes or chimneys belonging thereto, so as not to interfere with the elevation and construction of said bridges."

Mr. BRADBURY. As the question presented by this amendment is one of some delicacy, in regard to which there is liability to misconception, I wish to say a few words. The honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, as well as myself, would have preferred a different bill from that embodied in this amendment. I think it important that the legislation of Congress on the subject of this bridge should assume such shape as to guard against all appearance of conflict with the Supreme Court, or of any attempt to overturn the decision it has made. Our action should be such that the popular, as well as the legal mind of the country, should be exposed to no misapprehension. If it is advisable for us to legislate to preserve this bridge in its present form and elevation, we can do so in a manner to avoid any erroneous conception as to what we attempt.

Under the law of the United States for the enrolling and licensing coasting vessels, all vessels so enrolled and licensed have the right to navigate the Ohio river, a public navigable stream, without impediment. The court found this bridge an obstruction, which impaired this right of free navigation, and therefore violated the law which, by necessary implication, forbids such obstruction. It was for violating this law that the bridge is held to be a nuisance. It is for violating the existing law for the regulation of commerce; but it is as competent for the Congress to modify this as any other law, and if we interpose to afford relief from the effect of carrying it out, the more appropriate course would seem to be to make such modification as will meet the exigency. This can be done by an act regulating the height of the chimneys of the boats navigating the river. It can be done in the exercise of unquestioned power, in the ordinary mode of legislation, and in a manner that could create no erroneous impression. I have felt disposed to interpose in this manner, and to sustain such an act for the reason that the bridge has been erected in good faith, under charters from the contiguous States, and affords great public convenience without being any very serious obstruction to navigation. If we should pass such a law for the regulation of the height of the chimneys of the steamers, the bridge would not obstruct the boats that conformed to it; and as it would be the duty of all to conform, there would then be no legal ground for complaint against the bridge, and the court would, on application, unquestionably modify its decree.

The chairman of the committee, [Mr. BUTLER,] who is now out of his seat, desired me to say, if the subject was called up in his absence, that he concurred substantially in the views which I have endeavored to express.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I was not in my seat when this amendment was offered, or I should have raised a question of order. I did not expect that so important a proposition as this would have been offered as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BADGER. I certainly gave notice to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania that I would offer it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I now recollect that the honorable Senator from North Carolina did mention to me that he intended to offer it as an amendment to this bill, but in the hurry and confusion of business it had escaped my recollection. I am opposed to this amendment. I feel bound to act in this case according to the instructions, legislative and judicial, of my own State. The history of the case now before the Senate is this: In 1848 the Attorney General of the State of Pennsylvania, before the bridge was completed, instituted proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States against this bridge. Those proceedings were prosecuted under the authority of the Legislature of Pennsylvania to final judgment. The following are the grounds upon which the Attorney General of Pennsylvania asked the Supreme Court to compel the company to abstain from erecting an obstruction to the navigation:

"1. That the Ohio river is a public highway leading to and from the ports of Pennsylvania, the free navigation whereof was a right by the law of nature and of nations, and secured by constitutional provisions and by compact between the States.

"2. That the right freely to navigate the river to and from her ports belonged to the citizens of Pennsylvania, and to all the citizens of the United States.

"3. That any obstruction to navigation was a violation of public law, constitutional right, and State compact, which the Supreme Court, as a court of equity, on complaint by an injured State, was bound to prohibit."

These are the grounds of complaint upon the part of Pennsylvania. The Ohio is a great public highway leading to and from the borders of Pennsylvania; and the citizens of that State have a right to its free navigation. This complaint was deliberately heard before the highest tribunal of the country. That tribunal is a coordinate and independent branch of this Government; and when the judgment of that court is properly rendered in a case where it has jurisdiction, it is final and conclusive. Now, what is the proposition here? It is to overturn and set aside the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. What right have you to do that? The Supreme Court, amongst other things, decided:

"1. The Ohio river is a highway of commerce between the States, free navigation whereof being secured by regulations of Congress, and by compact of Virginia and Kentucky with all the States of the Union, it cannot lawfully be obstructed under authority of any State.

"2. An obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio river is an injury to the commerce and public works of the State of Pennsylvania, for which she is entitled to redress by proceedings in equity in the Supreme Court of the United States.

"3. The Wheeling Bridge is a serious obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio river, and is a public nuisance.

"4. It obstructs the passage of the seven daily steam-packets between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, which carry one half of the trade and three fourths of the passengers on the Ohio river; the annual value of the merchandise and freight carried by them exceeds $35,000,000 in value, and the passengers over eighty thousand in number.

"5. The bridge is not ninety-two feet above the ground at any point; its highest point is not over the channel, and it is thirty feet lower at one end than at the other, so that the packets cannot pass in any stage of water without reducing the height of their chimneys, or lowering them in order to pass the bridge.

"6. It is clearly proved by science, and confirmed by practical skill and experience, that the present height of the packet chimneys is necessary, and that they cannot be reduced in length without serious injury to the speed and power of the vessel.

"7. The packet chimneys were as high as they now are before the erection of the bridge. Chimneys of equal and greater height are used on the ocean steamers, and the best packets of the eastern waters, the lakes, and the Mississippi.

"8. It is proved by science, experience, and the nature of things, that the packet chimneys cannot be lowered to pass the bridge, without imposing heavy expenses upon the packet, and endangering the safety of the vessel, and the lives of the passengers and crew.

"9. The defendants are required to relieve navigation from obstruction by elevating the bridge to the height of one hundred and eleven feet above low-water level for the width of three hundred feet over the channel.

"10. This can be done, and the bridge, after all expenditures are made, will yield a fair profit to the stockholders."

These are the points which were adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States. It decided that the citizens of Pennsylvania had a right to the free and unobstructed navigation of the Ohio river, and that the deprivation of that right was an injury to their ports and their citizens. Therefore, I ask, what right have we to interfere with the decision of the Supreme Court? This is not the place where an appeal can be heard from that decision. The case is not to be tried here. The Supreme Court have decided that those having the right of water navigation cannot be interfered with by those who have the right of commerce by land, for it is secured to them by compact.

The resolution in the Congress of the Confederation, dated the 12th of May, 1786, is as follows:

"Resolved, That the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, be, and they are hereby, declared to be common highways, and be forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said Territory as to the citizens of the United States, and those of any other States that may be admitted into the Confederation, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor." — Journal of Congress, 1786, page 637.

By the sixth article of the Constitution this engagement of the Confederation became as valid against the United States as under the Confederation. In 1789, Kentucky was admitted into the Union upon certain terms and conditions, among which was the following:

"That the use and navigation of the river Ohio, so far as the territory of the proposed State, or the territory that shall remain without the limits of this Commonwealth lies thereon, shall be free and common to the citizens of the United States."

This bridge was erected by a private corporation. A private corporation, therefore, interferes with the free navigation of the Ohio river and with the commerce of that river. The question is, whether a private corporation can so erect a bridge over one of the great channels of commerce in this country, as to obstruct that commerce. It is said that you have the right to establish post roads, and the power to do this is sought to be established under the power granted by the Constitution to Congress, to establish post offices and post roads. But, sir, have you a right so to carry out one item of this Constitution as to invade the Constitutional rights of citizens under another clause of the Constitution?

It is not my purpose to argue this question at length. It would be useless and unnecessary to do so at this late hour of the evening, and at this late period of the session, even if I had physical strength, after a twelve hours' session, to do so. It has been fully heard before the competent tribunal—the Supreme Court of the United States—and that tribunal has decided that the rights of citizens of Pennsylvania have been invaded. Now, sir, suppose that the Supreme Court of the United States were to decide that your title to your farm was a good one, what right would the Congress of the United States have to interfere and say in opposition to the decision of the Court that your rights could be invaded?

I only state the points in the case, for I have no time or strength to do more. I make this opposition to the proposition, under the instructions of the Legislature of my own State, which I consider binding in this case. In 1844, when a bridge was first proposed to be erected over the Ohio from Wheeling, the Legislature of Pennsylvania instructed her Senators and requested her Representatives in Congress to vote against the construction of any bridge at any place which would interfere with the navigation of the Ohio river. In 1850 a similar resolution of instruction was passed. In 1851 she repeated those instructions. The Canal Commissioners of Pennsylvania have declared that the bridge was an obstruction to the free navigation of the river, and injurious to the commerce and revenues of Pennsylvania. The Supreme Court of the United States has sustained this complaint. It has declared these complaints to be well founded; and I think, therefore, that this legislation is altogether out of place. There is no urgent necessity for the adoption of this measure at this time. At any rate, the judgment of the Supreme Court cannot be carried into effect, and execution had thereon, until February next. That being the case, why should we have so important a question decided upon as an amendment to this bill at this late hour of the night, and this late period of the session? Let it go over to the next session. It is a delicate and important question, and I ask that the subject be passed over until the next session. Let the bill which came from the House lie on the table until December next, when we can consider it deliberately.

I have said that this is a delicate and important question. It is one which cannot be argued fully this evening. I do not feel at liberty to go into it at length, nor have I all the papers and documents before me. Besides, my colleague has been unable to remain in the Senate Chamber this evening, and has gone home. We have now been in session nearly twelve hours. He is not here, and I presume he desires to be heard. If we pass the subject over until December next, this company will not be injured, and we can then deliberately and carefully examine and decide this delicate and important question between sovereign States, between two of the old and venerable States of this Union. We can then decide upon it in a much better manner than we can now.

Mr. BADGER. If, Mr. President, this question has been brought before the Senate at an unreasonable time, I wish the Senate to bear me witness that, if there be any fault about it, it is the fault of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and not mine. I asked the Senate, days ago, to take up this bill for consideration. If it had then been taken up, the Senator could have been heard, and we all should have had an opportunity to discuss it. The Senator objected to it then, and objected to it on the ground of the absence of his colleague. His colleague was in the Chamber in three minutes after the Senate had disposed of the question.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is true that I objected to it a few days ago, but I submit now to the Senate, and to the honorable Senator from North Carolina, whether, with the appropriation bills then pressing upon us, it was a much more suitable moment to consider it than it is now?

Mr. BADGER. Then it results in this: It is never reasonable to consider it. The bill which I now offer as an amendment came from the House. It was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. I asked, under their instructions, to have it taken up and considered. The honorable Senator objected because his colleague was absent, and upon his objection the Senate refused to take it up for consideration. That there might be no ground for surprise, I then gave notice to the honorable Senator that, when the Post Office appropriation bill came up, I should offer this amendment. I have now offered it at the first seasonable moment. I ask if I have been at fault because it is offered at the close of the session?

The Senator now says that he wants it laid over until the next session; and suggests that his colleague has gone away, being no longer able to stay here. I have the highest regard for both the honorable Senators from Pennsylvania, and, if it were a question of courtesy, I should be willing to postpone it for five years, in order to accommodate them. But that is not the case here. The Senator says we should postpone this until the next session; that the decree of the court is not to be executed till February next. But does not the honorable Senator know that, if this measure goes over until the next session, it will not be passed in time? He must know that the Senate never enters into the discussion of any business until after the Christmas holidays. If the bill should then pass, what would be the consequence? Proceedings would have to be instituted in the Supreme Court for the purpose of arresting the taking down of the bridge. It is possible that the bill might be got through in time; but it is too serious a matter to risk in that way.

Now as to the character of the proposition. The honorable Senator speaks of it as a bill to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court. Sir, I deny it utterly and absolutely. It is plain and apparent upon the face of the bill that it is no such thing. What is the reversal of the judgment of a court? It is to declare, by a superior tribunal, that, as the law stood when the court pronounced the judgment, that judgment was erroneous; and upon that ground should never have been pronounced. Does this propose any such thing? No, sir. It assumes the judgment of the court to be right, and the first section of the amendment declares that, if the Wheeling Bridge (which the court have pronounced to be a nuisance) is a nuisance, in consequence of anything contained in any law or laws of the United States, that law or those laws shall be put out of the way, and shall not be considered as affecting this bridge.

What does the second section of the amendment propose? To make the bridge a post road, a public highway; and then, in the next place, it directs that vessels navigating that stream shall regulate their smoke-pipes in such a manner as not to interfere with this bridge. Will any gentleman undertake to tell me what part of this undertakes to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court? It is just this case: Suppose a judgment had been rendered in the courts of the United States, awarding a certain sum of money to the United States, and directing that that money should be paid next February, could we not pass an act releasing that debt? It would prevent the execution of the judgment; because we, as the owners, release the debt. But does it reverse the judgment? So here; do we undertake to say that the judgment was wrong when it was delivered? Not at all. But we say this: if the judgment was right, in consequence of any law of ours, then, as far as this bridge is concerned, we repeal the law. Now, if the honorable Senator cannot perceive the difference between this and reversing the judgment, I am very sorry for it, but I cannot help it. It appears to me that the distinction is perfectly plain. If there be anything in the case beyond the law of Congress—if there be anything, as the Senator says, in a compact, in virtue of which the bridge is a nuisance, and must be put down, why, the high tribunal which has this case before it, will, upon application, so decide, and the bridge must go down. But we assume no jurisdiction or control over that. We only assume jurisdiction to alter our own laws. Then, the whole matter is reduced to this: Is it expedient? Shall that noble structure go down? Shall seven steamboats, out of the three hundred and fifty navigating the Ohio, be put to the trouble of reducing their smoke-pipes five or six feet, so as to be able to pass under the bridge? That is the question of expediency.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I merely wish to make one observation in reply to the Senator from North Carolina. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that this bridge is a nuisance, injurious to the rights of the citizens of Pennsylvania. Now, what right have you to declare that a lawful structure which the Supreme Court has decided to be a nuisance, and injurious to the citizens of Pennsylvania?

Mr. BADGER. We do not so declare it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared the bridge to be a nuisance, injurious to the rights of the citizens of Pennsylvania, and you say that the rights of the citizens of Pennsylvania shall be invaded by this bridge; that our people shall not have the right to the free navigation of the Ohio river. The Supreme Court has said that the free navigation of the river has been interrupted, and now we propose to declare that this nuisance, notwithstanding it is an interruption, shall be a legal structure. That is the question. It is a delicate question, arising between States.

I think that one month at the opening of the next session will be sufficient to decide this matter. The gentleman from North Carolina agrees with me that the judgment of the court cannot be carried into effect, and execution had thereon, until February next. We shall then have, at the next session, two months to consider the bill which has been sent to us from the House. I think that the Senate of the United States will consider it a question of sufficient importance to dispose of it in the month of December or January. But I do not wish to detain the Senate at this late hour by any further remarks.

Mr. MASON. I must ask the Senate to indulge me but a very few moments, not to add anything to what has fallen from the honorable Senator from North Carolina, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee; for he has placed the legal question in a clearer light than I could. He has shown what every Senator knows, and what the Senator from Pennsylvania knows, that the judiciary cannot legislate. They are to expound the existing laws, and nothing more. As the Senator from North Carolina says, they have expounded the existing law, and declared, as their judgment, that, under the existing law, this bridge is a nuisance. Do we attempt to reverse that judgment? Certainly not. But we do say that, if it be a nuisance under existing laws, those laws shall be removed out of the way; and that is all the amendment declares.

I wish now to say a word about the true history of this matter. It has become a part of the history of the country. This difficulty had its origin in a wretched competition between the city of Pittsburgh and those who navigate the Ohio river below Wheeling. That was the whole of it. The fact was demonstrated over and over again, that the smoke chimneys of the Pittsburgh steamboats were elevated in order to come into collision with that bridge. That has nothing to do with the question before the Senate, I admit; but it is a fact, they were elevated in order to come into collision with that bridge. At the instance of the city of Pittsburgh, the State of Pennsylvania requested that these proceedings should be judicially instituted.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. He says that these chimneys were elevated for the purpose of coming into collision with this bridge.

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Now, I will read what the Supreme Court decided upon that point:

"7. The packet chimneys were as high as they now are before the erection of the bridge. Chimneys of equal and greater height are used on the ocean steamers, and the best packets of the eastern waters, the lakes, and the Mississippi."

Mr. MASON. The Supreme Court took that from evidence, gotten up by this extraordinary organization. That evidence was taken for the Supreme Court by Chancellor Walworth, of New York. But the fact was, and yet remains, that there were but two boats pretending to be of that height when the structure was commenced, and its elevation was ascertained; but, by the time the bridge was completed seven of those boats got very high chimneys. I do not mean, however, to go into that subject; because I am not one of those who would undertake, by legislation, to reverse the judgment of a court. But I wish to call attention to the fact, that here is the State of Pennsylvania complaining through its Senator of this bridge, when it has a bridge at Pittsburgh, and above Pittsburgh, over the Allegheny river, a river that runs up to New York. It has a bridge over the Monongahela, a river that runs through Virginia; and the boats navigating it every day in the year lower their chimneys to pass under Pennsylvania bridges. Yet under this wretched competition of the city of Pittsburgh it would deny substantially all communication across the waters of the Ohio, in order that it might flourish. That is the whole matter.

Mr. BROOKE. In all legal questions, I am willing, and more than willing, to yield to the authority of the Supreme Court; but, in questions of fact, I conceive, that, as a member of the Congress of the United States, I have the same right of judgment, humble as I am, as the Supreme Court has. As an individual, upon the testimony which I have read in this case, I have come to the conclusion that the steamboats navigating the Ohio river have elevated their chimneys to an unnecessary height, for the purpose of destroying this structure—as I conceive, one of the noblest structures in the world. I will do everything I can, as a legislator, to nullify, if I may use the expression, the decision of the Supreme Court. I have seen it lately stated in the papers, and I have every reason to believe it is true, that on the river Thames steamboats are run without any chimneys whatever—the smoke from the furnace escaping under the wheels; the action and motion of the wheels creating a draft that is superior to that created by the height of the chimneys. I do hope that, for the sake of State sovereignty—for the sake of the great travel from the East to the West, and from the West to the East—this noble structure will be preserved.

Mr. WELLER. It must have struck every person who has passed along the Ohio river, that this is one of the most magnificent works that is to be found in the whole West. It is one of the most useful improvements that has been made on the Ohio river—one of incalculable value, in my judgment, to that whole region of country. Nor can there be any doubt that such has been the feeling produced at the city of Pittsburg against that structure, that the owners of Pittsburg steamboats have increased the height of their smoke-pipes, in order to produce a necessity for the removal of the bridge. In the month of April last, I came up the Ohio river, when it was at a very high stage. There were twelve and a half feet of water in the channel at Wheeling; and I suppose, from the knowledge I have of that river, I may safely say there would not be twelve and a half feet of water in the channel at Wheeling more than four or five weeks in the year. I passed under the bridge, at that time, upon one of these Pittsburg boats, with the largest pipes I had ever seen before upon any steamer. I said to the captain of the steamer, who lived at Pittsburg, and who of course was under the control of that influence, that the pipes were much higher than I had ever seen before. He said yes; they had found it expedient to increase the height of their pipes. But notwithstanding the height of the pipes—notwithstanding the fact that there were twelve and a half feet of water in the channel—we passed under the bridge, not at its highest point—for I was inclined to believe at the time that, as there were two gentlemen on board who would be called upon to vote on the subject, the captain really desired to give us a practical illustration of the fact that the bridge was an obstruction, by striking the pipes of his steamer against it. A little while before, when my friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] was on board a steamer going down the river, they did manage to strike the pipes against the bridge; and they supposed, I presume, that that would be sufficient evidence to satisfy that Senator that the bridge ought to be removed. But when we were going up; one of these large steamers failed to strike the bridge, and therefore did not satisfy us that it should be removed. In my judgment, that bridge should not be disturbed.

The Senator from Pennsylvania assumes that we have no right to disturb the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, suppose that a bridge had been constructed across the Ohio river, with an elevation of only twenty feet, and the Supreme Court had decided it was a constitutional bridge, and we, entertaining the opinion that the Ohio river was a great national highway, thought the obstruction should be removed, should we not have the power to nullify the decision of the Supreme Court—to change the law and declare that river a navigable highway? We do not here attempt to resist the decision of the Supreme Court. Admitting that they made the decision clearly under the law as it then existed, yet, entertaining the belief that the public interests required that the structure should remain, I say it is perfectly competent for the National Legislature so to declare.

The species of rivalry which has been gotten up between Wheeling and Pittsburg, I care nothing about. I do not sympathize with either party. I look alone to what I consider to be the interest of that region of country. Not being a citizen of Ohio, I have no personal interest or connection with it. But I regard that bridge as a valuable national improvement, which ought not to be disturbed. If the bridge is too low for the steamboats to pass under, they can very easily fit up an apparatus for lowering their pipes. Even if that were so, in my judgment, it would not obstruct the navigation of the river, at any time, more than five weeks in the year; and that could be easily obviated by lowering the chimneys of the boats—a process which can be easily accomplished by a delay of not more than five or ten minutes.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, it is true that the structure of the Wheeling Bridge is a splendid monument of art and science. It is a beautiful structure, highly creditable to the skill and genius of the eminent engineer under whose supervision it was built; but I apprehend that the precise state of the question is not exactly considered by the Senate. It is not, as I understand it, whether that bridge shall be removed or not, but whether the bridge shall be changed so as to accord with the decision of the Supreme Court and leave the navigation of the river uninterrupted or not.

I have been somewhat acquainted with the progress of this case, and I know something practically in regard to the character of this river. I do not think that the bridge company have any reasonable ground of complaint against the city of Pittsburg. I am bound to say so, because, when a line was stretched across the river, indicating the present position of the bridge, the company was notified—and so it appeared by the evidence—that an application would be made to a judge of the Supreme Court for an injunction to restrain the structure. Notwithstanding this notice, the company proceeded, and proceeding thus, after warning, they were not entitled to any extraordinary sympathy, if it should be found that the structure does create a nuisance.

This whole case has been very carefully examined by the Supreme Court, and they have come to a decision that this bridge, in its present position, is a nuisance, and seriously obstructs the navigation of the river. It is a nuisance, because boats, with their ordinary chimneys, cannot pass under it at all stages of the water, so as to preserve the navigation of the river uninterrupted. What you propose to do here is to say to the navigators of the river, "You shall so arrange your business as to accommodate yourself to the bridge," when the Supreme Court has said to the bridge company, "You shall so arrange your bridge as to accommodate it to the navigation of the river." Now, if that is not putting ourselves directly in collision with the Supreme Court, I am at a loss to understand how we can accomplish that object. I repeat that the Supreme Court say to the company, "You shall so arrange your bridge as to accommodate the navigation of the river;" and it is now proposed that we shall say to the navigators of the river, "You shall so arrange your business as to accommodate it to the bridge." The Supreme Court has decided thus:

"It is clearly proved by science, and confirmed by practical skill and experience, that the present height of the packet chimneys is necessary, and that they cannot be reduced in length without serious injury to the speed and power of the vessel.

"It is proved by science, experience, and the nature of things, that the packet chimneys cannot be lowered to pass the bridge, without imposing heavy expenses upon the packet, and endangering the safety of the vessel, and the lives of the passengers and crew.

"The defendants are required to relieve navigation from obstruction by elevating the bridge to the height of one hundred and eleven feet above low-water level for the width of three hundred feet over the channel."

The present height of the bridge is ninety-two feet, and the decision of the Supreme Court, making a kind of compromise between the interests of navigation and the interests of this company, is, that they shall raise the bridge to the height of one hundred and eleven feet; that is, they shall raise the bridge nineteen feet above its present level. Now, I understand that all engineers concur in the opinion that even Mr. Ellet himself, under whose supervision the work was constructed, thinks that it can be raised at an expense of some $40,000 or $50,000. If this can be done, is it not obvious that we go beyond the mark if we undertake to set aside the decision of the Supreme Court, or require the navigation of the river to conform to the interests of the bridge company? If we wait for a few months, until the matter can be settled by experience, and an opportunity be afforded to the company to see whether they can comply with the decision of the Supreme Court and raise their bridge, we shall be able to act understandingly.

It happened to me, not long since, to pass down the Ohio river on my way from this city to my home in Cincinnati. When I reached Pittsburg, the water was very high. It was at an extraordinary height, a height to which it does not attain, it is true, more than once or twice a year, and sometimes not so often. But I was obliged to remain two days at the city of Pittsburg, because the boats could not get under this bridge not only without lowering their chimneys, but without taking off their wheel-houses. A member of the other House, I recollect, went in advance of me by one day from the city of Harrisburg; and I, after waiting two days in Pittsburg, took the railroad round by the lake to reach the city of Cincinnati, instead of going down the river, and I found that the gentleman to whom I refer had gone down in a boat from Pittsburg, but finding it impossible to get under the bridge, he had returned to Beaver, and from there we went on to Cincinnati, by the railroad, together.

This bridge is an obstruction to navigation. What is the very best thing to be done, I do not pretend to know. I know that some how or other there must be a compromise between the interests of the navigators of the river and the great railroad interests which are seeking to cross the stream. But I do not think that at this late period of the session, and this late hour of the night, the Senate should undertake to decide hastily upon this matter, when, by the acknowledgment of the Senator who proposes the amendment, the whole thing can be investigated at the next session of Congress. It is one of those cases in which the maxim of festina lente most emphatically applies.

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President, I should not be willing to give a vote upon this amendment without saying a word. It is with very great diffidence that I dissent from the opinions expressed by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary. I should be very reluctant to do so, were it not that I think I am sustained in the view I take by the minority of that committee.

It seems to be conceded, that if this amendment is a reversal of the decision of the Supreme Court, it cannot be sustained, or ought not to be sustained. The question is one of very great importance, because it is applicable to every harbor and to every river in the Union, and above all, it is applicable to the Mississippi river, which is, beyond every other, important to the whole people of the United States. The Supreme Court have decided, after a fair examination of the facts, that this bridge is an unlawful structure; that it is contrary to law, and a nuisance, because it is violative of the rights of the whole people of the Union. For, if I mistake not, the Ohio is a river which is a public highway, open to all the people of the United States—made so by compact—made so by the fact that it is a navigable river, and as such, an open highway for all the people of the country. The right to navigate it is secured by the compacts of the various States when they came into the Union. The Supreme Court has decided that this bridge is an unlawful structure, because it interferes with these rights. What is this amendment? It is, "that the bridges across the Ohio river, at Wheeling, in the State of Virginia, and at Bridgeport, in the State of Ohio, abutting on Zane's Island, in said river, are hereby declared to be lawful structures in their present position and elevation, and shall be so held and taken to be, anything in any law or laws of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding." Does this bill repeal any law? I ask the honorable Senator from North Carolina to tell me what law of Congress is repealed by this expression: "anything in any law or laws of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Mr. BADGER. If the honorable Senator wishes me to answer him, I will say, that no particular law of the United States is repealed by it, but every law of the United States, if there be any such law, in virtue of which that bridge is a nuisance, is, as far as respects that bridge, repealed.

Mr. TOUCEY. That is what I supposed—that is to say, every law now existing is law still. It is not repealed. The Supreme Court has decided that this bridge was in violation of existing law, and a nuisance; and now, without revising the facts, and without repealing this existing law, you declare that these bridges are lawful structures, when the Supreme Court have adjudicated that they are unlawful. I am unable to comprehend in what way the decision of the Supreme Court could be more directly overthrown, annulled, reversed, obliterated, blotted out, than it is by this amendment, if it become a law. But, without repealing any law, without enacting any new law, you here undertake to pass a law that simply reverses the decision of the Supreme Court on that precise point, and declares that bridge to be lawful, when the Supreme Court, acting as the Supreme Judiciary of the Union, has declared it to be unlawful and a nuisance. I think that is a very dangerous power to be exercised by Congress; and I am not prepared to say that it is competent for Congress to exercise any such power as that over the judicial power of the Union. At all events, it is a very objectionable exercise of power, and one which can never receive my support.

Again, the second section of the amendment declares "that the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company are authorized to have and maintain their said bridges at their present site and elevation." By what authority does Congress undertake to say that a bridge across a navigable water—if it obstructs navigation—shall be maintained? Have you jurisdiction over the Ohio river? You have, for the purpose of conducting commerce upon it. But does the commercial power authorize Congress to build a road or a bridge? Is it the doctrine of State-Rights men, that within the limits of sovereign States Congress can build a bridge or a road, or authorize the building of a bridge or a road? I had supposed that that jurisdiction belonged to the States exclusively; but here you undertake to authorize a bridge across a navigable water by authority of Congress.

Sir, it seems to me, that some of my friends who advocate this bill, are a little aside from the State-Rights doctrines which they maintain with regard to the jurisdiction of the General Government over commerce in constructing roads and canals within the limits of sovereign States. I had supposed that Congress did not possess any such power. I had supposed that Congress had no power to build a bridge across the harbor at New Orleans, or the Mississippi river. If it can authorize a bridge, it can build it; and if so, the assent of the State makes no difference with regard to the power of Congress. I had supposed that the power conferred by the Constitution to establish post offices and post roads, did not give us power to build a road, or to build a bridge; and I should like to know in what part of the Constitution this power is to be found?

Sir, I apprehend that every river is an arm of the sea to the head of tide-water. Congress has the same power over it, for all commercial purposes, that it has over the ocean within a league of the coast. And if any one will undertake to say that the Mississippi river, with millions of navigation, is not a navigable water beyond the point—about five hundred miles above its mouth—where the tide ceases to ebb and flow, we will meet it and decide the question whether navigable water does not extend above it in America, considering the magnitude of rivers upon this Continent.

But above all, the compacts of the States when they were admitted into the Union, and the acts of Congress admitting the northwestern and southwestern States, have in every case provided that the Mississippi and Ohio rivers shall be navigable waters free for all the States and all the people of the Union. I apprehend that any obstruction of these waters would stand upon the same ground precisely as an obstruction across the mouth of any harbor.

But, sir, I did not intend to go as far as I have gone into this question at this late hour. I have made these remarks for the purpose of bringing out, and putting forth in its full strength, the idea that is impressed upon my mind, that this is an important question that ought not to be discussed upon this present post office bill. It is a question that requires extensive discussion and consideration; and it can be met as well for all practical purposes at the next session of Congress, which occurs in a few months from this time, without interfering with the just rights of any of the sovereign States of the Union. I am, therefore, entirely opposed to incorporating this amendment into this bill; and I think that this subject should be left to rest until December next, when it may be placed fully before the Senate, and fairly considered and deliberately disposed of. As the proposition now stands it is, in my judgment, from the best consideration I have been able to give to it, a direct reversal of the decision of the Supreme Court, and it is the assumption of the power to build roads and bridges within the States of this Union by authority of Congress.

Mr. PRATT. Before the honorable Senator takes his seat I wish to ask him a question. I understand him to announce as a constitutional proposition that the power on the part of the Federal Government to authorize a post road to be made authorizes the making of the road by the Government. He contends that if the Government can authorize a State or an individual to make a road, the Government could make the road itself. How do you limit the power? Power is given by the Constitution "to establish post offices and post roads." The Constitution does not say that the States or individuals shall make them. Where, then, does the Senator derive the authority?

Mr. TOUCEY. I derive the authority over roads from the authority of every State in the Union. Every State in the Union must have roads. That was the condition of things when the Constitution was adopted. When the Constitution gives power to Congress "to establish post offices and post roads," it does not mean the power to build roads, but to establish existing roads as post roads. Such has been the construction of that article of the Constitution heretofore. It does not confer the power to build a road or to build a bridge, or authorize a State to build a road, or build a bridge; but if a State does it, it does it by its own intrinsic sovereignty, and not by any consent of Congress. But if the States establish roads, Congress may use them for the purpose of transporting the mails, or the States must go without the mails, if they do not make roads; but that is an impossible position.

Mr. HALE. I rose for the purpose of making a few remarks, but it is suggested that we can have a vote. I have no doubt that I can make a very good speech, but I am so anxious to have a vote that I will give way.

Mr. BRADBURY. I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I desire to call attention to the phraseology of the amendment, which, it seems to me, contains an assertion of power which is in terms somewhat objectionable. It declares that the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company are authorized to have and maintain their bridge at its present height and elevation. That bridge spanning the Ohio rests one side in Virginia, and the other in Ohio. Congress steps in, and says to the company you are authorized to have and maintain this bridge at that spot. Now, is that an assertion of power which it is proper for Congress to make? Is this Government to go into the States and prescribe where such structures shall stand, and in such terms that the States cannot remove them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman will allow me to correct him in point of fact. The structure is wholly in Virginia. It rests upon Zane's Island in the river, which is within the jurisdiction of Virginia.

Mr. BRADBURY. I was under the impression that the bridge was in both States; but that does not change the argument. I submit whether it would not be better to lay the bill over, so that we may consider it early in the next session. We can then adopt such phraseology as will relieve it of the embarrassments which are felt by many.

Mr. BRODHEAD. We have a very thin Senate at present. It is now approaching twelve o'clock. I move, therefore, that the Senate adjourn, so that we can take the vote on Monday morning.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Borland, Brooke, Charlton, Clarke, Davis, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Fish, Geyer, Hale, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Meriwether, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradbury, Brodhead, Chase, De Sausure, Foot, Gwin, Norris, Seward, Stockton, and Toucey—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have another amendment to offer:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized, if he shall deem it proper, to advertise for and establish service upon the regular mail route between New Orleans and certain Gulf ports of Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended, the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed; and having been engrossed, the bill was read a third time and passed. On motion by Mr. RUSK, its title was amended, by adding thereto the words, "and for other purposes."

OCEAN STEAMERS.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail, by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853. It proposes to appropriate:

"For the transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, $858,000.

"For the transportation of the mails from New York to New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, Havana, Charleston, and back, $290,000.

"For the transportation of the mails from Panamato California and Oregon, and back, $348,250.

"For the transportation of the mails from New York to Southampton and Bremen, and back, and to Cowes and Havre, and back, $294,000.

"For the transportation of the mails between Charleston and Havana, $50,000.

"For the transportation of the mails across the Isthmus of Panama, $100,000."

Mr. HUNTER. The bill is to carry out existing laws; nothing more.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JAMES CLAMORGAN.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James Clamorgan, deceased; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER,

Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns, it be to meet on Monday morning at ten o'clock.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30th, 1853.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, August 30, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.
The reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853, which was reported from the Committee on Finance, with various amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in the clause "for pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including the engineer corps of the Navy, $2,771,448," to strike out "448," and insert "698;" and add to the clause the following:

"Provided, That from and after the 1st of July, 1852, the salary of the secretary of the Naval Academy at Annapolis shall be $1,250."

Mr. HUNTER. That is an increase of $250 on the present salary of the secretary of the Naval School at Annapolis. It is made upon the urgent recommendation of the Department, and it is the only salary which we propose to increase.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out of the bill the following words:

"And hereafter no appointment of midshipman, acting midshipman, or pupil, at any naval school in the Navy, shall be made, unless recommended by the member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides, in the same manner that cadets at West Point are now appointed; and that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required to report to this House, at its second session, the number and names of appointments to the Naval School which have been made, and the district and State whence each one comes, and the number of vacancies then existing at said school, with the Congressional district which may be entitled to supply them, and a statement of the order in which the remainder of the Congressional districts shall be entitled to supply all future and accruing vacancies, so far as it may be determined by existing law, or by circumstances."

Mr. HUNTER. The committee thought that this was a matter of legislation which we have no time now to consider properly, and that it was of doubtful propriety to adopt that provision. We thought it therefore better to postpone it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I understand that part of the bill which the committee recommend to strike out, it proposes to introduce the same system in regard to the appointments of boys to the Naval School that we have in regard to the Military Academy. If that be the object, I hope the amendment may not prevail. I do not think we want any discussion upon a subject so plain as that; at least, if I understand it, my mind is satisfied to vote without any discussion upon it. I would therefore ask the chairman of the committee to explain to me whether that part of the bill does not propose to put the appointments to the Naval School precisely upon the same footing with appointments to the Military School at West Point?

Mr. HUNTER. It does not put them precisely upon the same footing. It puts them on the same footing so far as Congressional districts are concerned; but there is no provision in the clause for appointments at large. The doubt in the committee was, whether there ought not to be some provision for appointments at large by the President, and whether Senators each ought not to possess the power of naming one. Under these circumstances, we think it better to postpone the consideration of the subject until the next session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope we will let the clause remain, and if it should become politic hereafter to extend the patronage of the President, by allowing him the same privilege with reference to the Naval School that he has with reference to the Military Academy, it will be easy to introduce an amendment of that sort next session, when we can consider it. If it be proper to extend the privilege to members of the Senate, so as to give them a little patronage, we can take that also into consideration next session. At present, by adhering to the bill as it came from the House, we will just put the appointments in the Navy upon the footing of appointments in the Army. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

A division was had upon the amendment, but before the result was announced,

Mr. HALE asked for the yeas and nays upon it, and they were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. I should like a full understanding of this provision to be had. It was introduced into the other House without the recommendation of any committee, and without any mature deliberation. It was the object of the Committee on Finance, as well as the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, to mature a plan for these appointments. There is an application before the Committee on Naval Affairs, from the Secretary of the Navy, asking that the President may have power to appoint ten boys to the Naval School, in the same manner that he has to make appointments to West Point, on the ground that meritorious officers in the Navy, not having any locality, being ordered from point to point, have no opportunity to have conferred upon their sons the benefits of this school. The object of the Committee on Finance, as well as of the Committee on Naval Affairs, is to bring forward, at the next session, when there will be time to mature it, a bill in connection with this subject, giving also the power to Senators to nominate.

Mr. ATCHISON. I voted under a misapprehension in regard to this case. I voted, upon a division, to strike the clause from the bill. Now, I think, it is a proper clause. I know nothing which will distribute patronage, so far as the Naval School and the Navy are concerned, than the clause as it came from the House. The Senator from California's argument is, that there are certain officers in the Navy who have no fixed residence.

Mr. GWIN. I said that the Secretary of the Navy had applied to Congress to confer the power upon the President to appoint ten boys to the Naval School at large, as the cadets of West Point are appointed, on the ground that there are many meritorious officers of the Navy who never could get a boy into the Naval School under this provision, unless appointments at large were made.

Mr. ATCHISON. I will guarantee that those officers will get their share, and more than their share.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Every officer of the Navy comes from some place.

Mr. ATCHISON. Yes, sir, and he has a citizenship in some place. The fact of his being an officer in the Navy does not deprive him of citizenship; for the moment he leaves the Navy, I presume that moment he is entitled to all the rights and privileges of the State in which he resided when he was appointed. I am decidedly in favor of the clause as it stands; and I repeat I voted for striking it out under an entire misapprehension, upon the general principle that everything that we strike from the bill has a tendency to perfect it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am against all monopolies in behalf of families or individuals in appointments in the Navy, and my object is to spread these appointments through all the sections of the Union, and thereby secure in every Congressional district an interest on behalf of this great arm of the public defense. If you do that, you will secure an interest in the Navy, in the interior States, which has never been felt before, and you will be disseminating officers throughout the country, as well as on the sea-board. In regard to the objection of my friend from California, that we have no time to mature the subject, I will only say, let us make this commencement, and at the next session we can give the privilege to the President and to Senators, if we think proper to enlarge it.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the provision will be stricken out. I agree with my friend from Kentucky in the main object which he has in view; but the proposition to retain in this bill a provision that there is to be one midshipman taken from each Congressional district, and that he is to be appointed upon the nomination of the members of the House of Representatives, has, to my mind, two objections. In the first place, it deprives all the members of this body of any interest, direct or indirect, in proposing the appointment of any person in that arm of the public service; and as all officers of whatever grade—all commissioned officers—are originally midshipmen, and are promoted from that corps, it of course gives to the members of the House of Representatives the designation and appointment of all the officers in the Navy from this time hereafter. I can see no justice or propriety in that.

A SENATOR. That power is now possessed by the executive department.

Mr. BADGER. The fact of the executive department possessing that power, is no reason that it should be engrossed anywhere else. Then, in the next place, as my friend from New York [Mr. FISK] reminds me, that is not a provision of law. It is an arrangement, or custom, or regulation, existing in the Department. It is not imposed by any law at all. Then, I have another objection to this: it is an indirect way of conferring the appointment of officers of the United States upon individual members of the House of Representatives. Now, under the Constitution, Congress can confer the appointment of no officer otherwise than as the Constitution has devolved it, except upon the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of Departments. But what is this provision but saying that the appointments of officers of the Navy of the United States shall be made by the members severally of the House of Representatives, when, according to the Constitution, we could not give the whole House the right, nor both Houses put together the right, to make the appointments? I hope the clause will be stricken out.

Mr. MALLORY. The fifth section of the naval appropriation act of the 3d of March, 1845, reaches the position set up by the honorable Senator from Kentucky. By that section, midshipmen are to be appointed especially with regard to the Congressional districts, in all the States and Territories. Now, it is supposed that that section has not been rigidly adhered to, but that midshipmen have been appointed from districts where they did not reside. This provision of the bill is no doubt designed to correct that; but, as the honorable Senator from North Carolina observes, it will deprive every member of this body from exercising any influence in the selection of midshipmen in the Navy, and give it all to the members of the House; whereas, now, as the law stands, it refers it to the Congressional districts, without specifying what branch of Congress shall exercise or control the appointment.

Mr. DOWNS. I do not think that the reason urged by the Senators from California and North Carolina is a sufficient reason why this provision should be stricken out. The committee propose to strike it out. Now, it will be easy to amend that provision. It provides that one pupil or midshipman shall be appointed from each Congressional district. There will be no difficulty in amending it by adding "and ten at large," so as to put the appointments of the Naval Academy on the same footing as the cadets at West Point. There is a provision of law that the appointments shall be made in each Congressional district. It certainly was an omission when that law was passed, that it was not put in, that there should be appointments made at large. If the committee want to perfect this as they say, let them add to it, "and ten at large." That will put it on precisely the same footing as the appointment of cadets at West Point. I will therefore move to amend the provision by inserting in that part of the bill which specifies that one shall be appointed from each Congressional district, the words, "and ten from the States at large."

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that the number of midshipmen is fixed by law, and we have not time now to amend the system.

Mr. DOWNS. This is not a new system. It is the system adopted in regard to the Military Academy.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator's amendment will increase the number of midshipmen. I made my remarks in reference to that. It will alter the existing law in regard to the number of midshipmen, and we have no time to consider that now.

Mr. DOWNS. I suppose adding ten to the number for three months would not make any great difference; but if the committee think there are insuperable objections to it, I shall not insist on my amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I intended to vote to strike out this provision, and I shall do so yet. The appointing power of all officers in the Army and Navy is vested in the executive department. Have we the power to confer that appointing power upon the representatives of the different Congressional districts of the United States? If we have not, then the proposition of the committee should be adopted. I believe we have not. What we cannot do directly we cannot do indirectly. The President of the United States has issued an order, affecting both the Army and Navy in appointments of this kind, cadets and midshipmen—that in making the selection they shall be taken from each Congressional district, with a view to spread the appointments over the whole Union. This is an Executive order, instructing his subordinates how to act, and is altogether right and constitutional; but we must not usurp the power, and declare that the executive part of the Government shall make an officer, a midshipman, or a cadet out of an individual who shall be recommended to him by Representatives. If we do that, it would be denying to the President the right of exercising his discretion. I state now, that when there are a dozen applicants in one Congressional district, and the Representative of the district prefers an individual, he is generally respected; but still the Government retains the right of exercising its own discretion and selecting from the number. I therefore shall vote to strike out this provision, upon the ground that it is an effort to take away from the Executive a power belonging solely to him.

Mr. DOWNS. The Senator is in error on one point, as to its being a regulation in the Department to make the selections from the districts. There is a law providing that the appointments shall be made from each Congressional district.

Mr. DAWSON. I say the appointment is confined to the district, but not to the nomination by a Representative.

Mr. DOWNS. It is the same authority that is exercised in the appointment of cadets. I do not know why it should not be here. As to the constitutional objection, that these persons are officers, they are not officers at all. This provides merely for the education of persons, and they receive no commission while receiving that education.

Mr. SEWARD. I think there is much force in what has been said by the Senators from Georgia and North Carolina, that we cannot control or direct the President in the appointment of midshipmen; but I have no doubt that we can effect the same object by a legislative provision, which shall secure the appointment of one from each district.

I shall therefore change my vote, and shall vote for striking out this provision, for the purpose of substituting another in its place—one which will reach that object as nearly as we have the power to do, and bring the law precisely upon the foundation of the law in relation to appointments to the Military Academy. I shall propose, therefore, at the proper time, a substitute something like this:

And hereafter the President shall appoint from the United States at large, ten of the pupils of the Naval School, and that other appointments shall be made, so as to secure always, as far as possible, one pupil, midshipman, or acting midshipman, in the Navy, from each Congressional district.

Mr. BADGER. I will suggest to the Senator from New York that, as far as that arrangement is concerned, there is no necessity for any legislation. There is a law already in force to spread these appointments over the Congressional districts; and if the Senator will go to the Navy Department at any time, and inquire whether there is a vacancy in any Congressional district, he will find lists there showing the precise state of the appointments. They there equalize the appointments as far as they can. The rule is to appoint one from each Congressional district. The only difference between the bill as it stands and the existing practice is, that the bill proposes that the appointment shall be made on the nomination of the member from the district; whereas, as the law now stands, we have as much right to recommend a person from the district, as a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SEWARD. I thank the honorable Senator from North Carolina for his information; but the law is not known to the country to be so. It was not understood by the House of Representatives to be so. This amendment, then, which I intend to propose, makes the very provision which now exists, and is carried out in the Navy Department, and it does not propose to confer upon the members of Congress an absolute power to recommend. I suppose it is understood that the Naval School is upon the same basis with the Military Academy, and that the other consequence will follow, that where there is no cause to overrule a recommendation by a member of Congress, it will prevail; and, for one, I desire that the members of Congress from my own State shall have the power of exercising this privilege. I think it is more right, more expedient, more wise, to put it in their hands, than in the hands of Senators.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We have at last got to a constitutional question. Let me read the Constitution, and see whether it has anything to do with it. The article in the Constitution in regard to the appointment of officers, provides:

"He (the President) shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Is this an office created by law? I deny it. The person for the manner of whose appointment we propose to provide, is a pupil at a school. He is not yet made a midshipman. You are taking the initiatory steps to make him an officer, but he may never be an officer. You are providing for his education, and whether you make him a midshipman of the Navy is an ulterior matter. Now, my friend from New York proposes to limit the President, in the appointments, to the Congressional districts.

Mr. SEWARD. No, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He proposes to give ten at large, and then, he says, the balance shall be arranged in Congressional districts.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New York is not before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But his whole argument was based upon that amendment, and I hope that I can answer it.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator suggested that if the amendment of the committee prevailed, he would propose his amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was the reason which he gave why he should vote for the committee's amendment, and if he relies upon his own proposition as a reason for striking that out, I have a right to show that his reason is not tenable, and constitutes no motive for amending the bill as the committee propose. In that point of view, the Senator's proposition was, to give the President the appointment absolutely of ten at large, and then to restrict him to the Congressional districts in appointing the residue. Now, what authority have you, if it be a constitutional question, to restrict the discretion of the President in the selection of the officers? None whatever. You might as well undertake to restrict him in the selection of foreign ministers, or of a judge of the Supreme Court, or of any other officer, as in that of a pupil to the Academy. If it be his constitutional privilege to appoint that pupil, you cannot restrict that privilege by any such mode of legislation. If, then, this relates to the mere appointment of a pupil, out of which we may hereafter make an officer or not, according to circumstances, it is within the regulation of Congress, and it comes back to the question upon which we must rely at last: Is it prudent—is it discreet—is it a matter of national policy, that every portion of the country shall have a participation in the appointments of the officers for that branch of the service, which will more than anything else make it national? I think it good policy; and if it be just to extend the same privilege to the Senators, be it so. I am for giving the President the privilege of appointing ten; but we cannot restrict the appointments by the President, of the pupils throughout the whole United States, to Congressional districts. His constitutional privilege to appoint them, is independent of all restriction of that sort.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President—

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a question, not of the appropriation of money, but of time. We have but a day left. Can we give it all to this question of appointments to the Naval School?

Mr. CASS. I desire to say one word to the Senator from New York. There is no time for us to enter into constitutional questions, and I entreat the honorable Senator to allow us to form our opinions without a further discussion. We all know that book that he has in his hand, and I believe we understand it as well as if he went on to discuss it until the next session.

Mr. ADAMS. Nobody is listening.

Mr. CASS. There is nobody listening to the discussion. It is a thrice told tale—it is a fifty times told tale.

Mr. SEWARD. I have as seldom exacted attention from this body as the honorable and distinguished Senator who says that nobody is listening—who speaks when nobody listens to admonish us not to discuss the question. I merely wish to say, in reply to the honorable Senator from Kentucky, that the existing law, which was passed in 1845, does confine the appointment of pupils and midshipmen to the States; and that, therefore, if appointments can be restricted to the States, they can be restricted to the districts.

The question was taken, by yeas and nays, on the amendment, and resulted—yeas 27, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bell, Bright, Brodhead, Clarke, Clemens, Dawson, Douglas, Fish, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Seward, Smith, Soule, Stockton, and Weller—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Brooke, Cass, Chase, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Foot, Hale, Jones of Iowa, King, Meriwether, Rusk, Shields, Spruance, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Walker—22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in page five, line ninety-five, to strike out the word "civil" and insert "foreign."

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment is merely verbal, and is necessary to correct a clerical error. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same page, line one hundred and five, after the word "expenses" insert the words "of vessels."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same page, line one hundred and seven, to insert at the end of the line the words:

"And for contingent expenses not enumerated, $5,000."

Mr. HUNTER. This was estimated for and inserted by the Committee on Finance; and I do not know but this is as good a place as any other to state that the Committee of Ways and Means cut down the estimates for the navy-yards and hospitals, and although, perhaps, the Committee on Finance would not have done so if the question had been left to them, yet in view of the fact that there would only elapse three months before the next session, and as the House committee had examined the matter, we thought it better not to depart from their recommendation. In relation to this item which has been estimated for, they did not put it in. We have agreed to their reduction of the estimates in other matters. I have stated this much for the information of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended reads as follows:

"For contingent expenses that may accrue for the following purposes, viz: freight and transportation, printing and stationery, advertising in newspapers, books, maps, models, and drawings, purchase and repair of fire-engines and machinery, repairs of and attending to steam-engines in navy yards, purchase and maintenance of horses and oxen, and driving teams, carts, timber-wheels, and the purchase and repair of workmen's tools, postage of public letters, furniture for Government houses, fuel, oil and candles for navy-yards and shore stations, pay of watchmen and incidental labor, not chargeable to any other appropriation, labor attending the delivery of stores on foreign stations, wharfage, dockage and rent, traveling expenses of officers and others under orders, funeral expenses, store and office rent, stationery, fuel, commissions and pay of clerks to navy agents and store-keepers, flags, awnings, and packing boxes, premiums and other expenses of recruiting, apprehending deserters, per diem pay to persons attending courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and other services authorized by law, pay to judges advocates, pilots and towage of vessels and assistance to vessels in distress, bills of health and quarantine expenses of vessels of the United States Navy in foreign ports, $527,840; and for contingent expenses not enumerated, $5,000."

The next amendment was, to strike out the second section, in the following words:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the President of the United States, or the Secretary of the proper Department under his direction, to transfer any portion of the moneys appropriated for a particular branch of expenditure in that Department, to be applied to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be, and are hereby, so far as relates to the Navy Department, repealed; and no portion of the money appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of any expenses incurred prior to the 1st day of July, 1852."

Mr. HUNTER. This section consists of two parts, the first of which proposes to repeal the right of transfer altogether, so far as it relates to the Navy Department. That is unnecessary, because the right of transfer was repealed by the law of 1842. The right has been allowed in special instances, but the law of 1842 repealing it still remains in force. The other portion of the section proposes to introduce a provision here which was introduced into the Army bill, in which it was provided that none of the money appropriated for the current fiscal year should be expended for arrears. The Secretary of War has thought that he could not execute that provision; but so far as the Navy is concerned, it would be manifestly improper. A ship might come in from a three years' cruise, and it would be necessary to pay her out of the fund now appropriated. In view of these circumstances, the Committee on Finance propose to strike out the section.

The motion to strike out the section was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These are all the amendments which are proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GWIN. I have several amendments which I have been instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer. I am instructed by that committee to propose to the Senate to restore the appropriations to the amounts estimated for by the Navy Department at the commencement of this session. I have been induced to do this in consequence of two letters which we have received—one from the former, and the other from the present Secretary of the Navy. The former is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 19, 1852.

SIR: I transmit herewith a statement showing the reductions made by the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in the appropriation bill now pending, from the estimates submitted by this Department, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853.

These estimates having been prepared with care, and deemed to be demanded by a proper regard for the public service, I respectfully request that your committee will investigate the several subjects embraced, and if they concur in the views of the Department, that they will move such amendments as may appear to them to be required by the public interests.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. GRAHAM.

Hon. WILLIAM M. GWIN,
Chairman Naval Committee, Senate.

I have also a letter from the present Secretary, Mr. Kennedy, of the date of the 27th instant, in which he reiterates the statement that these estimates are necessary for the public service. The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 27, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to the enclosed letters, which will show the importance of maintaining the appropriations asked for at the original estimates. Commodore Shubrick's letter of this date announces that the contracts are all made upon the basis of the supply necessary for seven thousand five hundred men required by the act of Congress. It would, therefore, be necessary to reduce the number of men, or to furnish the amount necessary for their supply.

Very truly yours,
Hon. W. M. GWIN, J. P. KENNEDY.
Chairman Naval Committee, Senate.

When the subject was before the Committee on Finance, I believe I am justified in saying that every member of that committee was prepared to restore the estimates. The subject was passed over to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I have been requested by that committee to ask for a restoration of the estimates. The amendments which I propose to offer are for that purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator from California allow me to state, in relation to these estimates, that if the Committee on Finance had acted upon the subject originally, they would probably have recommended appropriations according to the estimates; but as the House Committee of Ways and Means had given great attention to the matter, the Committee on Finance determined to concur in the action of that committee. Therefore we did not add to the appropriations to make them conform to the estimates.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the Senator whether, if the question had been brought fairly before the Committee on Finance, the estimates would not have been restored?

Mr. HUNTER. I presume, under the circumstances, they would not. We would have left them as they came from the House.

Mr. GWIN. Being a member of that committee, I differ entirely from the chairman. I agreed to postpone the subject in that committee, and brought it to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the distinct understanding that the Committee on Finance would sustain me. The first amendment which I propose under the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs is in page six, line one hundred and fifteen, after the word twenty-nine, insert the following:

"Cooper's shop and watchman's quarters, clay walls, north and south stations."

So that the clause will read:

"Portsmouth, New Hampshire: For building timber-shed No. 29, cooper's shop and watchman's quarters, clay walls, north and south stations, foundation for shores at railway, &c."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. That amendment having been adopted, it will be necessary to amend the clause still further by striking out the sum appropriated, and inserting a larger one. I therefore move to strike out "$35,041 23," and insert "$61,120 28." So that the whole clause, as I propose to amend it, will read:

"Portsmouth, New Hampshire: For building timber-shed No. 29, cooper's shop and watchman's quarters, clay walls, north and south stations, foundations for shores at railway, drains, gutters, and paving, and repairs of all kinds, $61,120 28."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senate passes from that clause of the bill I wish to make a slight amendment. I do not wish to steal that navy-yard for Portsmouth, New Hampshire. It belongs to Kittery, Maine. I move to strike out "Portsmouth, New Hampshire," and insert "Kittery, Maine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is as follows:

"After the word 'offices,' in line 120, insert 'coal houses, paving, grading, building, smithery, and repairs of all kinds.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment I shall propose is, that the words "$28,100," be stricken out of line one hundred and twenty-one, and that "$74,525," be inserted. The clause as amended will then read:

"Boston, Massachusetts: For rain-water cistern, pitch-house, and oakum-loft, muster office, coal-house, paving, grading, building, smithery, and repairs of all kinds, $74,525."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. There are various other amendments which I am instructed to offer for the purpose of restoring the estimates from the Department. I send them up to the Chair, and hope that the question will be taken on them all together for the purpose of saving time. I move to insert in line one hundred and twenty-two, after the word "complete," "commander's house;" and after the word "saw-mill," insert "houses for officers." In line one hundred and twenty-five, after the words "engine house," insert "coal house, and wharves, and piers." In the same line, insert "lighters, paving, and filling in timber beyond new purchase." In line one hundred and twenty-six, strike out "$126,800," and insert "$240,550."

Mr. HALE. I wish to make an amendment to that section, so far as it relates to the provision of houses for officers. I ask for a division of the question. I believe that that proposition is contrary to law.

The question was taken on the first and second amendments, and they were agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Let them all go together. They are sure to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators can take objection to any of these amendments after the Secretary has read them.

The remaining amendments were then agreed to. The clause, as amended, reads:

"New York, New York: To complete commander's house, saw-mill, houses for officers, quay-wall, dredging channels, water-tank and lighter, gas-pipes and fixtures, lightning conductors, continuation of sewer, machinery, &c., for engine-house, coal-house, wharves, and piers, paving, lighters, filling in timber beyond new purchase, and repairs of all kinds, $140,550."

The following amendments, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, were also agreed to. To amend the following clause—

"Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: For shed to cover north railway, covering to south railway, steam-box and pitch-kettles, mooring anchors for dry-dock, dredging channel, continuing pavement to wharf, cross-paving to smithery, and from thence to the dock basin, paving round west end of ship-house, paving wharf No. 3 to ship-house, paving between ways of docks, paving between timber-sheds, completing gutters and drains, completing shed No. 5, extending gas-pipes, &c., extending water-pipes one thousand feet, and repairs of all kinds, $28,517 20."

so that it will read, as follows:

"Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: For shed to cover north railway, covering to south railway, steam-box and pitch-kettles, mooring anchors for dry-dock, dredging channel, extension of pier wharf No. 4, filling up and grading, continuing pavement to wharf, cross-paving to smithery, and from thence to the dock basin, paving round west end of ship-house, paving wharf No. 3 to ship-house, paving between ways of docks, paving between timber-sheds, completing gutters and drains, completing shed No. 5, extending gas-pipes, &c., extending water-pipes one thousand feet, and repairs of all kinds $59,248."

To amend the clause—

"Washington, District of Columbia: For completing ordnance building No. 11, fitting up timber-dock, completing saw-mill, completing copper rolling-mill, completing railway, completing side lathes in machine shop, and repairs of all kinds, $123,778."

so that it will read:

"Washington, District of Columbia: For completing ordnance building No. 11, fitting up timber-dock, completing saw-mill, completing copper rolling-mill, completing railway, commander's house, converting ordnance shop to fitting shop, &c., stone wharf on south front of yard, completing side lathes in machine shop, and repairs of all kinds, $67,433."

To amend the following clause—

"Norfolk, Virginia: For store-house No. 14, wharf north side of timber-dock, culvert, dredging-machine, and repairs of all kinds, $80,732 20."

so that it will read:

"Norfolk, Virginia: For store-house No. 14, extending quay, wharves, completing timber-dock, building for offices, paving from gate to ship house, grading and filling wharf north side of timber-dock, culvert, dredging machine, and repairs of all kinds, $170,342 23."

To amend the following clause—

"Pensacola, Florida: Towards completing permanent wharf, to complete guard house and kitchen, to complete yard railway, and repair old track, to complete extension of central wharf, to rebuild east wall of cistern No. 26, for ice-house, repairs of cisterns Nos. 14 and 25, and repairs of all kinds, $88,044."

so that it will read:

"Pensacola, Florida: Towards completing permanent wharf, to complete guard house and kitchen, to complete yard railway and repair old track, to complete extension of central wharf, wharf on east side of yard, extension of smithery and machine shop, four new forges, and chimneys, to rebuild east wall of cistern No. 26, for ice-house, repairs of cisterns Nos. 14 and 25, and repairs of all kinds, $162,782."

To amend the following clause—

"Memphis, Tennessee: For pavements, drains, and ditches, cisterns for rope-walk, hemp-house, store-house, (one wing,) complete, railing for vertical wall, and repairs of all kinds, $47,043 34."

so that it will read:

"Memphis, Tennessee: For pavements, drains, and ditches, cisterns for rope-walk, hemp-house, store-house, (one wing,) complete, railing for vertical wall, excavation and embankment, stable and fences to commandant's house, and repairs of all kinds, $67,859 28."

To amend the clause, (under the heading of "hospitals")—

"At New York: For fence round garden, repairs of buildings, painting, whitewashing, cleaning up grounds, &c., at hospital, and for completing fence and wall around the burial ground, $8,893."

so as to make the appropriation $18,151.

To amend the following clause—

"At Philadelphia Naval Asylum: For introducing gas, painting main building inside, repairing and painting wall, repairs to roof and dome, cleaning and whitewashing, cleaning and repairing gratings and ranges, water tax, shade trees, and repairs of all kinds, $5,666."

so that it will read:

"At Philadelphia Naval Asylum: For introducing gas, painting main building inside, repairing and painting wall, tax on wharf, paving street, repairs to roof and dome, cleaning and whitewashing, cleaning and repairing gratings and ranges, water tax, shade trees, and repairs of all kinds, $10,024."

To amend the following clause—

"At Norfolk: For repairs of hospital and dependencies, $5,000."

by striking out "$5,000," and inserting "$12,168 90."

To amend the following clause, (under the heading of "hospitals")—

"At Pensacola: For draining and filling up ponds, &c., $2,000."

by striking out "$2,000," and inserting "$24,487."

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer another amendment, which is to insert after line eleven, page one, as follows:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow and pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy, and officers and men of the revenue service, who served in the Pacific ocean, on the coast of California and Mexico, during the late war with Mexico, and since that period, the same increased or additional compensation as has been by law directed to be paid to the officers and soldiers of the Army who served in California."

Mr. HUNTER. As the bill came from the House, it gave these officers double allowance. I believe this is more than the House will allow; but I am willing to give to them the additional pay, by taking the provision as it came from the House.

Mr. GWIN. I will read to the Senate an extract from the Army appropriation act of September, 1850, to which the amendment refers:

"For extra pay to the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States, serving in Oregon or California, $335,854, on the following basis, to wit: That there shall be allowed to each commissioned officer as aforesaid, whilst serving as aforesaid, a per diem, in addition to their regular pay and allowances, of two dollars each, and to each enlisted man as aforesaid, whilst serving as aforesaid, a per diem in addition to their present pay and allowances, equal to the pay proper of each as established by existing laws, said extra pay of the enlisted men to be retained until honorably discharged. This additional pay to continue until the first of March, 1852, or until otherwise provided."

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to add the fifty per centum which we agreed to in relation to the Army. I have no idea the House will agree to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report another amendment, giving the same compensation to the officers therein named as is given by the amendment which has just been agreed to.

After line eleven, page one, insert the following:

"And the several officers who served in the late Arctic expedition which went in search of Sir John Franklin shall, in addition to the pay they have already been granted, be allowed for the period during which they served, the following compensation respectively, viz: To the commander of the expedition the pay of a commander; to passed midshipmen, the pay of lieutenants; to the assistant surgeon, the pay of a surgeon; to midshipmen, the pay of passed midshipmen; all as if engaged on sea service. And that there be allowed to the warrant and petty officers extra pay equal to the regular pay with which they have been accredited for their services on said expedition."

This amendment simply proposes to pay all of these officers at the rate of one grade higher than the positions they actually occupied.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I propose further to amend the bill by adding after the one just adopted:

"And the pay of chaplains in the Navy shall be $1,200 on leave, or waiting orders, and $1,500 while on duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I propose further to amend, by inserting at the end of line twenty, page two, the following:

"And the salary of the assistant purser of the navy-yard at Kittery, Maine, who also discharges the duties of clerk and steward, shall be $750 per annum."

That amendment has been recommended by the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have yet another amendment. After line twenty, page two, insert the following:

"That the pay of the first clerk to the commandant of the navy-yards in New York, Norfolk, and Boston, shall be at the rate of $1,500 per annum, and that the second clerk of the commandants shall be paid at the rate of $900 per annum, from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment; at the end of line twenty-four, page two, add the following:

"It being provided that so much of the act approved March 3d, 1851, entitled an act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1852, as provides that no commutation of rations shall be allowed, except to officers and their attendants, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I propose further to amend by inserting after line two hundred and eighteen, page ten—

"For a scientific investigation and experiment upon the character of elementary substances used as subsistence in the Navy, and the means to prevent their deterioration, $2,500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy."

This amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment. At the end of line thirty-one, insert the following:

"And the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to have completed with the least possible delay, the war steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress approved March 3d, 1842, and that the balance of the appropriation heretofore made for that purpose which has been carried to the surplus fund, shall be used for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am further directed to offer the following amendment, to come in after line thirty-one:

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause to be applied as soon as practicable, to all the steam-vessels belonging to the Government of the United States, J. P. Pirsson's double vacuum steam condenser for furnishing fresh water to marine boilers for the use of the crews."

That is strongly recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. It calls for no appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. It appears to me, Mr. President, that that is legislating for a private individual. There are many claimants to the discovery of these condensers, and I think this is a provision that should not go in the bill.

Mr. BADGER. I think the Senator from Virginia is entirely mistaken. This is not an application on behalf of any private claimant at all. It comes to us under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, who is anxious to have an opportunity of availing himself of the use of this condenser.

Mr. CASS. If an appropriation is required and asked for by the Navy Department, I will vote for it; but I will never vote to put such an improvement in the Navy without knowing anything about it. I must know whether it is necessary. If the Department needs the appropriation I will vote for it; but to legislate that a certain invention shall be used in the Navy, is going too far. There is no legislative authority necessary to authorize the Department to use this invention, if it is necessary. It has all the necessary power for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia raise a question of order, under the rule, in regard to this amendment?

Mr. HUNTER. I will not raise the question of order, but it seems to me to be precisely the same sort of amendment which was offered to the Army bill in regard to the discoverer of ether.

Mr. PEARCE. There was a special commission appointed to inquire into this matter. It has been reported on. I have never seen that report. I do not know what its details are, but if we have such a report, it is right that we should not act upon the subject until we know what the conclusions arrived at are. I think it is not desirable that we should adopt this amendment. It seems to me to be necessary that Congress should be in possession of the information which this report contains. This may possibly be the best condenser in use; but we do not know on any evidence we have before us, whether it is the best adapted for the purpose for which it is intended. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be better to postpone the consideration of it until another time.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it is quite certain from information before the public that we ought not to adopt this amendment. There is a sharp contest now going on between the several patentees on this subject, and the question as to which is the most meritorious is not yet satisfactorily determined. To select one of these men under such circumstances, and give him the privilege of furnishing the United States Navy with condensers, appears to me to be at least doing injustice to others, and adopting a step not very judicious. If the Department desire to make use of any of these inventions, why not leave the Department to choose that which they consider the best and most useful? Why should we be called on here by our legislation to declare which of these inventions is the best, when we know nothing of them whatever? This subject has come upon us very unexpectedly, but I find on my table a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject. I ask that the letter may be read.

It was accordingly read, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, January 24, 1852.

SIR: In pursuance of the authority conferred by the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, approved September 23, 1850, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to examine into the merits of the various condensers for supplying the boilers of marine engines with fresh water, and directing that he report to the House of Representatives the result of said examination, together with his opinion of the value of the test of said condensers to the Government of the United States, and appropriating the sum of $5,000 to carry this provision of the law into effect," I have the honor to report, that for the purpose of conducting the examination required to satisfactory practical results, a board was constituted, consisting of two gentlemen of science and experience in the Department, of knowledge involved in the inquiry, who have applied great labor and research to the investigation, and I now transmit their report for the information of Congress.

It will be observed that twenty-nine different remedies have been proposed for the prevention or removal of corrosion and deposit in marine and other steam boilers by mechanical means, so as to avoid blowing off and removing the deposit, all of which are discussed in this report.

Of these, five are regarded by the commission as entitled to excellence, to wit: The inventions of Messrs. Pirsson, Baldwin, Lynch, and Miller, respectively. But no one of these has received the full approbation of the commission, so as to recommend its adoption by the Government, to the exclusion of all others, and it advises that arrangements be proposed to the several inventors, each of whom claims a patent right, for the construction and use in naval vessels, of a condenser which shall combine the most eligible parts of the apparatus of each, and be more perfect than any one of them. In this opinion the Department concurs. The amounts asked by Messrs. Pirsson and Lynch, for their respective inventions, are stated in the report, and an opinion is also expressed in the probable cost of the apparatus of Mr. Miller.

If the several claimants of patents shall entertain such proposals, a commission or a board of naval engineers may be consulted as to a proper compensation to be made to each.

I respectfully recommend that the report of the commission, which will be found to contain much useful information on this important subject of mechanical and chemical science, be ordered to be published under the supervision of the commissioners.

I have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your obedient servant,

WILL. A. GRAHAM.

Hon. LINN BOYD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. It is manifest from that statement in regard to the report of the scientific board, that they ascertained there were some four or five of these inventions of great excellence, but that they are not prepared to select any particular one as especially worthy of attention from the Government. I think, then, that these inventions should be left to work their own way, and that the inventors should be allowed to pursue their own course; then if the Government conceive it to be necessary to effect a purchase of any of them, such a selection should be made, on complete information, as would render it evident that it was the best that could be made, supposing that it is necessary to select any at all.

Mr. SEWARD. I would suggest to my friend from California [Mr. Gwin] to modify his amendment by striking out the word "shall," and inserting "may" instead of it, thus giving a discretionary power to the Secretary of the Navy. The amendment will then read "that the Secretary of the Navy may, if he deems it expedient," &c.

Mr. GWIN. I accept the modification.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to strike out the name of "Pirsson," and insert the word "any" instead. So that the clause shall read "any steam condenser."

Mr. SHIELDS. As I understand it, the Navy Department at this moment possesses the power of making a fair experiment; and I think it would be wrong to require them, or to suggest to them, to apply this particular condenser to the whole Navy. Why not make the experiment at first in one or two vessels, instead of extending it to all the vessels of the United States. To require the employment of any invention to all the vessels in the Navy that are not thoroughly tested appears to me to be highly injudicious.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I will endeavor to answer the question proposed by my friend, the Senator from Illinois, and I hope it will be satisfactory. My impression is that Senators do not thoroughly understand this subject, and that the mystery and confusion which has enveloped it heretofore is likely to continue, unless some further explanation is made. Although when this debate commenced I did not intend to take any part in it, yet, notwithstanding, I must now ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I explain, as well as I may be able, the circumstances under which this question comes before the Senate, and the necessity there seems to be that Congress should do precisely what the amendment asks them to do.

A steam condenser capable of supplying a vessel with a sufficient quantity of fresh water for her boilers, has long been a desideratum in ocean navigation. I will not detain the Senate by a dissertation on the steam-boiler or engine; all must know the importance of a condenser at sea, to supply fresh water for the boilers. I will proceed at once to show that Pirsson's condenser is the best, the very best, beyond all question the best that has yet been invented, and that experiments, full and ample experiments, have proved it to be all its friends claim for it.

Now, sir, I must be permitted to present to the Senate the following satisfactory testimonials in corroboration of what I have said, and will say, in favor of Mr. Pirsson's condenser:

In reference to Pirsson's steam surface vacuum condenser, Messrs. Henry R. Dunham & Co., of the Archimedes Steam-Engine Works, say:

"We give it as our opinion that the difference of saving in fuel alone would pay for it in a few months' use. There seems to be, at present, a disposition on the part of the owners of steamers, to pay reasonably for any improvement saving fuel, and for the preservation of boilers; both of which your invention accomplishes."

Commodore Stewart, whose opinions of such matters has ever been regarded with respect and confidence, says:

"There has been no improvement conferred on sea-going steamers equal in value to the Pirsson condenser."

Commodore Smith, Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks, says:

"It is the best machine for the purposes for which it is designed I have ever seen, and that all sea-going steam-vessels should be furnished with them for safety, economy, and convenience."

Commodore Shubrick, the present Chief of Bureau of "Construction, Equipment, and Repairs," says:

"The bureau concurs in this view of the late Secretary, and indulges in the hope that Congress, in consideration of the deficiency of the Navy in the only description of steamers which may be considered at all efficient for war purposes, will put in the power of the Department to introduce Pirsson's surface condensers into several new propeller frigates and sloops of war."

Charles H. Haswell, the late Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, in an official report to the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Preston, says in regard to Pirsson's condenser:

"It presents itself in the several points of economy, efficiency, and the duration of operation of a naval steamer, in either of which its application, in my opinion, is imperatively called for. As an exponent of the extent of the economy that would be effected by it in the consumption of fuel alone, by the steamers now existing in our Navy, it would induce a saving of fifty-nine tons of coal per diem."

And again:

"I beg leave to say that, in my conviction, the instrument of Mr. Pirsson, except in the position of the tubes, is wholly novel, complete in all its arrangements, and efficient in its operations; and that the economy of marine steam navigation renders the application of it, or one of similar capacity and efficiency, positively imperative; and, further, that of such consideration is an instrument for the furnishing of fresh water to marine steam engines, that without the immediate application of it to steam engines in this country, foreign Governments will resort to it, and in the lapse of time there will be accorded to them the credit of an improvement in the marine engine, second only to the original construction of it."

Charles W. Copeland, formerly Chief Engineer in the United States Navy, late chief engineer of the Allaire Steam Engine Works, and now an eminent consulting engineer in New York, says:

"In respect to condensation by metallic surfaces, my opinion has often been expressed that this is the only remedy for many of the evils attendant upon ocean steam navigation. Of the numerous plans that have, from time to time, been brought forward to accomplish this object, Pirsson's condenser is the only one which is effectual, and at the same time avoids the evils arising from an expansion and contraction of the parts, which has caused the destruction of all others."

"This condenser has been in use for several years, giving the most satisfactory results in every respect. From my knowledge of it, I have not hesitated to recommend it for sea-going steamers, and in one or two cases it has been adopted on my recommendation, and the most satisfactory evidence furnished in regard to its operation."

"The advantage of this mode of Mr. Pirsson over the ordinary jet condenser I conceive to be—

"First. A saving of fuel to the extent of at least fifteen per cent."

"Second. An increased durability of the boilers, not less than fifty per cent."

"Third. The labor of keeping the boilers in proper condition, both at sea and in port, is very much diminished."

"Fourth. A very great saving in current repairs of boilers."

"Fifth. Boilers of a given power would occupy less room and weigh less in consequence of the 'blowing off' operation being unnecessary."

"Sixth. A much more uniformly efficient vacuum can be maintained at sea with Pirsson's condenser than with any other, and consequently there is not that amount of labor required in attending upon the engines."

B. H. Bartol, Chief Engineer of Merrick & Towne's Steam Engine Works, at Philadelphia, who constructed one of Pirsson's condensers for a steamship, says:

"The Pirsson condenser must, I think, commend itself to general favor, for the reason that there is no contingency connected with it that can cause any delay to the engine; for if we suppose that the fresh water part should entirely give out, the ordinary condenser still remains uninjured. I am well satisfied, however, that there is no part of the condenser but will last as long as the rest of the engine."

Messrs. James J. Sutton & Co., of the Franklin Steam Engine Works, at Philadelphia, say:

"We urged the importance of your invention, and at our solicitation they have ordered it. Please prepare the necessary calculations and instructions, as soon as possible, that we may get the work under way. Make your estimate so as to give us an ample supply of fresh water for the ship's use also, if at any time it should be found necessary."

Captain William W. Hunter, United States Navy, who has had much experience in steam matters, thus expresses himself:

"Pirsson's condenser will cause the same amount of fuel to do one third more work in the propulsion of vessels at sea, and it will double the durability of their iron boilers—consequently rendering the boilers less liable to accident from irregular corrosion; and one third of the tonnage of the vessel, which is saved by economizing fuel, will be available for paying freight."

"In war steamers the advantage gained by the use of Pirsson's condenser is so self-evident that it should be universally adopted."

Chief Engineer George F. Coffee, of the steamship Osprey, which has had the Pirsson condenser attached since 1849, thus speaks of it:

"The boilers of this steamship have undergone a thorough exploration, the result of which is, we found neither the iron plates nor flues in any part injured by corrosion or scales, and they are, to all appearance, just as good as when they first left the boiler shop. The workmen declared they had never before seen so clean a pair of boilers after being used; and this is true: for had we been using salt water, as we should have done if it was not for Pirsson's condenser, the boilers would have been badly scaled and much worn by this time."

"We next examined the condenser, and the result was equally gratifying with that attending the boilers. The pipes we found as perfect and in as good condition as when they were first put in. Indeed, this somewhat astonished me, as I had been frequently told that the pipes would be found furled, or coated with a deposit, which would prevent the steam being condensed. But nothing of a deposit appeared, and the best proof of their cleanliness is, that we closed up the apparatus, leaving the pipes in precisely the same condition that we found them."

"The saving in coal and oil is very considerable. We use now one barrel of oil, where we formerly used three barrels, and a large quantity of tallow besides. The latter we have dispensed with altogether. That a steamship is much safer with Pirsson's condenser than without it, I have been fully convinced by my last year's experience; and of this no better evidence is required than the fact that a much greater volume of steam can be produced by the same amount of fuel than when salt water is used."

The editors of that scientific work, the "JOURNAL OF THE FRANKLIN INSTITUTE," say:

"The condenser of Mr. J. P. Pirsson, which was noticed in the Journal some time since as being in use on board the steamship 'Osprey,' running between this port and Charleston, has been examined within the last few days, while the ship was being refitted for the coming season, and found to be as perfect as when first put in use. The tubes, both internally and externally, were found to be perfectly clean, and the boilers free from scales."

Edward K. Collins, Esq., of the Collins line of steamers, says, August 18, 1852, a few days since:

"Having for a long time entertained a favorable opinion of Pirsson's condenser, I have taken much pains to get every information I could respecting it, and I am happy to say that my opinion has been so fully confirmed, that I shall put it in the next steamship I build."

George W. Aspinwall, Esq., who has had the Pirsson condenser in use on three of his steamers, thus closes a letter recommending it:

"I can only say, I never would send a steamship to sea without the Pirsson condenser, securing, as it does, so GREAT A SAVING IN ALL RESPECTS."

Now, hear what Chief Engineer Roane, of the steamship "Quickstep," says of the advantages of Pirsson's condenser, in a letter to the constructors of the engines, Messrs. Reany, Neafie & Co.; he remarks:

"Can you point to any steamship which has ever steamed continuously for forty-five days, under a constant pressure of forty pounds of steam to the square inch, part of the time, too, in the saltiest of oceans, without ever blowing one drop of water from her boilers, or once drawing the fires? This was done in the Quickstep, and much more."

At another part of the letter he says:

"The vessel was very deeply laden, and we encountered very heavy weather; yet not the slightest accident occurred to any part of the machinery, as on a survey at that port everything was found in perfect order. The boilers and condenser were absolutely as perfect as when they left your works. The rest of our voyage was accomplished with like results."

"Here let me stop for a moment, and consider what has been done. A small steamer, (five hundred and fifty tons,) of inferior power, laden to the water's edge, leaves the wharf at Philadelphia—passes twice through the tropics—through the Straits of Magellan—steams on continuously for some twenty thousand miles, on two occasions of periods of forty to fifty days, not having a fire drawn from her boilers—arrives at her port of destination as perfect as at the start, ready for a new cargo, and not a place to spend a shilling upon the engines or boilers if you would."

"But I have not half done with stating the remarkable things performed by the condenser or resulting from it. One of the most gratifying was the vacuum, and the temperature of the feed water. The vacuum gauges were syphons, hence effected by every change of the atmosphere. When the barometer stood at thirty inches, the mercury in the short leg of my gauges stood constantly at fourteen and a half inches below equilibrium, or equal to a vertical column of twenty-nine inches, and feed water, according to the temperature of the ocean, was from 150 degrees to 160 degrees F."

Again he says:

"Some amusing incidents occurred on the voyage. My assistants had very poor faith in the condenser when we left, and prophesied all manner of difficulties. My first assistant stuck to it that the pipes would all choke up. At Rio I was taken sick, and while unable to do duty he opened the caps to examine the pipes. His astonishment and disappointment on finding nothing there was very great. He said he could hardly believe it possible that it should be in such perfect order. I was constantly visited by engineers in every port, and from steamers of all nations. Their surprise on examining the admirable condition of my boilers was unbounded, and they would constantly contrast it with that of their own, many of which were badly scaled and burnt, and undergoing costly repairs. An old Brazilian officer who came to see me said, after a long and careful examination, 'I knew that if this was ever found out, it would be some Yankee that would do it; it is a great thing.' And so I say, it is a great thing; and you will never find me operating an engine without one, if I can help it. If any engineer would say otherwise, let him look at the crazy and unsafe condition of the boilers in the Pacific at this time, especially in the pioneer steamers. All those might now have been sound and strong, had Pirsson's condensers been on board."

Mr. Aspinwall, the owner of the Quickstep, in a letter dated July 22d, speaking of Mr. Roane, says:

"You may count him as a very reliable, excellent, and faithful man, and one in whom you can confide. I highly recommend him as a good mechanic and engineer, and a trustworthy man. He served seven years with Messrs. Stillman, Allen & Co., of the Novelty Works."

Further important testimony is afforded by Chief Engineer Buck, of the steamship Albatross, who has had a long experience with Pirsson's condenser. He says, among other things:

"The greatest consumption of coal with the fresh water apparatus has been, and now is, twelve tons per twenty-four hours, and the boilers were always kept perfectly clean; while, however, we were using salt water, as we had to do with the jet part of the condenser, the consumption of coal was increased about six tons per twenty-four hours, and the whole interior surface of the boilers became covered with scale, while the speed of the engine was also materially diminished by reason of a deficiency in steam."

Again, he adds:

"The action of the fresh water has separated the scale which had formed inside of the boiler, and the quality of the water supplied by the condenser is so pure and fresh that I would cheerfully compromise for no worse for drinking while at sea."

Then comes the testimony of Chief Engineer Simon Baker, who had charge of the steamship Commodore Stockton, from Philadelphia to San Francisco, and for many months afterwards in the Pacific ocean. He says:

"On our arrival at San Francisco, a searching investigation into the condition of our machinery, boilers, and condenser, was instituted, and it was universally admitted that no steamer had ever arrived there in such perfect condition. It seemed to astonish the engineers of other steamers there as much as it pleased me, although my previous experiments with the condenser had satisfied me of its inestimable value."

"I am now about to return home, and I leave the Commodore Stockton at this port, with her machinery in the most satisfactory condition. The boilers and the condenser are as perfectly clean and free from scale or deposit of any kind as when they were first made, and not a single dollar has been expended on the boilers, notwithstanding they have been in constant service for nine months. I know of no other boilers which have been in use on this ocean for three months, that are not covered with scale, and many of them that have been in use for two years are entirely destroyed."

"Our boilers have been constantly supplied with fresh water, and a vacuum regularly maintained at twenty-seven inches; the feed water returned to the boilers at 118°, and has scarcely ever varied from this temperature. When we left Philadelphia we were burning bituminous coal, and consumed four tons and a half (accurately weighed) per twenty-four hours, carrying thirty-four and thirty-five inches pressure of steam, and working at full stroke. In order to test more fully the advantages of the condenser, as you desired, in going to Rio Janeiro, I shut off the fresh water apparatus, and used your condenser as a common jet condenser. Here the incalculable value of the apparatus was made very manifest. The consumption of coal was increased twenty per cent.; and the temperature of the feed water was reduced nearly 15°, and the vacuum fell and became very irregular. The difference between your fresh water apparatus and the ordinary condenser is here shown by the steadiness of the vacuum; because, through all the changes of the temperature even, the vacuum was preserved at twenty-seven inches, whilst by the ordinary condenser I could not manage to obtain a steady vacuum under the most favorable circumstances."

And he thus ends his letter:

"In conclusion, I would assure you that if engineers generally were acquainted with the value of your condenser, they would go to sea in no steamer to which it was not attached. As to the pecuniary saving, it is too large for owners of sea-going steamers to disregard, as they can be run at so much less expense, that no vessel without them can successfully compete with those having them on board."

Mr. Thompson, the President of the Atlantic Steam Navigation Company, thus speaks of Pirsson's condenser:

"It will at all times afford me pleasure to aid in the extension of the use of the condenser, for two reasons: First, it is a great private benefit to the owners of steamers, because it makes them more economical, and will therefore tend to increase the steam marine, and extend commerce. Second, it is a public good, because it preserves the strength of marine boilers, and tends greatly to the safety of those on board such steamers as use it."

Then comes engineer Samuel Genter, of the steamship Utah, who says:

"I have had charge of the Utah since she was built. Pirsson's patent condenser is attached to the engine, and operates in the most satisfactory manner, furnishing an abundant supply of fresh water to the boilers. I have condensed steam at forty pounds to the inch, whole stroke, when the water was at a temperature of 70° F., and obtained a vacuum of 26½ inches, and feed water 150° to 160° F. Maximum consumption of coal three and a half tons per twenty-four hours."

"I have been visited by many engineers, some of the most prejudiced against the introduction of new things, who have unanimously expressed themselves satisfied with the perfection of your arrangement."

"From my experience, I am prepared to make this offer: I will guarantee to take any well-constructed steamship round the world, and return to port with the boilers in the most perfect condition, as far as any deposit of scale or corrosion is concerned, provided your condenser is properly applied on board. On this I will stake my professional reputation."

Finally, we are placed in possession of the testimony of a board of the most experienced practical steam engineers of the Navy, who were recently appointed to examine the whole subject of condensation, and they state:

"We consider Pirsson's to be the best surface condenser known," for the following reasons:

"No surface condenser can be safely or judiciously used except it contain a provision, or is so arranged, that it can instantaneously and at will be converted into a common jet condenser in the event of fracture or other derangement of the pipes, parts, &c. A surface condenser must possess, therefore, this important property; if this be absent, other merits may deserve admiration, but cannot recommend it as practical; and here we fully agree with the commission in the following opinion, viz: 'That we would not be willing to trust a vessel of our own property without a full provision for a resort to an ordinary injection condenser, and which we cannot but consider as a first and most essential point in any device of the kind.' This important requisite, the commission truly states, belongs to Pirsson's condenser, and they attribute it to Symington's. Pirsson's, however, is the only condenser presenting the new and important features of the DOUBLE VACUUM, by which the condensing surfaces are relieved from the atmospheric pressure, and consequently strain and leakage, causes alone of the failure of all other plans of surface condensation. This is not the case with Symington's condenser, mentioned by the commission in connection with Pirsson's, as affecting the same objects. Symington's has a single vacuum, and if used as a surface condenser, has all the disadvantages of the atmospheric pressure on the pipes, similar to Hall's, Miller's, and others.

"Question 4. Is it advisable to make the application of the most approved condenser to all steamers of the Navy?"

"Answer. We are of opinion, that, for the reasons herebefore stated, it is advisable to apply, as soon as practicable, the CONDENSER OF PIRSSON, as now being fitted to the United States steamship Alleghany, to ALL STEAMERS of the Navy, plying in sea water.

"This condenser has already been applied to eight merchant steamships; it has been in use in some of them for several years, and the practical results fully bear out our estimate and opinions. There are also two large steamships now being fitted with it at New York."

Mr. President, in addition to all this, we have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, stating that a board of examiners had investigated the merits of Mr. Pirsson's and several other condensers, and that they had found none of them perfect—all might be improved. For all practical purposes this report was quite useless; it could have no influence to guide the Secretary. Since that examination and report, however, there have been experiments made which prove that this condenser entirely answers the purpose intended; and is beyond all kind of doubt, the best that has yet been used in our navigation, and is an instrument by which hundreds of thousands of dollars may be saved to the United States within the coming year, provided all our own steamers can be supplied with it. This practical demonstration in its favor, blowing to nothing the conclusions of scientific examiners, so bothered the Navy Department, that the Secretary would take no action on the subject without the authority of Congress.

Sir, the opposition outside of this Senate to the use of this condenser, has been untiring, and is as groundless as it seems to have been interested and vindictive. Various means have been adopted by persons outside of the Senate to destroy or disparage Mr. Pirsson's invention, and to alarm and excite the Navy Department and members of Congress. The most absurd reports have been circulated, which have contributed to embarrass the Secretary. I hope the Senator from Illinois is answered.

I did hope that it would not be necessary to detain the Senate by going so far into the merits of this machine. I did hope that all that would be necessary to satisfy any one, even my friend the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, would be, that it was recommended by all the Chief Engineers of the Navy, by the head of the Bureau of Construction, by the Secretary of the Navy, and by the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who, after a careful examination, do advise its adoption in the Navy. Is there not something due to this careful examination of the subject, something due to all these opinions expressed in the decided way in which they have been expressed?

Again, amongst the evidences of the superiority of Pirsson's condenser, and that his condenser is likely to answer the purposes for which the Secretary is to be authorized to use it, there will be found in the testimony that has been presented to the Naval Committee, a statement of the engineer of the Quickstep, on board of which this condenser had been used. That vessel went to California from Philadelphia. She made one continuous passage, except when she stopped for coal, and her boilers were supplied with fresh water from the time she left Philadelphia till she arrived at San Francisco. On her arrival at which place, her engine and boilers were examined, and they were found to be not only in good order, but absolutely as perfect as when she left Philadelphia. Now, sir, I will ask whether this well-authenticated experiment does not justify the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, of the Bureau of Construction, and of the Naval Committee, in a way so as to leave no doubt as to the expediency of immediately applying this condenser to the Navy.

If Senators are resolved to disregard these incontestable evidences of the value of this machine, in consequence of information they have got from other, and perhaps not the most honorable or disinterested parties—if they are determined to put down the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, of the Bureau of Construction, and the unanimous recommendation of the Naval Committee, in consequence of what they have heard outside of the Senate, let them do it. I shall do my duty. I stand up here as a member of the Naval Committee, to defend the recommendation of that committee, and I place my reputation, not only as a member of that committee, but the little professional reputation I have, on the statement that the Pirsson condenser will be found to answer better than any other heretofore used.

Mr. President, what do gentlemen, in the face of these experiments and recommendations, propose? Why, that this subject should be passed over for the present, and that all the boilers in your steamships shall continue to use salt water for the next year, to their great expense and detriment. The boiler of the vessel to which I have alluded, when examined at San Francisco, after a continuous voyage of twenty thousand miles, was found to be perfect, and, in the language of the engineer, "not a place to spend a shilling on the engine or boilers if you would;" and I say that if the ordinary condenser had been used, it would have cost many "shillings," if not half the original cost of the boilers to repair them.

Sir, why should this amendment not be adopted? Gentlemen say because there is some doubt on the subject. I say there ought to be no doubt—there will be no doubt in the world on the mind of any candid inquirer, that this is the best condenser that has ever been used. The Secretary of the Navy did not doubt; the Naval Committee do not doubt—and we come here this morning, all of us, and ask you to direct the Secretary of the Navy to use it. We ask this authority because, in consequence of various reports and suggestions made to him, the Secretary feels constrained to hesitate, lest he might incur too great expense without the authority of law—and we ask Congress to authorize him to do whatever he may see fit to do, and pay whatever he may see fit to pay for its use. Surely, sir, we do no more than our duty. This is not an unreasonable request to be made to Congress. But gentlemen say that this machine may be improved, may be made better. We certainly admit that it may be made better, but we also say that until you do get a better one, in the name of common sense and prudence adopt this, which is admitted to be the best now in use, and will save to the Government a large amount of money.

If Senators are not yet satisfied, nothing remains for me to do but to make a long, scientific discussion on the subject of marine engines, and the use of coal, to show the absolute necessity that something should be done to reduce the enormous expense of your steam navy. Gentlemen do not appear to understand much about steam navigation, and I fear it would take more time than the Senate can well spare to make them comprehend it fully. My belief is, sir, and I stake my standing here in the Senate upon it, that if you adopt this condenser on all your steamships, you will save nearly $200,000 a year by the operation. In the hope that I have finally satisfied my friend from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, as well as other Senators, as to the importance of this measure, I will detain the Senate no longer.

Mr. CASS. I am utterly opposed to this species of legislation. This is not a fit subject of legislation. I am not among the number of those alluded to by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, who have been operated upon by external pressure. I never heard a word about this case until it came up here, and then I must say that the proposition struck me as very extraordinary. I have been surprised, also, at the discussion that has taken place. Why, sir, my object is to avoid external pressure. Every member must perceive that there is too much of it, especially towards the end of a session, and we are hurried into the adoption of measures which we ought not to adopt.

I repeat, this is a question of administration. Why should you legislate as to a particular condenser any more than a particular boiler, or the breech of a musket, or the size of a cannon, or any other improvement that may take place in any measure required in the operations of the Government? In the progress of improvements, may not your Executive adopt them whenever he pleases? Is it not within his constitutional power, if he has the means? If the Secretary comes to us, and says that he wants a certain amount appropriated for his Department for the purpose of enabling him to try this condenser, I am willing to give it to him; but I am not prepared to vote that he shall use this particular condenser, because—I avow my ignorance of the whole matter—I know nothing about it, and I am therefore unwilling to vote public money for this purpose. If the Executive wants authority to do this, I am perfectly willing to vote an appropriation, to be placed at the control of the Navy Department, to enable them to put the best condenser in the vessels of the Navy of the United States. That is all that can be properly required. It appears to me it is all that any Senator ought to require. Then we have a proper responsibility on the part of the executive department. If we give the money to the Department, to apply as they please, we can hold them responsible for it; but if we go on in this way, they will not be responsible.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent to lay this bill aside for the purpose of presenting a report from the Committee of Conference on the civil and diplomatic bill. Mr. HUNTER. I will state in general terms that we have preserved the most material amendments of the Senate. Most of the remaining amendments we have agreed to with amendments which do not alter them much. I believe that on the whole we have done the best we could, though perhaps not all that every one would desire.

The report was agreed to.

A message from the House of Representatives was subsequently received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had agreed to the report of the Committee of Conference, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1853, and that the bill be amended accordingly.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House "making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June 1853," the question pending being on the amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS to the amendment of Mr. GWIN.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to say only a word in reply to my honorable friend from New Jersey. I regret very much to differ from him on this occasion; he is much better informed on the subject than I can possibly be. My only objection to this is my want of information and my ignorance on the subject. I am not qualified to judge of it as he is, and I wish to assure him that I never heard a word about the matter until it came up this morning. No one has ever spoken to me on the subject, either in or out of the Senate. I have not opposed it because I have received wrong information on the subject, but because I have received no information on the subject.

I want to know two things. First, what is the best invention of this kind; and next, whether, when that invention is applied on a steam vessel, it will be successful. As the Secretary of the Navy is the person qualified to judge of these matters, I prefer to leave them to him. Why does the Secretary of the Navy come here to ask us to give him permission to do that which he is already able to do without the permission? Why does he not take the responsibility himself? He is there for that purpose. He can take the best invention and apply it to a public vessel; and if it succeeds on that vessel, he can extend it to other public vessels. He can do that without this legislation. He can ascertain what is the best invention, and then he can make a fair experiment; and if successful, apply it to the whole Navy. Is not that so? Then, why does he come to us, and recommend to us to recommend to him to do that which he can do without any recommendation on our part?

Mr. STOCKTON. If my friend from Illinois desires another answer to his interrogatory, from me, I will give it. I intended to do so when I last addressed the Senate. I thought I stated that the Secretary of the Navy wanted authority to use this condenser, in consequence of the difficulties and confusion which have been thrown in his way by persons interested in other condensers, and especially because the report made by scientific gentlemen, who were appointed for that purpose, was not sufficiently definite or conclusive. The Secretary did not feel himself at liberty to go on in so important a business without authority of Congress. It will be perceived that this has been forced out of the ordinary course of departmental regulation, by the interference of persons not at all connected with the Navy, and who are interested in other condensers. What we ask is merely to disembarass the present Secretary from the difficulties that seem to have constrained the action of his predecessor.

Mr. CASS. Do I understand that the report of the board was unfavorable to the application?

Mr. STOCKTON. It was more favorable to this than to any other condenser; but not conclusive.

Mr. CASS. But still not entirely favorable? Mr. STOCKTON. I wish to be perfectly understood. The board thought, as I understand the report, that the Pirsson condenser was the best; but that parts taken from several condensers might possibly make a better one than his. I have in my hand papers which prove that I am not mistaken.

Mr. SHIELDS. No doubt of it.

Mr. STOCKTON. Now, sir, as a legislator, called upon to determine what is the best course for the Department of the Navy to pursue under the circumstances, and especially, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am constrained to insist, with earnestness, that this amendment ought to be adopted by the Senate. Our steam navy is costing annually too much money, and I believe we may reduce its expenses $200,000 a year, by a judicious application of this condenser to all the engines. Is that not a matter of importance? How is this conclusion to be avoided? How can Senators satisfy themselves to let the present expenses go on, simply because the commission did not report that this condenser was perfect, and incapable of improvement? They reported more favorably of this than any other condenser; the only difficulty in their minds seems to have been, that they thought another one might possibly be made better than Pirsson's. When such a one is made we can use it; but, in the mean time, let us apply this.

Mr. President, I have given you the experience of persons who are engaged in steam vessels in the mercantile marine—men who are apt to do that which is best; especially that which is most economical. I cited in my former remarks, the instance of the Quickstep steamer which went to California, and stated that on her arrival there, her engines and boilers were in as good condition as when she left Philadelphia. This is no exaggeration; the evidence in my hand proves it. Upon so serious a subject as this I am disposed to confine myself within the limits of exact figures.

Here is a letter from the engineer of that steamer to which I have before referred, stating these facts, and his great surprise at the result. Here is also a letter from Mr. George Aspinwall, owner, or part owner of that vessel. Here, likewise, is a letter addressed to myself, from eminent and skillful mechanics, Reany & Neafie, in Philadelphia, written to me simply because they knew I felt an interest in such experiments.

Now, I think if Senators have faith in any human testimony—if they can believe what is testified to by the most reliable men, they must believe the concurrent testimony of these witnesses, and they must come to the conclusion that this is the best condenser now in use or known. If this be still a disputed fact, then we must go further into the testimony. But I do not think it can longer be doubted. Admitting, then, that it is the best condenser—admitting that it has done much to economize fuel, and preserve the boilers and engines, I ask Senators if they can resist the conclusion, that it is their duty to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to use it if he sees fit, and enable him to reduce the expenses of our naval marine. Sir, as a friend of the Navy—as a friend of economy—as a friend of improvement and of progress, I ask Senators to reconsider their opinions—to do justice to an honorable and useful citizen, and to vote for the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am very sorry to hear the Senator from New Jersey say that the Secretary of the Navy is embarrassed on this subject. I am sure that if my honorable friend should ever be

Secretary of the Navy, and a question of this kind should come up, he would not feel embarrassed about it.

Mr. STOCKTON. There would be no embarrassment then. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIELDS. I am sure of it. I do not want any man in that position who is not willing to take responsibility on a point appertaining to his duty. Any man who does not take the proper responsibility of his situation would not make as good a Secretary of the Navy as my honorable and distinguished friend from New Jersey. The objection that I make is not touched at all by what the honorable Senator has said. I believe all that he has said. This may be the best condenser on earth. It may be necessary to the American Navy. I am willing to tell the Secretary to get the very best condenser on the face of the globe, and to apply that condenser to the vessels of the Navy; but that is precisely the authority which he has now, and consequently I do not see any necessity for the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. GWIN. I would suggest to Senators that they had better condense their remarks on this condenser as much as possible, so that the Navy appropriation bill may not be lost by the consumption of time.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not in the habit of dilating very much; but I would say to the honorable Senator from New Jersey that I think he argues this question upon an entire misapprehension of the nature and character of the amendment which is proposed. The proposition is not to restrict or limit the power of the Secretary of the Navy, but to enlarge it; and if this invention has one half, or a tithe of the merits which the honorable Senator from New Jersey imputes to it, what has he to fear from the amendment which I have suggested? My proposition is to strike out the name of the individual and bring him into competition with others. The honorable Senator says this condenser is immeasurably ahead of all others. Why then not leave the Secretary to investigate the matter?

Mr. STOCKTON. Does the Senator say in his amendment that the Secretary of the Navy shall select the best condenser?

Mr. DAVIS. My proposition is to leave the Secretary to select a proper condenser. I have confidence in his judgment.

Mr. STOCKTON. If the Senator will put in "best," I will agree to it.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course the Secretary would select the best condenser.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then why not say so? I will agree to that.

Mr. DAVIS. I was about to say that in a trial had by scientific men who have examined this subject, some three or four inventions were brought out, which were so nearly alike, that these scientific gentlemen could not decide to give a preference to any one of them over the others. I ask if in experimenting it is not the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, if he employs the improvements on different vessels, to employ the inventions of different inventors? Why should he be limited to one? There is no sense—no judgment in that; and certainly it does not comport with the public interest. If you are to try these inventions, let there be a fair contest, let the matter be open to inquiry, and let the United States have the benefit of the best mode.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am willing to strike out Mr. Pirsson's name, and agree to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which is:

"And the Secretary of the Navy may, if he deem it proper, cause to be applied as soon as practicable, to all the steam vessels belonging to the United States, any steam condenser which may be found best calculated for the purpose of furnishing fresh water for marine boilers, and for the use of the crew."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to add after the appropriation "for the repairs and erection of buildings for the Naval Academy," the following:

"For the purchase of ground adjoining the premises occupied by the Naval Academy, extension of walls, making new street and wharf, and changing the front of the buildings, $32,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to insert after the appropriation for meteorological observations, the following:

"For the payment of the salary of Professor James P. Espy during the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1848, no appropriation having been made by Congress for that year, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to insert, at the end of the appropriations for navy-yards, the following:

"For the purchase of the land known as Edward's estate, being about six acres, adjoining the navy-yard at Gosport, Virginia, $9,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, when a valid title shall be given for the same, and the assent for the transfer to the United States obtained from the Legislature of Virginia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to insert after the provision for the pay of the marine corps, the following:

"For pay and allowances, as waiting orders, to the officers of the marine corps who were disbanded under the order of the Navy Department of the 18th of August, 1848, from the period of their disbandment until their restoration under the act of March 3d, 1849, $8,000; and the said officers shall be considered as having the same rights in regard to rank, pay, and emoluments, and in all other respects, as if they had not been out of service."

Mr. WALKER. I have an amendment to offer to that amendment, which I hope the Senator will accept. It is to add—

And the pay of the watchmen in the various navy-yards shall hereafter be $500 each per annum, instead of the pay now received by them: Provided, Their present pay does not equal or exceed the sum aforesaid.

Mr. GWIN. There is another amendment to which that will be much more appropriate.

Mr. WALKER. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to insert at the end of the first section, the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Navy to have constructed and placed in one of the navy-yards, the instrument known as W. H. Linsey's Fluid Meter, $2,000."

Mr. CASS. I object to the amendment, for the reason that I know nothing at all about it. Let the Secretary of the Navy put this instrument in the navy-yards, if he thinks proper. This is another question of administration, and not of legislation. We shall break down the executive departments if we go on in this way, and Congress will assume, like the National Convention in France, to do everything, from buying the smallest instrument wanted up to the highest function of Government. If we go on in this way, we shall be usurping the whole powers of the Government. It is all wrong.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to this amendment. The constructor of this apparatus is a poor engineer, who has been for several years engaged upon its construction, and has produced a work very much wanted—the want of which has been felt throughout this country. It has been examined by a board, consisting of two captains of the Navy and Engineer Copeland, who recommended that it should be put in the New York navy-yard. Thereupon, a former Secretary of the Navy ordered it to be put up there. The Secretary soon after went out of office, and the succeeding Secretary, Mr. Graham, ordered it to be put up, but it has not yet been put up. The engineer is unable to put it up without an appropriation. I would state, in regard to this invention, that it develops accurately the evaporative power of all kinds of coal. It tests accurately the work done by every engine on the longest voyage, and every locomotive on shore, or any engine in a work-shop. An apparatus of this kind is now employed in England on many of the railroads; and evidence was adduced before the Naval Committee, showing that one English road saved $100,000 last year by its use. The Naval Committee examined the subject very thoroughly, and they had no doubt that the interests of the country would be promoted by this appropriation.

Mr. CASS. I know nothing about the invention. I do not know but that it may be the greatest invention of modern times. My objection is to the principle of legislating for particular inventions and particular men. I shall be willing to appropriate money to enable the Navy Department to use it if it wants it, but first strike out the name, and let the Secretary obtain the best invention he can for the purpose. It is wrong to undertake to legislate for the particular invention of A or B, without knowing anything at all about it.

I should absolutely betray the confidence of my constituents, if I were to undertake to vote in this way on all such questions.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the name of the individual may be stricken out, so as to leave the Secretary of the Navy to employ the best invention for the purpose. I have no doubt he will employ this one, because he has recommended it very strongly.

Mr. CASS. If the Navy Department want such an instrument, I am very willing to give them authority to use one, and leave them upon their responsibility to select the best instrument.

Mr. MALLORY. I am willing to strike out the name.

Mr. SHIELDS. Even then the amendment is subject to all the objections which have been urged. Why do we legislate to compel the Department to do certain things for which they do not call. In my opinion, it is wrong. If we load this bill down with all sorts of propositions, we shall certainly defeat it.

Mr. MALLORY. This amendment is not to compel the Secretary of the Navy to erect this instrument; it only authorizes him to do it if he thinks proper.

Mr. CASS. Can he not do it now? Why should we legislate in this way?

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to add:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to select a site for a navy-yard and naval depot in the Bay of San Francisco, in California, or the neighboring waters, either by purchase or by reservation of public land, as the case may be, and shall cause the same to be surveyed, and a plat thereof to be recorded in proper form. And when such selection shall have been made, the said Secretary shall make such arrangements as may be necessary to establish a navy-yard and naval depot, upon the most approved and economical plan, on the site so obtained; and cause to be erected a foundry, machine shop, blacksmith shop, boiler shop, engine house, pattern shop, carpenter shop, and store house."

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to complete the contract with the patentees for the construction of the basin and railway in the said navy-yard, in pursuance of the agreement made with them therefor, and for the floating dock, under the act of September 28th, 1850, as stated in his report to the House of Representatives, dated January 20, 1851; Provided, It can be done for a sum not exceeding $840,000 as agreed upon; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated towards and for the purpose of carrying into effect this and the preceding section of this act."

Mr. GWIN. This subject has been fully discussed before the Senate, and I suppose every one understands it. The proposition is to establish a navy-yard, and also a basin and railway, in connection with the floating dock in California. It is not necessary to go into any further discussion of the subject.

Mr. CLARKE. With due deference to the honorable Senator from California, I think this proposition has not been fully discussed. There was a proposition made in the Senate to add an appropriation of this description to the deficiency bill, and I believe the subject was also brought up as a separate bill. A great deal was then said, and very ingeniously and eloquently said by an honorable friend of mine; but there was not a very full discussion.

This proposition is to provide for a navy-yard and for all the appendages of a navy-yard—everything that can be imagined that should be attached to a navy-yard—and in addition to that a basin and railway in California. I wish my honorable friends from California to understand that I am not opposed to any reasonable and proper appropriation for California, her interests, and her convenience; but I am opposed to this manner of legislation, which at a late hour of the session, when there is no time to investigate the subject, comes in to ask for an appropriation which will, in the end, amount to more than $3,000,000.

As it regards the basin and railway for California, I have simply to say now, that no doubt that would be a very great improvement in the Bay of San Francisco; and it may be right and proper that the Government should construct a basin and railway there; but we have now on its way to California a sectional dock, which I believe is three hundred and fifty feet long; and for which the Government of the United States contracted to pay $610,000. The sectional dock has been prepared and is said to be shipped for California. The contractors notified the Secretary of the Navy that they should demand of the Government demurrage and damages if the Government were not ready to receive the dock upon its arrival in California. No site had been authoritatively selected for a navy-yard; and there was no place to put the sectional dock when it arrived. There was nothing to which it could be attached. The consequence was that the Secretary of the Navy was compelled, as he says, to lease this dock, without any compensation whatever, to the contractors for three years. They are to have the benefit of the use of the dock for three years after its arrival, because the Government of the United States were in no condition to receive it.

There has been a commission sent from this section of country to that to select a site for a navy-yard in the Bay of San Francisco. Rumor says that they have made a selection, but there is no official information that a site has been selected. There is no place for a sectional dock when it arrives. The contractors have already received $610,000 for it; and because the Government has no place for it, they are to have the use of it for three years, on the single condition, as I understand from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, that it is to be returned in good order and condition. This basin and railway may be necessary hereafter; but is it necessary now? Why, in the great city of New York, the commercial emporium of the country, they have not, as I understand, a basin and railway, but they use the sectional dock and the floating dock. There is a stone dock belonging to the Government of the United States at Brooklyn, and I believe that on one or two occasions the officers of the Government have allowed that dock to be used for commercial purposes in emergencies. The sectional dock in California is, I apprehend, competent to do all that is required for the wants of the Government within the Bay of San Francisco. Upon that dock, which is three hundred and fifty feet in length, any vessel of the Navy of the United States may be lifted, and raised, and brought into sight, so that persons can work upon it. I have never thought that the Government was bound to supply docks for the commercial marine. Commercial men have usually supplied themselves with docks until this thing has been done for the young and thriving State of California.

I do not propose to go into the discussion at length. I have before me a pile of documents containing all the contracts that have been made; descriptions of a basin and railway with sectional dock, and of a basin and railway with piers and without piers. But if this question is to be examined upon this bill, and we are to go into the subject, I shall feel it my duty to go into the subject at length, let the consequence be what it may. But, as this proposition is made as in Committee of the Whole, and as I am not desirous of inflicting upon the Senate a good or a bad speech, I will now suspend the observations which I have to make. I am willing to let the vote be taken; but if the amendment should be adopted by the Senate now, I shall feel it to be my duty, after the bill shall be reported to the Senate, before the amendment is voted upon there, to discuss it at length. But I say to the friends of this measure, that if, at the next session of Congress, when a site for a navy-yard shall have been selected, when we shall have become satisfied that a basin and railway is necessary, or whenever the Secretary of the Navy shall recommend Congress to make an appropriation for a basin and railway, I will withdraw my opposition. At this moment, however, I cannot agree to vote $840,000 for a basin and railway now, when you have no site for a navy-yard; when you have loaned your sectional dock for three years, because you had no place to put it. I consider that it is at this time unnecessary, and I humbly submit to the Senate that it would be better to reject the amendment, unless the friends of the measure withdraw it. I shall make no further observations now; but, if the amendment should be insisted upon, after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate, I shall feel myself bound to go through with the whole subject.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, we are placed in a peculiar situation with regard to this amendment. I am not going to enter into any discussion as to the propriety of making it. It has been heretofore determined, unanimously, by the Committee on Naval Affairs—and their action has been approved by the Senate—that the United States had made a valid contract, binding in honor, with these parties, for the erection of this basin and railway. If it is ever to be erected, there is no time to be lost. My own opinion is, that it is the poorest and most wretched economy to postpone the erection of this work (which is, in the first place, necessary, and which, in the next place, we are obliged to execute by a contract binding upon the honor and faith of the nation) when it must necessarily occupy a considerable amount of time to complete it, when the price is established, and when the Government can gain nothing in that respect by delay.

But my friend from Rhode Island, with his large bundle of papers in his hand, says that if this amendment be now persisted in, he will go into the examination which those papers may require, whatever may be the consequences. We are thus in the power of my friend. It is more important to get through with the Navy appropriation bill than to insist upon the amendment, under these circumstances. I therefore recommend to the honorable chairman of the committee, that by common consent of the committee the amendment may be withdrawn. We cannot sacrifice the naval appropriations for the consideration of this question. We are now at such a period of the session, that if my friend from Rhode Island perseveres in what he has declared—and no one who knows him will doubt that he will carry out what he has said—our whole time will be consumed in this debate. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. GWIN. It will be recollected that two years ago, after full discussion in this body, a bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for this basin and railway. It will also be recollected, that owing to a dissension between the contractors and the patentees, the State of California has not had anything appropriated for the support of this dock. I mean to have nothing to do with this dissension. The Senator from Rhode Island makes a statement with regard to this amendment that I regret very much, if correct; and that is, that he intends to speak at length in opposition to it, if it be persisted in. He says that it proposes all the paraphernalia of a navy-yard. Why, he will see that it is according to the very specification made out by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] some time ago. It is nothing like an extensive navy-yard; but these are works proposed by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Pennsylvania. Of course, they may be enlarged hereafter.

In the next place, the Senator from Rhode Island has stated, and reiterated the statement that we have no selection for a navy-yard. Why, it has been selected twice by two boards of commissioners. It was selected by a board ordered out in 1849. It has also been selected by a board sent out last spring, and who have, by this time, arrived at New York; for I see by a telegraphic dispatch this morning that they came on the last steamer, and are now in New York. They have selected the same site that was selected before, and which is one of the best sites in the world for a navy-yard, and a basin, and railway, and dock. I have examined it myself, and know its capacity. It has been selected twice; and no better point could be selected.

I am not going into the discussion of this matter at present. I would merely propose to the Senator from Rhode Island to let the question be now taken in Committee of the Whole; let the bill be reported to the Senate, and then if he insists on speaking on the subject at length, I will agree rather than to jeopardize the bill, to have the amendment withdrawn.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish merely to make a statement in reply to my friend from California. He implicates me in regard to a matter of fact. It is true, that in 1849, some board selected a certain place, I do not know where, in the Bay of San Francisco; but this selection was not deemed sufficiently authentic, or to have been made with sufficient intelligence and care; and last spring, I believe, a commission was sent from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific, to revise that selection, and with power to recommend any other site. I recollect very well that Commodore Sloat was here before he started on that commission, and I talked with him on the subject. They have been there; and the Senator says that, from telegraphic information which he has received, they have arrived, after having selected a site. I do not know, nor does the Senate know, nor does the Secretary of the Navy know, that they have made any selection at all. If the honorable Senator knows, from any private communication to himself, that they have made a selection, of course, it is so; for whatever he asserts, on his own authority, no gentleman will give more credence to than myself. But I want the Senator to understand me; I wish to say to him that it is necessary that the Board of Commissioners should report, that the Secretary of the Navy should examine their report, and that the President should adopt their report, before there can be a site established for a navy-yard in the Bay of San Francisco. When that shall be done, it will be time enough for Congress to legislate on the subject; but until it is done, you do not know what you are legislating about.

Now, with regard to another thing, I was probably mistaken, and I must be permitted to explain that for a few moments. A bill was introduced into the Senate by the honorable Senator from California, which the Senator from Pennsylvania said would take some four or five millions of dollars. I supposed that this was the same proposition, somewhat curtailed, to meet the economical views of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have nothing to say as to the amount proposed to be appropriated. The amount, I know, is large. I do not think it necessary to have all of these establishments just yet.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not exactly understand what the honorable Senator from Rhode Island said about meeting my views. It never will accord with my views to establish a basin and railway in California.

Mr. CLARKE. I did not say so. I was stating, in answer to the remarks of the honorable Senator from California, that I did not understand exactly the provisions of this amendment. The Senator from California said it was in conformity with the views of the Senator from Pennsylvania—that is to say, it was restricted as he proposed to restrict it. I never supposed the Senator was in favor of it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It was not my intention to say anything upon this subject; but as I have been alluded to several times, I will say a few words.

Mr. President, I am in favor of establishing a navy-yard and depôt in California, and I submitted at an early part of the session a proposition, as a substitute for the bill presented by the honorable Senator from California, having that object in view. But whenever the subject of a navy-yard and depôt in California has been brought forward, this basin and railway, which will cost from $800,000 to $1,000,000, is put into it. That proposition was considered and voted down at the last Congress, and it ought not to have been brought forward again. The basins and railways connected with these docks upon the Atlantic seaboard have not yet had a ship-of-the-line upon them. They may have had what some people consider as equivalent to it, but they have never had upon them a ship-of-the-line as required by the contract. I think that if we are to have a basin and railway in California, we ought to have it fairly tested upon the Atlantic seaboard first.

Mr. GWIN. I think the Senator is altogether mistaken upon that point. Certainly the ship Franklin, with a thousand tons of iron as ballast in her, has been taken up in one of these basins and railways within the last two weeks. She was taken on, and went off in three and a half hours. She was a seventy-four—a ship-of-the-line.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not wish to enter at large into this subject. I believe we ought to take the vote upon this proposition now, without much further debate. If other gentlemen would agree to take the vote without debate, I would say nothing. I must be permitted to say, however, that this question was considered at the last Congress; and I will read a portion of the naval appropriation of the last session upon this subject:

"For a floating dock in California, $150,000. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby required so to modify the contract alleged to have been made on the 17th of January last, as to confine the same to the construction of the floating dock alone, without the basin and railway."

Thus Congress at the last session decided to have this floating dry-dock in California without a basin and railway. Where now is the recommendation of the Department in favor of it? I assert that the proposition is not only without, but against all recommendation of the Navy Department; and I can prove it, if necessary, by the documents. I am opposed to this proposition, because I deem that a basin and railway are unnecessary, at least for the present, in California. They would require a very heavy expenditure of money. I am willing, however, to establish a navy-yard and dépôt in California.

Mr. GWIN. I was perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina in order to stop debate; but I am afraid we are to have a debate on the subject now in Committee of the Whole. But I want to have it distinctly understood, that if this proposition is withdrawn it will be because gentlemen threaten to talk it down.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Does my friend understand that I will talk this down?

Mr. GWIN. I understood both the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Pennsylvania, to say that they intended to discuss the subject at length.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not talk down projects. I do not wish to be so understood. I am willing to take the vote now, without any further discussion. I wish to ask for a division of the question, for I believe there are two sections in this amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Then the first question will be on the first branch of the amendment, which provides for a navy-yard and dépôt in California, with various appurtenances.

Mr. JAMES. I have but one word to say upon this subject. It is with profound regret that I find myself compelled to disagree with my colleague, [Mr. CLARKE.] It is true that California is a far-off State; but, sir, she is a sister State, and as such is entitled to the care and protection of this Government. I am for this measure, and if an argument is to be gone into, I am prepared to answer, and shall feel compelled to answer my colleague.

The question was then taken on the first branch of the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the second branch of the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to say a word or two to the Senate, for the reason that I am now going to take a different course from that which I formerly took in regard to this subject. I assisted formerly in obtaining a modification of the contract which has been alluded to, for the California dry-dock, basin, and railway. I had my reasons for it at the time. When that contract was entered into, there had been no experiment of this class of machinery. No vessel of any large size had ever been upon any of these docks. Seeing a notice in a paper last spring, that there was about to be a test at the Philadelphia dry-dock, I determined to go and witness it. I started with the hope of reaching there in time to see the vessel upon the dock, and witness the operation. I did not, however, reach Philadelphia until the vessel had been taken off. I refer to the steamer City of Pittsburg, which was the vessel with which the experiment was made. I then examined the whole apparatus and the dock. I looked into it as critically as my poor powers would enable me to do. I examined it in connection with the basin; I examined the whole in connection with the railways. I examined the machinery by which the vessel was taken upon the dock from the railways. I conversed with the persons at work about the machinery, who seemed to be intelligent men, without letting them know that I was a member of the Senate, in order that I might get the incidental observations of those men, for the purpose of satisfying myself. They spoke of it as a matter of course, that the vessel was taken up easily, safely repaired, transferred from the dry-dock, and floated into the basin, and transferred from the dock upon the railways. After looking at it, I became entirely satisfied in my own mind, that the machinery was capable of doing so. I had previously asserted that I did not believe any private individual would have the temerity of risking his vessel on one of these docks. I seriously thought so. I seriously anticipated, that, if a vessel was attempted to be taken upon that dock from the railways, she would be turned over, or in some other manner broken to pieces. The large steamer the City of Pittsburg, had been upon that dock, and was safely launched, after having been repaired. Since that, as the Senator from California has remarked, a seventy-four, with a thousand tons of ballast in her, has been on one of these docks, and launched safely, and with great expedition. Under this state of the case, my former objections having been to the inutilty and inefficiency of the machinery; and having been satisfied as to that by practical observation, I am convinced that I was formerly in error, and I take back all that I have said against this dry-dock, basin, and railway.

Mr. CLARKE. I have not said one word against the dock, basin, and railway. I have not said that it was not equal to the operations for which it is designed; but I have objected to making the appropriation for it at this time, for California, before a site is selected for a navy-yard there.

Mr. HUNTER asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bell, Brooke, De Saussure, Douglas, Downs, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Seward, Soule, Walker, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Clarke, Clemens, Davis, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Mangum, Meriwether, Miller, Pearce, Shields, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, and Wade—25.

So it was not agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. As the first branch of the amendment has been adopted, and the second branch has been rejected, it will be necessary to add to the first branch:

"And for the purpose of carrying this section into effect, the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer another amendment:

"For the purchase and freight to San Francisco of patent black marine paint, for painting the interior of the sections and end-floors of the California dry-dock, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is to insert, after the one which has just been adopted—

"For superintendence, office-rent, labor, and contingent expenses connected with the construction of the floating dry-dock in the Bay of San Francisco, $13,500."

This is according to estimates from the Department.

Mr. HUNTER. I understood the honorable Senator from Rhode Island to say that this dock had been hired out.

Mr. GWIN. The dock has not yet been put together. The materials have been packed up and sent out. The object of this is to have them properly put together. The Department has sent an estimate to the Naval Committee for this, and the intention is to employ an individual of great skill and experience in these matters to see that the dock is put together according to contract.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not understand this matter. These contractors have received $610,000 for constructing a floating dock for California. We have already appropriated $1,500 to paint the dock with a particular kind of paint. I made no opposition to that. But it is now proposed to appropriate $13,500 for what? To superintend the putting together of this dock. I understand that the dock is done by contract; and it does seem to me that the mere superintendence cannot cost this amount.

Mr. GWIN. It is necessary for the interest of the Government to have somebody to see that the dock is put up properly, otherwise the contractors can do as they please about it. Here is what the Secretary of the Navy says in relation to the matter:

"As the estimates of the Department embraced no computation for contingencies connected with this dock, such as pay, superintendence, and other incidental expenses, I would respectfully recommend that Congress be asked for an appropriation of $13,000."

If we have paid $610,000 to the contractors for this dock, surely we ought to pay this small sum for the purpose of having it put properly together.

Mr. BRODHEAD. But a short time ago I understood that an officer had been sent to receive that dock. There are plenty of officers of the Navy who are unemployed, who could attend to this. We had a contract transmitted to us the other day, by which we ascertained that the contractors for this dock were to be permitted to use it for three years, without any charge upon the part of the Government. I suppose they would not be able to use it for three years without putting it together.

Mr. GWIN. We paid $610,000 for constructing the dock and putting it up; but the object of this is to get somebody to take care of the interest of the Government, and see that the contractors put it up properly.

Mr. BRODHEAD called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, James, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Rusk, Seward, Soule, Stockton, and Weller—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Dawson, De Saussure, Felch, Foot, Hunter, Mangum, Meriwether, Miller, Pratt, Smith, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, and Walker—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment to offer. It is to insert at the end of the appropriations in the bill—

"For a deficiency in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1850, approved March 3, 1849, for paying the unsatisfied demands for continuing the survey of the coast on the Gulf of Mexico, from Appalachicola Bay to the Mississippi, $2,110 62, to be taken out of the balance of the fund appropriated by the act of the 3d of March, 1841, but which has been carried to the credit of the surplus fund."

This is for services rendered. The accounts were presented to the Treasury Department, but the appropriation had been carried to the surplus fund, and therefore the demands could not be paid. This is merely a reappropriation of the amount, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment of the same kind, to come in after the one just adopted:

"For compensation to Lieutenant Raphael Semmes, for services in continuing the survey of the coast on the Gulf of Mexico, from Appalachicola Bay to the Mississippi, $1,164 10, to be paid out of the balance of the fund appropriated for that purpose by the act of the 3d of March, 1841, and which has been carried to the credit of the surplus fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have another amendment to offer, to insert after the one just adopted:

"For the building or purchase of suitable vessels for prosecuting a survey and reconnaissance, for naval and commercial purposes, of such parts of Behring's Straits, of the North Pacific ocean, and of the China seas, as are frequented by American whale-ships, and by trading vessels, in their routes between the United States and China, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, the sum of $125,000: Provided, That the expense of purchasing, or building, and equipping, (with the exception of the armament,) and fitting out these vessels shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

This proposition was fully discussed before, and I suppose there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to say that I am in favor of this as a separate measure, but I do not wish to attach all these propositions to the Navy appropriation bill. I am afraid that we shall lose the bill if we attach so many amendments to it.

Mr. HALE. I want to inquire of the mover of this amendment, if this survey looks to the annexation of China. [Laughter.]

Mr. GWIN. Not that I know of.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment I have to offer, is to add as an additional section—

"SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized to increase the number of marines now authorized by law, by the enlistment of forty sergeants, forty corporals, twenty drummers, twenty fliers, and five hundred privates; and that the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, to be added to the appropriation for the Paymaster's Department of the marine corps, for the payment of the above men at the same rates now authorized by law; and also that the sum of $10,000 be further appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department of the marine corps for rations, clothing, fuel, transportation, and recruiting for the above-named men."

This is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. He has sent a letter to the Naval Committee, stating that this increase is indispensable to give efficiency to the marine corps.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me to be improper to put the whole legislation for the Navy upon this appropriation bill. Here is a scheme to increase the marine corps largely, and it is to be put upon this bill when we have no opportunity to discuss it. These are measures which ought to be matured by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and brought in as separate bills, and not put upon the appropriation bills in this way. I do not know where this sort of legislation is to end. Not only that, but it will be seen that the Departments are sending to the Naval Committee estimates which they never submitted to the Finance Committee in relation to the legitimate purposes of the general appropriation bills. There are estimates, it seems, for the reappropriation of amounts which have been carried to the surplus fund, which ought certainly to have been sent to the Finance Committee. That committee ought to have some information in relation to these matters.

Mr. HALE. A proposition is brought in now at this late hour of the session to increase the marine corps five hundred men—

Mr. GWIN. Rather than have a discussion I will draw the amendment.

The next amendment I have to offer is to add:

"SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the Medical corps of the Navy be increased by the appointment of eight surgeons and ten assistant surgeons, in addition to the number now authorized by law, who shall be appointed in the same manner, and be subject to the same regulations, as those now in service."

Mr. HUNTER. That is subject to the same objection.

Mr. GWIN. Very well. I withdraw it.

I have another amendment to offer, to which the Senator from Wisconsin may properly attach his amendment. The amendment is—

"SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the percentage allowed by law to the clerks employed in the executive and legislative departments at Washington be, and is hereby, allowed to the clerks employed at the navy-yard in the city of Washington."

All I have to say is, that there are five of these clerks, and the highest salary of any of them is $900. The salary of the clerks in the Departments have been increased, and I think these clerks ought to be increased.

Mr. WALKER. I offer an amendment to the amendment. It is to add to it—

And the pay of the watchmen in the various navy-yards shall hereafter be $500 each per annum, instead of the pay now received by them: Provided, Their present pay does not equal or exceed the sum aforesaid.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORTON. I would suggest to the Senator from California to amend his amendment to add after the word "navy-yard" the words "and marine barracks."

Mr. GWIN. I accept it.

Mr. RUSK. I have an amendment to propose to the amendment, which is, perhaps, not appropriate to this bill, but it has as much merit in it as any increase of compensation that has been made during this session. The clerks in the city post office receive salaries of from $800 to $1,000 a year. There are, perhaps, no employees of the Government who have labored so faithfully. They have to pack up hundreds and thousands of documents and send them off. They are laboring night and day. I would therefore suggest that they be included so as to have the amendment extend to the clerks in the navy-yard, the marine barracks, and the city post office.

Mr. GWIN. I accept that.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have one other amendment to offer by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

"SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to credit the medical officers of the Navy, who, by order of the Department, served with a detachment of marines in Mexico, during the late war with that Republic, in addition to the pay to which they are entitled as medical officers of the Navy, respectively, the same allowance for rations and forage, in proportion to the time they so served, as are allowed to officers of the Army of similar standing."

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot consider it as strictly a private claim. It is to put these officers on the same footing with others.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from California, by adding:

Provided, That the pay and medical officers of the Navy shall have the same assimilated rank as is now enjoyed by the pay and medical officers of the Army.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is inappropriate legislation upon this bill, and at this time. It seems to me that this is a matter which should be brought forward in a distinct and separate bill. It is time that we were through with this bill, and proceeding to the consideration of other subjects.

Mr. GWIN. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FISH. I wish to say, with regard to the amendment first offered by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it is a subject which was determined early in the session by that committee. There were three of these medical officers of the Navy, who, by order of the War Department, were directed to join the Army in its progress from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico. The naval pay bill provides a sum in gross for the payment of the medical officers. Having been sent upon shore, they were under the necessity of having horses, and being subject to all the expenses of field service, the same as the medical officers of the Army; and that pay was allowed them while serving with the Army; but on the transfer of their accounts from the Army to the Navy Department, they stand charged with those expenses which are not allowed under the naval pay bill. It seemed to the committee to be proper, inasmuch as these expenses were necessarily incurred by order of the Department, that they should be allowed and paid.

Mr. HUNTER. How are we to manage these matters on a conference with the House? We are multiplying subjects of difference between the two Houses so fast, that it will be impossible to settle the question unless we recede from all our amendments.

Mr. BADGER. I will inform my friend from Virginia how we can manage it; we must do as well as we can.

Mr. MILLER. Is the question upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDENT. That amendment has been accepted by the mover of the original amendment, and it all becomes one proposition.

Mr. MILLER. Then I object to the amendment of the Senator from Texas. It undertakes to reach the question of the assimilated rank of surgeons in the Navy, which is a most important question, and which has been investigated by a board. I have understood that, according to that investigation, it has been found to be impracticable to assimilate the rank of surgeons of the Navy with surgeons of the Army. There is great difficulty about the matter, and I understand it to be the opinion of the officers appointed to investigate the matter that it is impossible. At all events this amendment undertakes to fix the rank of an important part of the service of the country upon an appropriation bill, which I think is not correct in principle.

Mr. MALLORY. The question of assimilated rank in the Navy is one exceedingly perplexing. It is a question which affects not only medical officers, but those officers who may perhaps be termed the staff corps of the Navy generally—purser and others. This matter has been under the consideration of the Naval Committee, and they intend, by a bill which they have under consideration, and which they propose to report at the next session of Congress, to meet all these difficulties, and place the rank of these officers on a proper basis. We ought not to legislate for one corps of the Navy, without legislating for all at the same time. Purser in the Navy stand in precisely the same position to the rest of the officers as do surgeons. Neither of them have any rank proper on board any ship; but they take that rank which the commander of the ship chooses to assign them.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the very reason why the proviso was introduced, that they should have rank independent of the volition of the commanding officer—that they should not be subject to his caprices and whims, and that their rank and position should be defined explicitly by law. This is the reason why I introduced the proviso, that they should take rank in all matters of ceremony or authority, so that they may know precisely what their situation is, and that it may not be dependent upon the will of the officer who, for the time being, commands them. These officers have had no rank heretofore, and it has given rise to heart-burnings and discontents. The officers of the line, or in the naval service proper, are disposed not to accord to the staff officers any high rank. It is all regulated by chance and by favoritism. This matter has been settled in the Army, and is well understood and defined there; and I propose, for the harmony and benefit of the service, that it shall be settled in regard to the naval officers the same as in regard to the military officers of the United States. It is an evil so easily remedied, that I do not see why the Committee on Naval Affairs should take so long about it as my friend from Florida suggests, and therefore I hope the Senate will now adopt the proviso.

Mr. MALLORY. I would very cheerfully vote for any measure which would attain this end; but if this proposition is to give staff officers of the Navy any command, under any circumstances, were an officer of the line as low down as a midshipman is on board the vessel to command it, I cannot consent to it. All that these staff officers ask, is assimilated rank in matters of ceremony, and perhaps on courts-martial. They do not ask any command. All they want is to have a proper rank, so that they may have proper quarters assigned and ceremonies observed in the line of their duty, which can always be known and understood. If we provide assimilated rank for one branch of the staff-corps, we should provide for them all. We should take in engineers, pursers, chaplains, and every person on board whose comfort and convenience may be consulted by the arrangement of quarters and attentions on board. There is some difficulty in arranging this matter of assimilated rank. I am in favor of providing for it, but I wish to include all, and to make provision for all, at the same time.

Mr. MILLER. I have been in favor of giving surgeons in the Navy a proper rank, and they ought to have it; but I am opposed to doing it in this way, by an amendment to this bill; and I think it will turn out that if this proviso passes, it will, instead of assimilating rank and producing order, create confusion in the Navy. The matter ought to be brought up properly by the Committee on Naval Affairs, after examining the whole subject, so that we can understand what we are doing.

Mr. PRATT. This is a subject which is not new to the Senate. All are aware that for several years past, memorials have been presented to the Senate, requesting that these officers of the Navy should have the same assimilated rank as the same class of officers have in the Army. Last year a medical convention, consisting of representatives of the highest ability of that class of our fellow-citizens from every State of this Union, assembled in the city of Baltimore. They sent a united memorial to the Congress of the United States, asking that their medical brethren attached to the Navy, should not be degraded by having a different rank from their brethren in the Army.

During the present year, a similar convention assembled at Richmond, Virginia, and they have sent a similar memorial. These gentlemen are collected from every section of the United States, and the supposed injustice which is done to the medical officers of the Navy, is creating a great deal of unpleasant feeling among that whole class of people throughout the United States.

For one, I cannot see why a surgeon in the Navy should not have the same assimilated rank in the Navy, which a surgeon in the Army has in the Army. Nor can I see why a purser in the Navy should not have the same rank as a paymaster in the Army has.

If I understood the honorable Senator from Florida, he states that some difficulty may grow out of this—that it requires time to digest a plan—that a medical officer or a purser should not, under any circumstances, have command of a vessel. Now, I asseverate that this amendment does not give it to them. It gives the same assimilated rank which the same class of officers have in the Army. A second lieutenant in the Army might have command of a detachment, and if there were a surgeon along, with the rank of major, he would be subordinate to this inferior officer of the regular arm of the service.

The amendment is only to give the same assimilated rank to this description of officers in the Navy which the same description of officers hold in the Army, and consequently the very difficulty which the Senator from Florida supposes to exist is precluded by the terms of the amendment. I hope the amendment will be adopted. The question has been before the Senate very frequently. It is producing a great deal of excitement, which we ought to get rid of at once. It is just to these gentlemen that they should have this rank, and there can no harm result to the service of the United States. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from California, as it now stands, by striking out, the proviso, and inserting in lieu of it the following:

Provided, That the officers of the medical corps of the Navy, and pursers of the Navy, of less than twelve years standing, shall rank with lieutenants; and that medical officers and pursers of more than twelve years standing shall rank with commanders, but take no precedence of commanders: And provided further, That in no case shall officers of either corps take any command over officers of the line of the Navy.

Mr. MANGUM. I am inclined to think that the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Florida is right. I am for this measure, and shall vote for it at the proper time. But I desire now to make this remark: it is almost two o'clock; we have a large amount of business to do, and if gentlemen will persist in assuming that other gentlemen cannot understand these subjects without undertaking to enlighten them with their counsels, we shall never get through this bill. We ought now to be in Executive session. There are questions of great importance to be considered in Executive session, and it will require pretty hard work for us to get through with them before the hour of adjournment. I know there have been occasions when the Senate have sat in Executive session for hours after the time fixed for the adjournment, but I understand that the present President of the Senate considers that he is bound to adjourn the Senate at twelve o'clock to-morrow, no matter whether it is in Executive or open session. Therefore, if we do not stop these debates and bring this and other bills to a close, we shall be left with half of our business unfinished.

Mr. SHIELDS. Notwithstanding the admonition of my friend from North Carolina, I want to say two or three words. This system that has prevailed in the Army, has given rise to a great deal of confusion, and the whole subject will have to be regulated over again. In all cases where rank is given, power is presumed, and they act upon that, and refuse to obey officers with actual power and rank, but whose grade is inferior to their own. In some other services they have, as a matter of etiquette, given the staff corps an honorary preference, and that is what is intended in our service, but by giving the rank we have thrown the subject into confusion. I think this proposition ought to lie over until there is time to regulate the whole subject.

The amendment of Mr. MALLORY, to the amendment of Mr. GWIN, was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 19, nays 18.

Mr. HALE. I want to make one suggestion to the Senate, and it is this: The Senator from Florida says he has got a bill prepared regulating this whole matter. It is but three months until the next session of Congress. I am a friend to some of these improvements, but I think it is ill time to be putting all these measures on this bill.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays on the amendment as amended; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Borland, Brodhead, Cass, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Davis, Douglas, Downs, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Mallory, Mangum, Meriwether, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Toucey, and Upham—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bright, Butler, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Feich, Foot, Hale, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mason, Pearce, Shields, Underwood, and Wade—20.

So it was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer the following amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all paper used by the public printer for the space of sixty days from this date shall be furnished by him at cost, and shall be of the quality and description specified in the law passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, I am very sensible that this amendment is not very pertinent to this bill, but let me say to the Senate that by the bill regulating the public printing which passed Congress a few days since, it is provided that the Superintendent shall give sixty days' notice before he shall make purchase of any paper. Therefore, if this amendment be not adopted we can have no public printing for sixty days to come. I therefore propose to authorize the public printer to purchase his own paper for sixty days, and to furnish it at cost.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have an amendment to offer as an additional section, which I admit is not very appropriate, but I hope it will be adopted:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby authorized, in addition to ordinary steamboat service on the Potomac, to contract with the Washington and Fredericksburg Steamboat Company for an efficient ice-boat or ice-boats being kept up for the conveyance of the mail during the winter months: Provided, The additional expense to be incurred by the Department for keeping up such ice-boat or ice-boats shall not exceed $30,000 per annum.

This amendment is in precise conformity with the joint resolution introduced by the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] at an early day in the session. The Postmaster General desires to have this authority, and everybody knows the difficulty there is when the river is blocked up with ice during the winter of getting our mails regularly.

Mr. CASS. If the honorable Senator will strike out the name of the steamboat company, I will agree to it.

Mr. RUSK. This company has the contract for carrying the mails, and of course it is the only one which can be employed.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment to offer, which is a singular one to offer here, as it is to save money instead of spending it. I am afraid that such an amendment will not commend itself to the favor of the Senate, but I will offer it:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That no estimate or appropriation of money in any bill making appropriations for the naval service shall authorize the payment of any increased pay, allowance, or compensation in any form whatever, beyond the amount prescribed by law in any case unless there shall be a specific direction for such extra payment designating the officer or person to whom extra payment shall be made either in some prior law or in the law making the appropriation.

If I can have the attention of the Senate for a single moment I will explain the necessity for this amendment. In the deficiency bill which passed both Houses at the present session a more stringent provision than this was incorporated, providing that extra pay should not be allowed without a prior specific direction. The First Comptroller of the Treasury construed that to mean, that although the law making the appropriation directed the payment to an officer he could not receive it unless there had been some prior law making provision for it. On account of that construction of his the Senate concurred in repealing that clause. I now propose to reenact the same thing in relation to naval appropriations, but to make the provision less stringent, so as to authorize the extra payment, if there is any provision for it in a prior law or in the law making the appropriation. The necessity for such a prohibition grew out of the naval appropriations, and the construction of the Second Comptroller who considered that such payment might be made notwithstanding there was no law to authorize it, but he took the simple fact of the appropriation and the estimates to authorize the payment.

Mr. WELLER. I do not think it is worth while to attempt by our legislation to suit the fastidious taste of the First Comptroller. The First Comptroller seems to consider himself the special attorney employed by the Government of the United States. From the moment a claim is presented he racks his brain for the purpose of discovering whether by hook or crook the Government can avoid the payment of it. Instead of considering himself a judge, who is to pass upon the validity of claims presented, he seems to regard himself as an attorney under obligation to his client to exculpate him from the difficulty if he can. I only desired to say this much, for I have had some experience in the settlement of accounts with the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. I concur to some extent in what the Senator says, but we have humored the whim of the First Comptroller so far as to repeal the restriction which was inserted in the deficiency bill. We repealed it because the Comptroller, in applying it, gave what I consider an absurd construction. Now, as we have repealed that clause, I do not want to leave the door altogether open, and inasmuch as by the decision of the Second Comptroller money has been paid without any direction by law, but simply upon an estimate, I want to put this provision into

Mr. BADGER. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether his amendment was drawn by the First Comptroller?

Mr. HALE. It was not.

Mr. BADGER. Then I would suggest to the Senator that he had better withdraw it, and let the matter stand until the next session, because very probably it will be found to be labor thrown away. At the next session the Senator can apply to the Comptroller, and get him to say what kind of a provision he will consider as producing a certain result; otherwise this will be time entirely thrown away.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from New Hampshire had better withdraw his amendment until there is time for more examination. This is a question of general legislation, and perhaps it ought not properly to be placed on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I think the amendment is right; and as I do not want the Treasury to be plundered even from now until the next session of Congress, I must insist on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I have another amendment to offer. I will not say a word about it, but will simply ask the yeas and nays:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all appointments in the Navy of the United States to any office shall be for the term of ten years, and that all commissions in the Navy hereafter conferred shall conform to this provision.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I have another amendment to offer. I must discharge my duty. The Senate can vote my amendments down if they please. The amendment is:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all acts, and parts of acts, authorizing any greater pay to any officer in the Navy than is allowed by the act of March 3d, 1835, be and the same are hereby repealed.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the third section, which is in these words:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to appoint commanders in the Navy as well as captains, for chiefs of the bureaus of navy-yards and docks, and of ordnance and hydrography, and of construction, equipment, and repair."

Mr. President, if it were admitted that the number of captains in the Navy was so small, or their incompetency was so great and so notorious that proper selections from these officers could not be made, I should not make this motion; but we know that there are sixty-eight captains in the Navy, and surely that is a field of selection quite large enough to furnish three competent officers for these bureaus. If that is not so, then the whole system had better be abolished, and the Navy too. But we know very well that among these sixty-eight captains we have got a score of men who have great gallantry, great reputation, and much professional skill. I know very well that among the commanders in the Navy there are some of the most accomplished gentlemen, who are an ornament to their profession. But I fear that the introduction of this section as it comes from the House will affect the principle of subordination. I think it is calculated to destroy the harmonious working of the present system, for although it is very true that orders to officers of the Navy will not in all cases issue from these bureaus, yet it is true that in a great many instances such will be the case. For example, all the officers in command of our navy-yards are captains. They receive orders from these bureaus, and if the section should be allowed to stand as it is, and the President should carry it out by appointing a commander under it, the officers in command of our navy-yards would have to receive their orders from their subordinates. This I think is improper. I will not detain the Senate by any remarks, but every one must see that confusion and dissatisfaction is liable to result if this provision be retained. I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. MALLORY. I trust that the proposition of the Senator from Maryland will prevail. I have never heard any good reason assigned for the provision which is in the bill. Unless it can be shown that there is not the requisite ability among the rank of captains, it seems to me to be exceedingly unfair to repeal the law which now gives them the charge of these bureaus. I will say, as another reason why this should be stricken out, that there is a proposition for a general reform and reorganization of the service, which contemplates the change, in some respects, of these bureaus, and therefore the proposition now to allow commanders to be appointed to these bureaus is partial legislation. The whole subject will have to be gone over again when we come to the question of organizing the Navy upon a proper footing. It is now totally disorganized. The present organization of these bureaus is but one of a thousand abuses, if I may call it one, which exist in the Navy. I hope no law will now be passed interfering with the act of Congress conferring upon the President authority to put captains at the head of these bureaus, unless it can be shown that the duties of these stations have not been properly attended to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think this section, as it stands, is the very quintessence of the argument made by my friend from Maryland. If I understood him, he argued that the President ought to have the right to select these officers and put them at the head of these bureaus if he thought proper. I hope, then, that the section will be retained, because it allows the President to do that if he chooses. It does not confine him to one class. It merely widens the field of selection and of discretion. I think if you strike it out, it will be rather a reflection upon, than a compliment to the officers of the Navy. It only widens the discretion of the President, authorizing him to select commanders if he chooses to do so.

Mr. PEARCE. If widening the field of selection is all that is to be considered we might as well put in lieutenants, passed midshipmen, and midshipmen; but I am glad to say that the commanders themselves do not ask for this. This is forcing it upon them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not go for it because they ask for it. If it is necessary to put them there, I want to put them there, whether they ask for it or not. If they are the fit men to be selected to discharge these duties, I want them to be selected, and ordered to these posts without consulting their wishes.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. I will state, in reply to him, that I believe the officers who are to be affected by this section desire the change. The section as it stands merely gives power to the President to choose from meritorious officers throughout the service, instead of limiting him to a particular set of men, it gives him power wherever merit is found to select meritorious individuals. I hope the section will not be stricken out. I think it ought to be retained.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEARCE. For my own justification, I only desire to say, that when I stated that commanders in the Navy did not desire this, I said so on information derived from one of them; and I will add, he is one of the most accomplished men in the service, and just as likely to succeed to one of these places as any man of his rank.

Mr. BRIGHT. My information is derived from that class of gentlemen. It seems that some of my friends, and those of the honorable Senator from Maryland, differ about it.

Mr. MALLORY. If I understand the provision in the bill, it applies only to commanders, and does not, as the Senator from Indiana supposes, allow the President to select from any rank.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment, resulted—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Borland, Butler, Clarke, Clemens, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, King, Mallory, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Shields, and Upham—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, De Sausure, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Foot, Hale, Hamlin, James, Meriwether, Pratt, Rusk, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have one further amendment to offer:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That no midshipman shall hereafter be promoted to the office of lieutenant, until he shall have served at least eight years at sea.

I wish to say a single word in reference to this amendment. There are two hundred and five passed midshipmen on the list. By looking down towards the bottom of the list you will find that most of them in that neighborhood have been to sea for seven or eight years. About one hundred and fifty, I think, towards the close of the list have been to sea seven or eight years; but when you come to look at the top of the list—those longest in service—you find that they are at sea from five to seven years. It would seem from looking over the list that the older they are in the service the less they serve at sea. There must be some cause for this, and to remedy it I want to have it that they shall be at sea for a certain term before they are promoted. I do not wish to be raising up admirals who are living on shore.

Mr. GWIN. This is not a subject of legislation, it is a subject purely of administration.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT. If such be the pleasure of the Senate, the Chair will put the question on all the amendments which have been made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the vote being taken on all the amendments together, because I have no hope at this period of the session there is a chance to defeat any of them. But I want to notify the Senate that I think there has been, for the first time, put into the Navy appropriation bill, what I consider to be a sanction by law of what has heretofore been one of the great abuses in the Navy, and that is appropriations for building houses for officers. They have been included in the estimates heretofore, but never specifically appropriated for. But, as I have no hope of getting the Senate to adopt my views, I shall vote against concurring in all the amendments.

The amendments made in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to renew the amendment which was offered to this bill as in Committee of the Whole by the honorable Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] for the purpose of making provision for the maintenance of an ice-boat on the Potomac river, in the course of the ensuing winter. I have modified it, so as to strike out that part which requires the Postmaster General to contract with any particular company—leaving him to contract with such company or persons as he pleases.

Mr. CASS. Does the Department want it?

Mr. BADGER. I do not care whether they do or not; I do not want the communication with the whole southern country blocked up, during the coming winter, as it was last winter. My amendment is to add—

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized, in addition to ordinary steamboat service on the Potomac, to contract for an efficient ice boat or ice boats being kept up for the conveyance of the mail during the winter months: Provided, The additional expense to be incurred by the Department for keeping up such ice-boat or ice-boats shall not exceed $20,000 per annum.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to a question of order. This amendment has no proper connection with the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Senate has to judge of the appropriateness of any proposition which may be offered as an amendment to a bill pending. It is not a question of order to be decided by the Chair.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to state one objection which I have to the amendment, and I think it should be a controlling one with the Senate. If ice-boats are placed on this river, the next thing will be to place them upon the Delaware river, and then upon the North river, and the Ohio river, and any river that may be frozen up during a portion of the winter, and it will lead to an expenditure which may absorb all the revenues of the Post Office Department.

Mr. DOWNS. If the gentleman will show me another case like this, where such an important mail is interrupted, and where that interruption can be obviated at such small expense, then it will be a proper case for the exercise of this power. The question here is, whether the whole southern mail shall be stopped for several days in the winter, or whether we shall go to a small expense for the purpose of keeping this great southern mail route open during the whole year. There is no such case elsewhere. The mail routes on the North river, and the Delaware river, are not such as this.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "Potomac" the words "and on the Ohio river, from Cincinnati to Louisville." That is a very important branch of the mail service, as important as any within the limits of the Union. When the river is frozen during the winter, the mail route from Louisville to Cincinnati is entirely suspended, except by way routes, on each side. There is no through mail route at that period of the year. Last winter, navigation on the Ohio was suspended for six weeks. I admit that I am against both appropriations, but if one carries I desire the other to go with it.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the question of order will be settled, whether this amendment is or is not in order.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has already stated that he is not to judge whether the amendment is appropriate or not.

Mr. HUNTER. In relation to this matter, I would say, that I believe the proposition for ice-boats on the Potomac stands on very different ground from other rivers. But I do not think that this bill ought to be incumbered with the proposition. We have very little time now to act upon public measures. It is important that this Navy appropriation bill should be acted on immediately; and, in that view of the case, I cannot vote for any amendment which is likely to give rise to difference between the two Houses.

Mr. BADGER. As to the Ohio river, I think the gentleman who offered that amendment has given us sufficient reason for voting against it; for he announces that he is hostile to both propositions. As he is not a friend to the amendment, of course we ought not to go for it, for it must be intended to destroy the original amendment.

I am astonished that there should be any opposition to this small appropriation. Senators who were here during the past winter, and saw the inconvenience to which every member of this body, and of the other House, connected with any part of the southern portion of the United States, was put, in consequence of the want of such an ice-boat, will see the necessity for this. If the cold here was so extreme that the river could not be kept open except at a very great expenditure, it might be a good reason for not attempting it. But a small outlay of money will keep the river at all times clear, and enable us to have our regular communications. I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest that the other day there was an estimate made for keeping the Potomac Bridge in repair, so as to pass travel comfortably and safely across it, and it was said that could be done for $12,000. Now, so far as this city is concerned, and the mails are concerned, it would be evidently more for the accommodation of the public to repair that bridge than to lay out the money on an ice-boat.

Mr. DOWNS. The mails do not go by land.

Mr. DAVIS. They may go by land.

Mr. DOWNS. This portion of this mail route, on the Potomac river, is by very rapid steamers, and not by land.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand that the intention is to have an ice-boat go down to Aquia Creek?

Mr. DOWNS. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. During a part of last winter, when the Potomac, by reason of ice, was incapable of been navigated, an arrangement was made for a week or two with the company running a line of boats from Baltimore to Norfolk, and the mail was carried, as the Postmaster General informs me, some eight or ten hours sooner than by the Potomac route. It was first carried from hence to Baltimore, then directly down the Chesapeake Bay to Norfolk, where it connected with the whole southern line of mails. The only reason which induced the Postmaster General, as I understood him, to have this mail connection by way of the Potomac, so as to carry the great southern mail in that way, was by the force which is put upon that Department by the railroad company, who, I believe, are the owners of the line of boats from Baltimore. There is no doubt, from what I understood, that the mail could be carried more expeditiously and certainly by the Baltimore and Norfolk route than by the Potomac route. There is, therefore, no reason for the expenditure of these $20,000 to keep this river open, when the mail can be carried at less expense from here to Baltimore, and from Baltimore down the Chesapeake Bay to Norfolk, and there connect with the whole southern line of mails.

Mr. BADGER. I see at once why my friend from Maryland thinks this proceeding unnecessary. He says there is no use in keeping open the Potomac, because you can go by the way of Baltimore. The Senator says the mails from the South can be sent from here to Baltimore, and eight or ten hours of time will be saved. Now, the information I have on the subject authorizes me to state that the Senator is entirely mistaken—no matter from whom he obtained his information—and that the mails cannot be carried by the Baltimore and Norfolk route within fifteen hours of as short a time as by the Potomac route. But if my friend's argument is good for anything, it is an excellent argument to show that this route should be discontinued altogether; for if you can go eight or ten hours sooner by going through Baltimore, there is no reason why the Government should pay for transporting the mails down the Potomac. But the Government deems it necessary and proper to carry the mails down that river, and therefore it is proper to make this small appropriation to keep the river open.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall vote against this amendment, because it is the commencement of a system which will involve an immense expenditure of money. If you appropriate $20,000 now for an ice-boat on the Potomac, do you suppose the people of the Ohio valley and the Mississippi valley will be content without having ice-boats there to keep their rivers open? So on the New York rivers and on the lakes. This little appropriation of $20,000 now will grow up into a system, involving an expenditure of millions in a few years; and my impression is, that unless you are prepared to go into a new system for this purpose, unless the Government is prepared to take the control of ice upon all the rivers and lakes in the country, we ought not to adopt this measure. We had better encourage the people to make a railroad from here to Aquia Creek, and save the necessity of this ice-boat.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend from Illinois. By an amendment which has been added by the Senate to the post road bill, I believe it has been provided that the mail shall be carried down the Ohio during the summer in steamboats. There are certain seasons, as I understand, when boats cannot travel up and down that river.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Sometimes three or four days, and sometimes two or three weeks at a time.

Mr. DAWSON. When that occurs is there not some mode to transport the mails by land?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will answer the gentleman. The mail has been carried by contract on the river, from Cincinnati to Louisville, for the last twenty-five years. Whenever navigation is suspended on the Ohio, there is no regular mail route on either side of the river. Last winter, navigation was suspended between Cincinnati and Louisville for about six weeks, and we had no regular mail. It is true there were side mails by land, connecting at different points.

Mr. DAWSON. Whenever the Potomac is frozen up the Post Office Department has to make, I believe, what is called a special contract, to convey this mail by land. Now, the question is one of economy. When the river was closed, during the past winter, the Post Office Department had to employ a line of stages, for which they had to make an extra allowance. They were called upon in an emergency, and the contractors for a limited period in that way, of course, required a larger sum than for regular service. Besides, we have to pass over one of the worst roads in the southern or western country, or, perhaps, in the world, to get by land from here to Aquia Creek. It then becomes a question of economy whether every winter we shall be put to the expense of hiring extra stages to run that distance, or shall keep an ice-boat. I venture the prediction now, that if the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would inquire into the amount of compensation paid annually for this extra service between these two points, he would find it to be three or four times the amount of the cost of an ice-boat. I view this as an economical question.

But, it is said that this is the commencement of a system of expenditure which will involve the Treasury very largely. Why, if it be so, and the emergencies of the country require it, and the interest of the transportation of the mails require it, all of us know that we ought to make the appropriation. It is said that this mail can be carried from here to Baltimore, and thence down the Patuxent river and the Chesapeake Bay. Admit that to be so; but can letters be carried round with the same speed to Richmond and Petersburg, and all through the inland route? Not at all. Gentlemen should look to all sections of the country. When they talk as to this laying the foundation of a large appropriation, they must recollect that when the railroad service commenced its cost was considered alarming; but yet the increase of mail facilities has afforded such great satisfaction to the country, that there is not now a murmur about the compensation paid to these companies, and the Department is now better able to pay them out of its revenues than ever before.

I am informed, from sources entitled to credit, that the daily transportation of the mail from the city of Washington, when the Potomac is closed up, is $500. This is necessary for three or four weeks. Why, in that time it would amount to the cost of an ice-boat. Why should one section jump up here against another, and say if you desire this we will want it? Whenever it can be fairly demonstrated that the interests of other sections require it, I, for one, will vote for it. I am not alarmed by these things. I know full well, that you and I, sir, who live south of this point, had our letters delayed last winter frequently for five or six days, and so with all the representatives from that section of country. It is very desirable that we should have regular connection with the South. I think this will be more economical and effectual than any other plan. But if it should be found not to work well, we can stop it at the next session, and no great harm will have been done.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I wish now to renew the amendment which was rejected as in Committee of the Whole. It is—

"For superintendence, office rent, labor, and contingent expenses connected with the construction of the floating dry-dock in the Bay of San Francisco, $13,500."

This dock has been shipped to California, and unless a superintendent is appointed to go there and receive it on the part of the Government, it will remain on ship-board. The demurrage that will accrue on the dock lying there, waiting for an officer of the United States to receive it, will be about $800 a day, or at the rate of $300,000 a year. The object of this amendment is, to pay the expenses of an officer to superintend the putting together and receiving of the dock when it gets there. It is to be done by a person of experience in building these docks, and not by a naval officer. The gentleman whom the Department proposes to send, has superintended the building of docks of this description heretofore, and he is very familiar with the whole subject.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I still persist in my opposition to this amendment. These contractors have a second contract, which has been entered into with them by the Navy Department, by which they are allowed to use the dock for three years. How can they use it unless it is put together?

Mr. GWIN. They will never put it up so long as they can get $800 a day demurrage.

Mr. BRODHEAD. We have officers of the Navy enough, who have nothing else to do, who can superintend this matter; and if officers of the Navy cannot superintend it who will? We have plenty of those officers out of employment, and they can very easily be sent to California for this purpose.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to ask the Senator from California a question in regard to this matter, for I desire to vote understandingly. Have the contractors to build this dock agreed to deliver it at the place where it is to float?

Mr. GWIN. They are to deliver the materials there; but this is to see that they are properly put together.

Mr. RUSK. There seems to be a disposition in regard to this matter that I am very sorry to see. I do not look upon this appropriation as going to the contractors.

Mr. GWIN. It does not.

Mr. RUSK. It is an appropriation asked for by the Navy Department, in order to enable them to take care of the property of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from California permit me to ask him whether that recommendation was not made before the leasing out of the dock?

Mr. GWIN. It has no reference at all to the leasing of the dock. The dock cannot be used by the contractors under their lease until after it is put together and put afloat.

Mr. CHASE. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment, which I think will reconcile all difficulties. It is to insert, instead of the amendment of the Senator from California, the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint some suitable naval officer, to receive and superintend the construction of the floating dry-dock in California.

Mr. BADGER. There is no necessity for that amendment; for, unless some provision is made, the Secretary of the Navy would direct an officer of the Navy to attend to it.

Mr. CHASE. I understood the Senator from California to state, that unless some person was appointed to superintend the putting together and reception of this dock, demurrage would be charged, which would amount to a great deal more than the salary of the officer. If that be the whole object to be accomplished, undoubtedly it will be accomplished by this amendment, and no difficulty whatever can arise in any quarter. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RUSK. The authority which would be conveyed by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio already exists. The object is to send out a person to take care of the Government property in California. The Navy Department has made an estimate for it, and, as I understand, this is recommended by the Naval Committee of this body. Under such circumstances, it seems to me to be strange, passing strange, that there should be any opposition to it. I know the appropriations asked for California are large, and necessarily they must be large. Prices of labor and everything else there are high; but look at the returns which are received from California. The appropriations for California in the aggregate from the Treasury of the United States seem to be large, but the returns to the general prosperity of the United States from California are also large. She is a new State laboring under difficulties, away from your protecting arm in case of emergency. I trust and hope that this exercise of economy will be commenced with reference to those who have the physical force of the United States at hand to defend them, and will not be extended further to California. I know nothing about this business, but the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, the recommendation of the Naval Committee of this body who have had it under investigation, and my obligations to the people of California to protect them, require me to vote for this proposition. I cannot, under my sense of duty, vote against it.

Mr. ATCHISON. If this were an appropriation for the benefit of California, and a necessary one, I would be the last man to say a word against it; but this appropriation is not for the benefit of California. It is for the benefit of some person who will be appointed to superintend the putting together of this dry-dock. The question now resolves itself into this: Is there no officer in the Navy at the disposition of the Government, who has capacity, and understanding, and common sense enough to superintend this work?

Mr. GWIN. I would ask the Senator whether any officer of the Navy has ever been appointed to superintend either of the dry-docks, of this description, which have been built in the United States?

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. GWIN. I know that naval officers have not superintended the putting together of these docks.

Mr. ATCHISON. I know this: that you have a naval officer at every naval depôt and navy yard in the United States, who superintends the building of vessels.

Mr. GWIN. The naval constructors attend to that.

Mr. ATCHISON. Well, the officers of the Navy in command of the yard superintendent it. I think the proposition of the Senator from Ohio to be entirely unnecessary, because the Secretary of the Navy can now order a naval officer there to superintend the construction of this dock, and that without any additional cost. I am willing to vote this money to the State of California, if you will give me a pretext for it. I am willing to vote this money for the benefit of the people of California, but not to enable the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a special agent, and give him $13,500 for this job, when it can be done by an officer of the Navy as well as by any superintendent outside of the Navy.

Mr. GWIN. The Secretary of the Navy has himself spoken on this subject, in his recommendation. If there was any officer of the Navy who could have superintended the work, he would have selected that officer. If officers of the Navy were competent to superintend the putting together of a dock of this description, they would have been employed. And let me say to the Senator from Missouri—for I know he is not disposed to strike down my country as some are—that the very gentleman who is to be appointed is well skilled in the business for which he has been selected; and allow me to say more, that he is of the same party with the gentleman from Missouri himself, and is eminently qualified for the station. He is an entire stranger to me; but I know his capacity. If an officer of the Navy was to be designated for the service, you would have to pay him extra compensation; and it is absolutely necessary, in putting this dock together, that a man of skill and experience in such structures should be employed. I leave it to the Senator from Rhode Island, who sits nearest me, [Mr. JAMES,] if a dock of this kind, under the superintendence of an individual ignorant of it, might not be ruined? The object is to have a man skilled in this duty. The Secretary of the Navy has recommended a man who is eminently qualified for it.

Mr. MANGUM. I rise to make another appeal to the Senate, to bring these debates to a close, and to appeal to my honorable friend from Missouri to withdraw his opposition, as this officer is to be of the same party with himself.

Mr. ATCHISON. I am decidedly opposed to this system of buying up the Democracy by such things, if such be the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to propound a question to the honorable Senator from California. I would ask him whether, in every instance, some naval officer, or some engineer in the Navy, has not been appointed to superintend the putting together of these dry-docks? Have not Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Sanger, and other engineers of the Navy, who have been educated for the purpose, invariably been designated as the proper persons to attend to these matters? I understand that to be so; and if it be so, what is the necessity for the amendment of the Senator from California? Why not rely on the judgment and knowledge and intelligence of those who belong to the service of the United States, and who have been educated to protect the interests of the United States? When a structure of this kind is about to be completed, why should we cut them off from an opportunity of showing that they have availed themselves of the means which we have afforded to them of perfecting themselves in their business? When you can have the work done by your own officers, who have been educated for the purpose, what is the necessity of calling in other parties? I understand that the dry-docks which have been constructed heretofore have been under the superintendence of civil engineers belonging to the Navy—of Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Sanger, and Mr. Heron. And when a controversy arose with regard to the Pensacola dock, between the superintendent and the builder, the matter of controversy was referred to Major Chase, of the service of the United States. As I do not belong to the Naval Committee, I am uninformed about these matters; but I desire that the best intelligence of the country, and that which is at the command of the Government, should be brought into action whenever such a great undertaking as this is about to be accomplished.

Mr. GWIN. I can answer the Senator in a moment. Certainly these civil engineers have been appointed to superintend the construction of these docks. So this dock has been constructed in New York under the supervision of the Chief Engineer of the Navy, General Stuart, precisely as the other docks. It is now on its way to California, and it is to be put together there. The object is to have a proper person to attend to the interests of the United States in putting it together.

Mr. DAWSON. My inquiry is, why cannot these scientific gentlemen, belonging to the service of the United States, go to that point and see that it is put up properly? Why not let the officer of the Navy who has been connected with the transaction from the beginning, attend to it? Why not let him carry out the work completely?

But it seems to be intimated that the object is to create an office, and it is said that some competent gentleman, belonging to the same party to which the gentlemen from California and Missouri belong, is to have the office. I do not care for that, but the question is, whether any man taken from civil society is as competent to see this work properly executed as one raised for the purpose, and why such an imputation should be thrown upon the engineer corps as to supercede them in such a work as this.

Mr. GWIN. The gentleman who is to be the superintendent is an engineer.

Mr. DAWSON. But he does not belong to the Engineer Corps of the United States. Why should we not send out those who are at our service, instead of paying $13,500 for an individual outside of the service? My object is to see justice done to those who are in the employ of the Government. I do not wish to see them thrust aside for those in civil life when a work of this kind is to be carried on.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will dispose of this bill now. The light-house bill yet remains, and it is important that this bill should be acted upon immediately.

Mr. CASS. Does not every Senator understand this subject now? Why should gentlemen be discussing it at length? It is a waste of time to be doing so.

Mr. GWIN. I am sorry that the Senator from Georgia did not get his information from the Secretary of the Navy, who has sent an estimate here for this, and who has asked for an appropriation to employ the individual who has been employed on the same service in one of the other navy-yards.

The amendment of Mr. CHASE to the amendment of Mr. GWIN was agreed to.

Mr. CASS. I do not see any use of the amendment as it now stands. The Secretary of the Navy can employ an officer of the Navy if he chooses to do so without any special authority in this bill for that purpose.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were then ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time, and, being engrossed, the bill was read a third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, respecting the printing, binding, and advertising executed for or by order of that Department; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, showing the payments made to General Winfield Scott and General Franklin Pierce respectively, as required by a resolution of the Senate; which, on motion by Mr. MERIWETHER, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a statement of sums of money paid to persons claiming the same under the act of 8th August, 1846, as duties illegally exacted; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SOULE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill to regulate and fix the annual salary of the American Consul at the city of Amsterdam, reported the same without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the said bill as in Committee of the Whole; and, On motion by Mr. SOULE, it was Ordered, That it lie on the table.

FRAUDS AGAINST THE REVENUE.

Mr. JAMES submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of five members, be appointed by the President pro tempore, who shall be empowered to sit during the recess, at such times and places as they may deem necessary, and to examine, under oath, such persons as may be required, and generally to investigate the mode and manner of importations of merchandise into the United States, with a view of ascertaining whether any and what frauds have been committed or practiced against the revenue laws of the United States, and that said committee make report of their proceedings during the next session of Congress.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, it was Ordered, That two additional members be appointed on the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and that the appointment be made by the President pro tempore; and Mr. MERIWETHER and Mr. HALE were appointed.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the bill from the House making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senate will not agree to that, because it is indispensably necessary that we should have an Executive session. I have desired for several days to obtain one; and if this motion is now voted down, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope neither of those propositions will be agreed to, but that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill. I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the Senate to that bill, and to insist on its being taken up.

Mr. HAMLIN's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce have directed me to report this bill, with various amendments. The first is to strike out the clause under the heading of Maine—

"For a light-house on the Nubble, Cape Neddick, York, $5,000"— and insert in lieu thereof—

"For a light-house at the easterly end of the thoroughfare between North Haven and Vinal Haven, or Heron Neck, as the Department shall determine, $5,000."

That proposes simply to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to put a light-house upon the neck instead of another point on the other side of the bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment of the committee is to insert the following:

"For the erection of a harbor-light, on a point of land lying west of the entrance of Buck's Harbor, at Brooksville, $3,500.

"For the erection of beacons, buoys, and spindles between Owl's Head and White Head light-houses, through Muscle Ridge Channel, $4,000.

"For repairing and constructing the stone beacon on Penobscot river, $3,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendments of the committee are to insert the following:

"For six hollow iron buoys for the waters of Cape Fear, $1,320.

"For one buoy in New Inlet, Great Egg Harbor, and three in Hartford, $200.

"For a bell, to be placed on one of the light-boats in Chesapeake Bay, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, $200.

"For the erection of a light-house at Santa Cruz, California, $30,000.

"For the completion of light-houses in California and Oregon, $120,000.

"For light boats and other means for rendering assistance to direct mariners and others on the coasts of the United States, to be expended under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

"For testing the apparatus of Wilson & Masha for illuminating light-houses, $1,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is to strike out of the following section the words, "under the fifth section of this act:"

"Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all such reports shall, as speedily as may be, be laid before the Secretary of the Treasury, and if such as to authorize the work without further legislation, he shall forthwith proceed with it, otherwise such reports shall be laid before Congress at the next ensuing session; but in all cases where the person designated by the Secretary of the Treasury under the fifth section of this act, does not report such preliminary examination as expedient, the provisions of this act shall, without delay, be carried into execution."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is to insert the following in the bill:

"For constructing three small harbor light-houses in Galveston Bay, to wit: one at Red fish Bar, one at Clopper's Bar, and one at Half-moon Shoal, $5,000, in addition to the $30,000 already appropriated for the light-house on Red fish Bar."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next is to insert—

"For the removal of the light-house at Milwaukee, and rebuilding the same at or on the north point of Milwaukee Bay, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment to the bill is to strike out sections five and six—

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if such person as the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate, shall report in any of the cases herein provided for, that preliminary surveys are necessary to determine the site of a proposed light-house or light-boat, beacon or buoy, or to ascertain more fully what the public exigency demands, the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon direct the Superintendent of the Survey of the Coast of the United States, to perform such duty on the sea-board, and the Colonel of the Corps of Topographical Engineers to perform such duty on the northwestern lakes.

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the officers so directed shall forthwith enter upon the discharge of the duty, and after fully ascertaining the facts shall report, first, whether the proposed facility to navigation is the most suitable for the exigency which exists; and second, where it should be placed if the interest of commerce demand it; third, if the thing proposed be not the most suitable, whether it is expedient to make any other kind of improvement; fourth, whether the proposed light has any connection with other lights, and if so, whether it cannot be so located as to subserve both the general and the local wants of trade and navigation; and fifth, whether there be any, and if any, what other facts of importance touching the subject."

and insert in lieu thereof, the following:

"Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a preliminary examination to be made of the site or location of each new light-house and light boat herein provided for; and if upon such examination and report thereon he shall be of the opinion that the work is inexpedient, then said work shall be suspended, until Congress shall otherwise order."

Mr. WELLER. I think the sections proposed to be stricken out are better than the one to be inserted, and I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be agreed to. It seems to me that there is a propriety in having the information contemplated by those sections.

Mr. CASS. I think there is no doubt that this whole system of light-houses has outgrown itself. I suppose that every Senator is aware that there are many light-houses in places where they are not wanted. Too much legislation has been made without a proper knowledge of facts. Gentlemen have got up here, and when a bill was being put hastily through, inserted appropriations for light-houses where they were not wanted.

Mr. WELLER. There are appropriations in this bill for removing light-houses.

Mr. CASS. I know it. It strikes me, therefore, that we are beginning at the wrong end when we make appropriations first and then authorize an inquiry to ascertain whether they are proper. There is a defect, it seems to me, in the whole system. We want a radical change in it. It is proper to have the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury to check the accounts; but you want, beforehand, competent, scientific men to whom all questions concerning the location, &c., of light-houses should be committed. You would then have a just and economical system, which you have not now.

Mr. WELLER. That is my idea exactly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think it of much importance whether the sections are stricken out and the one which has been reported adopted in their place, or not.

Mr. WELLER. Then withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir. I shall not withdraw it, because I think it will improve the bill. It is more direct; it is more certain. The sections proposed to be stricken out are complicated, referring the matter to the Coast Survey and Light-House Board, while the one which the committee propose to insert, makes it the simple duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to act in such a way as he thinks just and proper. The next amendment which I have to offer is a material one, and will meet with the views of the Senator from Michigan; it is to strike out all after the seventh section which refers to the organization of a Light-House Board. When that comes up, I shall briefly state my views upon it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is to strike out all after the seventh section of the bill, as follows:

"Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to appoint, immediately after the passage of this act, two officers of the Navy, of high rank, one officer of the corps of Engineers of the Army, one officer of the corps of Topographical Engineers of the Army, and two civilians of high scientific attainments, whose services may be at the disposal of the President, and an officer of the Navy, and an officer of Engineers of the Army, as secretaries, who shall constitute the Light-House Board of the United States, and shall have power to adopt such rules and regulations for the government of their meetings, as they may judge expedient; and the board so constituted shall be attached to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under his superintendence shall discharge all the administrative duties of said office relating to the construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence, of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, sea-marks, and their appendages, and embracing the security of foundations of works already existing, procuring illuminating and other apparatus, supplies and materials of all kinds for building and for rebuilding when necessary, and keeping in good repair the light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, and buoys of the United States.

"Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be ex officio President of the Light-House Board of the United States; and the said board, at their first meeting, shall proceed to ballot for one of their members as chairman, and the member who shall receive the majority of ballots of the whole board, shall be declared by the president to be chairman of the Light-House Board, who shall, in the absence of the president of the board, preside over their meetings, and do and perform such acts as may be required by the rules of the board.

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Light-House Board shall meet four times in each year for the transaction of general and special business, each meeting to commence on the first Monday in March, June, September, and December; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to convene the Light-House Board whenever, in his judgment, the exigencies of the service may require it.

"Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to cause such clerks as are now employed on light-house duties in the Treasury Department, to be transferred to the Light-House Board without any change of salaries, and to provide the necessary accommodations for the secretaries and clerks, for the preservation of the archives, models, drawings, &c., &c., and for holding the meetings of the board; and that he cause to be transferred to the proper officers of the Light-House Board, all the archives, books, documents, drawings, models, returns, apparatus, &c., &c., belonging to the light-house establishment of the United States.

"Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board, immediately after being organized, to arrange the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific, and Lake coasts of the United States, into light-house districts, not exceeding twelve in number; and the President is hereby authorized and required to direct that an officer of the Army or Navy assigned to each district, as a light-house inspector, subject to and under the orders of the Light-House Board, who shall receive for such service the same pay and emoluments that he would be entitled to by law for the performance of duty in the regular line of his profession, and no other, except the legal allowance per mile when traveling under orders connected with his duties.

"Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the said Light-House Board, by and with the consent and approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, be authorized and required to cause to be prepared and distributed among the light-keepers, inspectors, and others, employed in the light-house establishment, such rules, regulations, and instructions, as shall be necessary for securing an efficient, uniform, and economical system of administering the light-house establishment of the United States, and to secure responsibility from them; which rules, regulations, and instructions, when approved, shall be respected and obeyed until altered and annulled by the same authority.

"Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board to cause to be prepared by the engineer, secretary of the board, or by such officer or engineer of the Army as may be detailed for that service, all plans, drawings, specifications, and estimates of cost of all illuminating and other apparatus, and of construction and repair of towers, buildings, &c., connected with the light-house establishment; and no bid or contract shall be accepted or entered into, except upon the decision of the board at a regular or special meeting, and through their properly-authorized officer.

"Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That hereafter all materials for the construction and repair of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, &c., shall be procured by public contracts, under such regulations as the board may from time to time adopt, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and all works of construction, renovation, and repair, shall be made by the orders of the board, under the immediate superintendence of their engineer, secretary, or such engineer of the Army as may be detailed for that purpose.

"Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light-House Board to furnish, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, all the estimates of expense which the several branches of the light-house service may require, and such other information as may be required, to be laid before Congress at the commencement of each session.

"Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That all acts, and parts of acts, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed, and all acts, and parts of acts, relating to the light-house establishment of the United States, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and necessary to enable the Light-House Board, under the superintendence of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all duties relating to the management, construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, sea-marks, and their accessories, including the procuring and testing of apparatus, supplies, and materials of all kinds for illuminating, building, and rebuilding, when necessary, maintaining and keeping in good repair the light-houses, light-vessels, beacons, buoys, and sea-marks of the United States; and the second and third sections of the act making appropriations for light-houses, light-vessels, buoys, &c., approved March 3d, 1851, are hereby declared to be in full force, and shall have the same effect as though this act had not passed: Provided, That no additional salary shall be allowed to any civil, military, or naval officer, who shall be employed on the Light-House Board, or who may be in any manner attached to the light-house service of the United States under this act: And provided further, That it shall not be lawful for any member of the Light-House Board, inspector, light-keeper, or other person in any manner connected with the light-house service, to be engaged, either directly or indirectly, in any contract for labor, materials, or supplies for the light-house service, nor to possess, either as principal or agent, any pecuniary interests in any patents, plan, or mode of construction, or illumination, or in any article of supply for the light-house service of the United States."

It will be seen by reading the provisions contained in that bill, which it is proposed to strike out, that they contain the frame-work of the Light-House Board. I concur most fully in what fell from the Senator from Michigan, a few moments since, that our present light-house system has outgrown the present organization. I believe I express the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Commerce, when I say, that they concur with me in that opinion; and I believe I also express the opinion of the committee as unanimous, when I say, that they deem it unadvisable now to take a plan which has been reported, as yet, by no committee; which is looking at a system that will make it as expensive as the English system in a very few years, and which, if adopted now, must be adopted here without investigation, without discussion, and without that preliminary examination which is necessary for such a subject. It is the purpose of the Committee on Commerce to let these sections be stricken out, and at another session of Congress to report a bill more in detail, which shall remove some of the objections which, in their opinion, exist to these sections, and which they would have done at this late hour if it could have received that attention before the Senate which they believe it merits. For these reasons it was believed by your committee that it was better to strike out these sections, rather than prematurely adopt such a system. I do not propose to discuss the question now. I do not propose to go into the details of it; but I ask the Senate carefully to consider, whether it is not better to postpone this matter until it can receive the sanction of its own committee? I ask the Senate if it is not better, if it is not more proper, that our legislation should be marked by such a course, than by the outside pressure of Army and Navy officers, for I see them all around me now. I am for a board, but I am not for one that is to be controlled altogether by Army and Navy officers. I am for incorporating in it as many scientific officers as are necessary, but I am not for a system that shall be built up and placed solely under their control. I will, at the proper time, aid most cheerfully and fully in perfecting a board which shall meet the approval of Senators.

Mr. CASS. As to the external pressure here I have only to say, that I have not talked with an Army or Navy officer on this subject on the floor of the Senate. There is a great deal of reason in what the Senator says. I think the present system is wrong. I know there ought to be a change now. I know the system has outgrown the present means of controlling it. But if the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce and the committee are disposed at the next session to take up the subject, and give us a proper system, I am disposed to submit to that.

Mr. WELLER. We had better begin now.

Mr. DAVIS. If nobody else brings forward at the next session a bill to remedy the system, I shall. I pledge myself to do it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will take up the subject and present a bill, and concur with the Senator most cordially in perfecting the system.

Mr. CASS. So far as respects the board, I would not put two civilians upon it. I do not think it necessary. We had better go to the officers of the Army and Navy, who are already paid, and take the members of the board from them.

Mr. DAVIS. I have bestowed some attention upon this subject. Some years ago I made a report to the Senate, in which I threw out the idea that a system could be adopted, simple in its character, inexpensive, and yet efficient. I think so still; but, as the Senator from Maine observes, although the subject has been in the hands of two committees—one in the House and one in the Senate—and although the Light-House Board, appointed under the act of last session, has written a book of some seven hundred or eight hundred pages upon it, neither of these committees is prepared to report upon the subject. The sections which we propose to strike out were inserted in the bill by the House of Representatives on the motion of some gentleman who had given his attention to the subject. I think we had better wait and mature a bill which may be something like a measure, economical, just, and efficient in its character; and for that further time is necessary.

Mr. PEARCE. The next session will be of three months' duration. I understand that this bill was drawn up by the Light-House Board, and laid before the Committee on Commerce three months ago. They have therefore had the same time for consideration at this session which they can command at the next. This being the case, I hope the Senate will not postpone their action on the subject. Upon that committee is the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] who, as he has said, paid attention to the subject many years ago. I think as far back as fourteen years, that Senator made a report upon this subject, in which he shows quite satisfactorily the inefficiency of the present system. The Light-House Board, which was constituted at the last session of Congress, have examined the subject, and have made a report to us. No one can read that report without coming to the conclusion that our system is a wretched one. It has seldom availed itself of any of the improvements that have been adopted in other countries. If improvements have been adopted, they have for the most part been forced upon it by legislative action, as when, by an act of Congress, we adopted the lens lights in some of our northern light-houses. It is admitted, not only by the Light-House Board, but by the report made years ago, by the late Secretary of the Treasury, and by gentlemen admirably qualified to determine upon the subject—such as Professor Pierce, of Harvard—that it does not secure efficiency in the lights; that it does not compare in economy even with the light-house systems of other countries, and does not supply the requirements of navigation and commerce. The light-houses themselves are not constructed properly. I see it stated that some of the best light-houses in the United States are those which were constructed by the British Government before the Revolution. The light-house at Sandy Hook, for instance, was built in 1762, and is now standing a permanent structure, while light-houses which have been built under the present system, since 1838, have fallen down. This was the case in four instances during the last year. The Board reports that they were deficient in construction, and I see in the defense of the present Fifth Auditor what is enough to satisfy me that the bricks and mortar are not put together in the manner obviously proper. Then the lights used are not improved. They are not those which secure the greatest supply of the light which may be derived from the consumption of so much oil. They have adopted in England, France, Russia, Sweden, and other places, the lens system. In a common light, unaided, twenty-nine thirtieths of the light is lost by its going off into the atmosphere or striking into the earth, only one thirtieth passing along the horizon so as to meet the eye of the navigator. That is the loss of illumination in the unaided light. The reflecting lights lose twenty-five thirtieths. Under the dioptric or refracting system, where the lens is used instead of reflectors, there is a loss of but five thirtieths of light. So that the superiority of the lens over the reflector is in the same proportion as that of the reflector to the unaided light. That is an important consideration, for it is highly desirable to have the greatest intensity of light in most cases. In the reflector lights you are often compelled to use many lamps. Of course there is a much larger consumption of oil, which is an important economical consideration.

I see that this report of the Light-House Board gives the summing up of the whole affair, in regard to our system, a part of which I will read, instead of giving it in my own language. They say:

"That the towers and buildings have not been constructed in general of the best materials, nor under the care and supervision of competent or faithful engineers.

"That the want of professional knowledge of the materials, mortars, cements, &c., &c., for the construction and repairs, or faithfulness on the part of those charged with the duty, was apparent in nearly all the modern towers and buildings visited by the Board.

"That the present large sums annually required for renewing, renovating, and repairing towers and buildings, are the consequence of the want of an efficient organization, which could afford the necessary professional ability for plans, drawings, and superintending of constructions and repairs.

"That the towers are deficient in the necessary proper accommodations for oil and other supplies; in the mode of fitting them up, and in the materials employed for the interior work; and the buildings ill adapted to the comfortable accommodation of the keepers.

"That the lanterns are, as a general rule, of improper dimensions, constructed of ill adapted, and, in the end, not economical materials, without professional or scientific skill; and, in many instances, not suited to the use for which they are designed.

"That there is no proper system of ventilation for lanterns.

"That the means said to be employed for ventilating, are wholly inadequate, and contrary to true scientific principles.

"That there is very little attention paid to the painting of the interior of the lanterns and astragals, and in glazing.

"That, under a well-organized system, the lights, and other aids to navigation, might be greatly increased in number and efficiency, at a large saving upon the present annual cost.

"That there has never been an efficient systematic plan of construction, illumination, inspection, and superintendence of lights, &c., &c., in the United States."

We know well how the superintending of these light-houses is carried on. The collectors of the customs have charge of them. They get some two and a half per cent. on the disbursements, amounting to about $400 per annum, and not exceeding that by law. These collectors are not selected with reference to their knowledge of this subject or their capacity to understand the system which is best in economy and efficiency. They may be efficient men as collectors, and inefficient as regards the duty of superintending the lights. Their inspection amounts to little or nothing in point of fact. I know that occasionally they go down the bay, or on the coast, on a fishing party, take a glance at the lights, ask a few questions of the keepers, and do no more. They suggest few or no improvements in the lights. You must, then, have proper persons—persons capable of instructing the light-keepers as to their duties, and seeing that they perform them satisfactorily—persons who in fact understand the whole system, from the construction of the building down to the scientific principles which regulate the construction of the burners. But this Light-House Board, in their report, state further, that the lights are not well distributed, or properly and sufficiently well distinguished along the coast.

I think in one place they are called a nuisance, because they interfere with each other, and confuse mariners who are not thoroughly acquainted with the coast—foreign navigators, or those of our own country who are not familiar with the locality. Indeed, under the reflecting system it is not possible to adopt the same method of distinguishing the lights as is applied so satisfactorily to the lens apparatus in France and elsewhere.

Again, the Light-House Board say:

"That many of the small lights have an unnecessary number of lamps and reflectors, while sea-coast lights are greatly deficient in them."

They say, further:

"That the buoys in the harbors of the United States are defective in size and shape, and deficient, as a general rule; and that sufficient care is not taken, nor competent persons employed, to place, moor, and replace them."

They say, in another place:

"That the light-vessels are, in general, not adapted to the service they are required to perform, being defective in size, model, and moorings."

They are not properly moored, and are, consequently, often carried away. We hardly ever hear of such a thing as a light-boat being carried away on the coast of England. Here they are carried away, and not replaced for some time, and, in the mean while, comes the mariner in the midst of a storm, and is lost for want of a proper and efficient organization of the system.

I will not detain the Senate by going over all the items to which this report alludes; but if the Senate had patience to listen, I could refer to the testimony of such men as Sir David Brewster, to show how infinitely the system we desire to establish is superior to the present one. So the report of the Senator from Massachusetts himself, to which I have alluded, and which is full of practical information on the subject, is the best answer to the proposition which he now makes, to let this subject go over until the next session. It is fourteen years since the subject was agitated, and we have scarcely advanced an inch.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is greatly mistaken.

Mr. PEARCE. I know that we have improved the reflectors, but we have scarcely made any advance towards the adoption of the more perfect lens system, and in other respects are behind the improvements of other countries. We have established three of these improved lights only. How many light-houses have we? Between two and three hundred.

Mr. DAVIS. Nearly three hundred.

Mr. PEARCE. Nearly three hundred, and we have appeared only three of the improved lights. Then in regard to the cost, I understand that a lens of the first class burns about five hundred and seventy gallons of oil in a year, and an equivalent light reflector burns perhaps between double and triple that amount. So the second order of lens burns three hundred and forty gallons, and an equivalent reflector burns a much greater quantity. Here is what Sir David Brewster says, in speaking of these lenses:

"If these twenty-four reflectors are arranged in groups of six, then the brightest light which at any one time reaches the eye is that of six reflectors, which is repeated four times in each revolution; whereas in the lens apparatus we have a light equal to nine reflectors repeated eight times during each revolution, besides the additional light of the eight smaller lenses, and that of the other pieces of apparatus. Hence it was demonstrable that the lens apparatus is not only £413, or eventually £513, cheaper than the reflector apparatus, but gives a more intense and penetrating light."

I think, therefore, it will be admitted, without reading further extracts to the Senate, that an improvement is desirable in our light-house system, and that this is not likely to be effected under its present administration, which is admitted on all hands to be defective. This bill is not likely to increase the expense greatly. It is not proposed to give any additional pay to the officers who serve on the board. It is not proposed to give any pay at all to the civilians. I believe it is known that civilians can be obtained to serve without charge. Then it must be considered that there are at present about forty inspectors of lights, and their pay, if they all receive the maximum, at $400 each, is $16,000 per annum. This sum will more than pay all the expenses of the board, because we have Army and Navy officers who will receive no increased pay for their duties on the board. I suppose, of course, the traveling expenses will be allowed, but if so, they will be at the rate which they get in the regular service. I hope, therefore, the proposition to strike out these sections will not be agreed to.

Mr. TOLUCEY. It is to be regretted that important measures cannot be brought before Congress until the close of the session, and that we are compelled, therefore, to embrace the occasion to adopt such reforms and improvements as the exigencies of the public service demand. I think there is but one opinion, that our present system is behind the age; that it needs reform; that it needs to be brought up to the standard of modern improvements and discoveries. I am entirely in favor of the plan of introducing a board composed of competent, skillful, and learned men upon this subject, and of revising the system, which has fallen so much behind the times. I am not disposed to go into the details of the system now. Although no Senate committee or committee of the House may have been ready to report upon the subject, yet the House has reported and has presented us a bill. That bill presents to us an important public measure—one which commends itself to my judgment and to my support. I therefore shall vote to retain these sections in the bill and concur with the House of Representatives, so that the system which they propose may be adopted; and at the next session, if any defects should be found in its details, or any errors in the form which it may assume, I shall be under an obligation, as a member of this body, to the Committee on Commerce if they will bring forward such amendments as may be necessary. In the mean time, however, I propose to take the measure as it is.

Mr. DAVIS. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Connecticut whether any such emergency has sprung up in the system under which we have lived for half a century as to make it necessary to adopt a complicated bill without considering the subject at all. That is the effect of this step. What fell from my learned friend from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] shows how complicated the subject is, how many grave considerations are involved in it, and how necessary it is to examine it before it can be understood. I think the Senator is mistaken in several particulars. He says that we ought to adopt the lenticular system more extensively than we do. He contends that it is economy to have the lenses, and he proves that by showing that the amount of oil consumed in the lenticular lamp is less than the amount consumed in the reflector. That is true; but then see how readily the reflector light accommodates itself to our system. When the Light-House Board made these comparisons, they assumed that the whole horizon is to be lighted. The lenticular lamp can light no less than the whole horizon. It cannot be diminished. The whole quantity of oil must be used, whatever the amount of light wanted is, while, on the other hand, as every reflector has its own lamp, every reflector you take from the light diminishes so much the expense. The board dwell upon a comparison which does not apply to the general system of lights, for this reason: In a very large portion of the lights upon the coast of the United States, it is necessary to light but one half of the horizon. Therefore these comparative expenditures do not come justly into the consideration of this business at all, unless you found it upon the actual state of things.

But the Senator says our system is deficient—that it is feeble and objectionable. I know what sort of sweeping declarations are put down in the book which he holds up as authority, and I must be permitted to say to the Senate that, after reading it with some attention and care, I cannot find one thing in the present system which that Light-House Board approves of; and yet the Senate well knows that we have had that system for a long time; that we have gone on comfortably under it; and that our commercial community and ship-owners are content with it; although, at the same time, I admit that it may be improved, but it will have to be improved at an expense. The idea of economy is preposterous, upon the supposition which is made by those who introduced these sections into the bill. We build a light-house, and we put reflectors in it for some $3,000 or $4,000. That is the common grant made to set up a light-house and light it. Now, you cannot purchase a set of lenses for less than about $6,000; and has it ever occurred to the Senate that there is not a manufactory of these lenses on earth, except those which are set up by the French Government? And are we to be dependent on the French Government for every light we burn? Is that a sound or just view of the subject? I admit the great importance of the lenses; I admit their great power; and I would heartily go with my friend, or any other gentleman, to establish lenses of the first order upon the great points which jut out into the sea, where vessels first make the land. Those great leading points ought to have the best lights, regardless of expense; but when you go into questions of expenditure, it must be admitted that it takes a much greater portion of labor to superintend and take care of the lenses than it does in the case of the common reflectors. I see that this very board censure the Fifth Auditor for having an unnecessary number of men superintending the lenticular lights at New York. Now, I happen to know personally, that the Frenchman who was sent over by the manufacturers to set up those lights, put in, to take charge of them, just the number of men he was directed to put there by those who constructed the lights. It is a notorious fact, that it takes a greater number of men to take charge of these lights than of the reflectors, and I could show you reasons for it if time permitted.

But, without entering into this subject, I think enough has been developed to show that this is a complicated system; that it should be provided for by law with great care, and should be introduced with caution and proper provisions in regard to economy; for you cannot change the lights of the United States into lenticular ones short of an expense of millions of dollars. You would have to alter every lantern. The reflector lanterns are not adapted for lenses. They are not high enough. They are not adapted to the introduction of the machinery necessary for the lenses. The Committee on Commerce, in my judgment, behaved very wisely when they proposed to postpone this system and go on under the system which has been in operation for years, until we can mature a plan and do it with prudence, precaution, and economy; for you will find any light-house system expensive enough. Let it take what form it may, it will soon increase to double its present expense. You have now near three hundred light-houses. Soon the number will increase to six hundred, and you will find the system burdensome enough at any rate of economy.

I will add one word more. One of the most sagacious men that I know of, and with whom I am acquainted—Mr. Stevenson—who has charge of what is called the Scott's light, has investigated this subject more thoroughly than any other individual living. I see that, in the last book published by him, he gives the preference to the reflector lights in certain positions. Where certain unvarying lights are necessary, as in narrow channels, he says the reflector light has the preference. It is true the lenses give greater light. They throw out more rays, but they are not as well adapted to some stations.

Then it follows that we should have at the head of the system an able and efficient man. One head is better than ten, and an able and efficient man who understands the subject from top to bottom will be able to go into it, and from his knowledge to regulate it according to economy, and according to the position in which the lights should be placed. He should be a man capable to discharge his duties, and he should have a suitable organization under him. But I must say, however respectable these boards are, I never have thought them worth anything. You had a Navy Board, but were obliged to give it up. You had a Census Board, but it did nothing. You had a Board connected with the Patent Office, but who ever heard of it doing anything? I never did. These boards only serve as a shelter to cover some other person who does the business allotted to them. Then I do not see any propriety in limiting such a board as is here proposed to the officers of the Army and Navy. You should take talent wherever you find it. But I do not think this is the time to discuss the subject. I think it had better be postponed until the next session.

Mr. PEARCE. I understand the Senator to say that the cost of a lens light is $6,000. I suppose that is the first class. But I see a statement in this report on the subject.

Mr. DAVIS. The least cost of those lights which have been brought here is $10,000.

Mr. PEARCE. I see in this report a comparison of the cost of the lights required to light the harbor of Baltimore:

"It may be useful to compare a few of the smaller lights; and as an example, the Lazaretto light, near Baltimore, may be taken. There are eleven lamps and spherical reflectors in this tower.

"Reported consumption last year 431 gallons of oil.
"Estimated consumption, according to European standard, 449 gallons.

"United States estimate, 385 gallons.
"This light is required to light a harbor and the entrance to it of small extent, a visibility not exceeding five to six miles.

"The first cost of the eleven lamps and reflectors, (which require to be renewed frequently,) frame, fitting, &c., independently of spare lamps, burners, &c., will be not less than.....$350 00

Annual expense for oil, 431 gallons, at $1 30 per gallon.....560 30
For chimneys, glasses, and wicks.....12 30

Extra burners, supposed not less than.....5 00

Annual cost.....577 60 independent of cleaning, powders, rags, &c., &c., not required for a lens light.

"The first cost of a sixth-order lens apparatus, which does not require to be renewed, with three lamps, (two being extra,) and pedestal, &c., complete, estimating five francs to a dollar, will be.....$252 00

Which is less than the first cost of the reflector light by.....98 00

The consumption of oil per annum, for the lens light, will be 48 gallons, costing.....62 40
For wicks and chimneys, say.....1 50

.....$63 90

Mr. DAVIS. This comparison does not give a just view of the subject. It may answer for that little light. The whole of it may be true; but it does not touch the whole subject at all.

Mr. PEARCE. I mentioned that to show that while the Senator desires to begin the improvement of lights on the sea-coast, it is desirable also, for the sake of economy, to apply them at points where great intensity of light is not so very important—as at the entrance of harbors.

Then as to the organization of the system. I find in the report made by the honorable Senator himself in 1838, some account of the French system. He says:

"The general supervision of light-houses, &c., devolves on the Minister of the Interior; but no new light can be established without the concurrent opinion of this Minister and the Minister of Marine.

Subordinate is a Commission des Phares; the members of which, except the Secretary, receive no compensation. It has hitherto consisted of certain civil engineers, employed in the administration of roads and bridges, naval officers, and astronomers, with the late distinguished M. Fresnel, as secretary and chief engineer. The design of such a combination is manifestly to bring to the public service the requisite qualifications to select the best sites, to construct the most suitable buildings, and to bring into use the most perfect and scientific apparatus."

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will not understand me as recommending that system.

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator introduced it into his report without condemning it, and the concluding sentence seemed to justify the inference of his approval.

The Senator, in his report, quoted Mr. Stevenson and Dr. Brewster, to show "that the lens apparatus is in every respect better and more economical than the reflector apparatus," and admitted the superiority of the French system. But, Mr. President, it does not follow if we establish this board that it is to go to work at once to dismantle all our present light-houses, and charge us with heavy expenditures for new structures and lens lights on all points of the coast where light-houses now stand. I take it that the board will be composed of competent men, who will proceed cautiously, judiciously, and much more systematically than the present administration of lights, from the nature of its organization, can do. I presume that they will have reference to the condition of the revenue, and be limited by the appropriations made by Congress for the purpose; that they will introduce improvements from time to time, and gradually correct the evils of the present system. But I will not detain the Senate further.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to say a word in reference to the propriety of postponing this subject until the next session of Congress. That proceeds upon the hypothesis, as my colleague has said, that the board which you are about to appoint is to set to work at once and do everything wrong. It cannot be maintained unless upon the hypothesis, that the board are not only to proceed to dismantle all the existing light-houses, but to proceed upon an entirely erroneous plan in organizing the new ones. If we adopt this plan now it is manifest to every one that we shall have the ability of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts at the next session of Congress, for the purpose of maturing, altering, and amending it, if it should be necessary. It is admitted that the present system is entirely wrong. Had we not better, then, make the commencement of a new one by appointing a scientific board for the purpose of examining the subject? If it be found, as it is found in almost every system, necessary to amend it, we shall have time to do so. The sections proposed to be stricken out of the bill were prepared by one of my colleagues in the other House, [Mr. EVANS,] a gentleman of scientific attainments, upon whose judgment, with as much confidence as I have in my friends from Massachusetts and Maine, I for one am willing to rely until experience shows that there is some fault in the system.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that the lights used in the French system are much more expensive; and they are unnecessary, except at some points going out into the sea. His argument, on that account, against the propriety of establishing the board, if it amounts to anything, must go further. He must suppose that that board will do what he says is unnecessary, and put these expensive lights where they are not important to be put. He asks, are we willing to adopt this French system of lighting when there is not a single manufactory of the lenses in this country? Now, I apprehend that if it be necessary to adopt that system, the effect of it will be to establish such a manufactory in our own country, and not to leave us dependent upon the French; for it is unknown in the history of any one thing that was manufactured by the ingenuity of man, where the Americans have not been able to compete with the rest of the world, when it became necessary. So far from being dependent upon France, if we adopt the system, we shall have manufactories of the article here in a few years, surpassing those which are in France. I can see no possible reason for the postponement of the subject, and I was sorry to hear my friend from Michigan [Mr. Cass] giving in to it, after he had asserted that the system under which we are now acting is wrong.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senate wants a little forecast of what these boards do, I will refer to the light-house expenses under the English system. I hold in my hand an official letter addressed to the British Government by our Minister at London in 1850 on this subject. He states that "the American mail steamers entering at Liverpool, pay for light dues the sum of £62 for each voyage." That is, every time when one of our mail steamers enters the port of Liverpool she pays $300 in light dues; and all our shipping pay in that proportion. In the last ten years the English Light-House Board, to support their system, have collected from our commerce upwards of $1,100,000. I hold the evidence of it in my hand. I do not propose to remedy that; I only state these facts to show that the system is enormously expensive; that it is vastly more expensive than ours, and yet gentlemen wish us to imitate France and England, instead of following the simple customs and usages which belong to our Government. They propose to complicate our system with these boards, after the fashion of the middle ages. I say that your experience with boards tells you that they are inefficient and unnecessary. You want an efficient and responsible head of the system, and nothing else, to carry on your business. We have no time now, I repeat, to organize this system properly. It cannot be done with a proper reference to economy. Where improvements are necessary, I am for them. I am from a commercial part of the country, and I want as good lights as any gentleman. There is not a portion of the country that has more ships and more tonnage afloat than my State of Massachusetts. I am, therefore, the last man to stand in the way of any improvements; but I wish to act deliberately upon this subject, and in a way that I can vindicate my conduct.

Mr. MALLORY. The State which I represent has some fifteen hundred miles of sea-coast, and a dangerous navigation. We have strongly felt, for twenty years, the want of a proper system of lighting our coast. It is one of the most important subjects that can come before Congress. Its importance has been somewhat exemplified by the extraordinary volume which has been published by the Board of Examiners—extraordinary in size, I mean. I have not had time to examine it since it has been submitted to Congress; but the very fact that the Board of Examiners have found it expedient, in order to show the importance of the subject, to publish a volume of that size, proves that we should not hastily adopt legislation of this kind without investigating what they have written. I have had some practical knowledge of light-houses. I have had the control and charge of them. I have procured their oil and appointed their keepers, and have made a practical examination of them for years, and therefore know something of the importance of the subject; and I am free to say, if the lens system is to be adopted generally in our light-houses, the expenditure will be increased in the next ten years to $3,000,000. I will give an example of the expense of this kind of lights. One of the best light-houses on the coast of America—the light-house at the Tortugas, on the coast of Florida—has been refitted with the first class twenty-one inch lens, with three glasses. Its light can be seen as far as the curvature of the earth will permit. It is pronounced to be one of the best lights in the world. That light cost about $10,000. A similar apparatus has been put up at the screw-pile light on Carysfort Reef. We have the report of a topographical officer upon that light, and he pronounced it to be one of the best lights in the country. It can be seen as far as the curvature of the earth will permit. I know from an actual inspection of the lights on that coast, that as they are now constructed, they are like great bon-fires upon the ocean as far as they can be seen.

Undoubtedly there are points where the Fresnel lamp is necessary, where we must not count the cost in establishing it. The Fresnel light itself cost, by contract, in France $10,000 without the structure on which it is placed. We have appropriated $100,000 for erecting it. We appropriated $60,000 a few days ago, and $40,000 have already been expended, making $100,000. But the cost of the light-houses where they are necessary should not enter into controversy. The money must be expended if they are essential.

I am free to admit that this matter of lighting the coast needs examination and systematizing. But, sir, I can tell you, whatever evidence may be in that book, that there must be other evidence on the subject now in the office of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury. There must be registers kept there of the opinions of the first ship-masters in the country, which are filed in the custom-houses, showing their opinion of our lights. I have examined some of them. It is a common thing to hear even American ship-masters classify our first-class lights with the first class lights of England and France. There is no comparison in regard to economy. Ours is the most economical system on earth. Not only is it more economical than that of France, but it is much more so than that of England. When a Fresnel light is established, it requires two keepers. They must be mechanics, who understand the machinery of the lights and its working; and you cannot get them for a small salary. They will not serve for $500 a year, because they can get more elsewhere. The first cost of the lighting of this system will be immense. I grant it is the best system in the end, but in the beginning it is very expensive.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? Since the introduction of the reflectors at Boston, reflectors have been exceedingly well made in this country—as well as in any other, and more economically.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; we have the best reflectors which are used, and they show you the light as far as the curvature of the earth will permit. There is no urgent necessity for adopting the system proposed by the House. There is no urgent necessity for the board; and it seems to me to be very strange, when such is the case, that we are called upon, without any examination of the report—without having an opportunity to examine it, hastily to adopt a board of this kind. We can make improvements without establishing such a board. We are in the habit of specially legislating for light-houses. We legislated specially for the light-houses on Minot Ridge and Carysfort Reef; we directed that they should be constructed by the Topographical Corps. We frequently take particular light-houses out of the general system. There is, consequently, no such urgency in the matter as to require the adoption of the board, when no committee has reported in favor of it; when no Senator has had an opportunity to examine the evidence, and when the chairman of the Committee on Commerce pledges himself, within the next three months, to systematize and bring forward a plan for the better regulation of light-houses.

Mr. WELLER. As a representative of one of the States deeply interested, as a matter of course, in the establishment of proper light-houses, I desire to say a few words. As I have no personal knowledge of this subject, I have been compelled to rely on the opinions of others. There was a board of competent officers detailed for the express purpose of examining the whole light-house system, with the view of agreeing upon what system ought to be adopted in order to make it effectual. That report was presented to Congress many months since. It was printed some two or three months ago. The Senator from Florida has not examined it. I should be disposed to rely upon his judgment, if it were not for the fact that competent officers, acquainted with the whole subject, have been appointed to examine it, and their report has been communicated to Congress. I do not see that in the proposed amendment the question is involved, what sort of lights shall be used upon our coast, whether the Fresnel light or the old light. The question is, whether, in order to make the light-house system what it should be—an effective one—it is necessary to establish a board to control the whole? In my judgment, it is necessary, and, therefore, although there may be defects in the bill, I am disposed to vote for the organization of that board. It will be subject to revision at the next session of Congress. I am unwilling that the subject should go over to the next session upon the assertion of Senators that they will bring in a perfect system. I have heard that same remark made with regard to other things which have been introduced into the Senate. I am anxious that the first step should be taken now to make the system an effective one. And in order to make it so, you must have some persons at its head who can give their personal attention to it, and who have sufficient ability to look into the whole. It is for that reason I desire that the board shall be established.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must say that, until a measure of so much importance, involving the expenditure of so much money, is recommended by a committee, I am unwilling to go for it. I care not for the opinion of any board whatever, nor for its action, for I am satisfied, from the best information which I have been able to obtain upon this subject, that the expenditure will not be less than $4,000,000, and it will be a continued and increased expenditure upon the nation. If the lights now are sufficient to operate as beacons to vessels, so far as the curvature of the earth does not interfere with them, I see no necessity for any improvement. I will never vote for a measure so universal, in which so many are interested, and which comes forward in such a manner as not to permit us to discuss it on this floor. If it were a minor matter, thrust upon us at this moment, without discussion or time for reflection, I might be willing, through courtesy, to permit it to pass; but I cannot support any legislation of this character, that involves millions, when we know what influences out of the House are pressed upon Senators to rush it through, under the present pressure and haste of circumstances.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to say to my friend from Texas, that no outside influence has controlled my vote.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senator was not in my mind when I made the remark.

Mr. WELLER. The only thing which governs me, is the report of the board of officers who have been selected to examine into the subject, because they were supposed to understand it; and I presume they do understand it better than I do. It is for that reason that I go with them.

Mr. CASS. Since I addressed the Senate before, I have conversed with a gentleman here—a member of the House, and he tells me that this project was devised with great care and with great caution. He likewise removed another difficulty in my mind. He states that the members of the board, whether those from civil life, or those from the Army and Navy, are not to receive one cent. That removes a great difficulty. If, therefore, the vote is taken now, I shall vote in favor of the system.

Mr. DE SAUSSURE. There are so few of us here, that the opinion of each Senator may be of some consequence; and, as I have paid some attention to the subject, it is proper, perhaps, that I should state the ground upon which I shall give my vote.
